Had Pleasant Evening.

A number of friends gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Nowland on Antrim street Monday night and spent a very pleasant evening. Games were played and refreshments served.

The Jumping Off Place.

"Consumption had me in its grasp, and I had almost reached the jumping off place when I was advised to try Dr. King's New Discovery; and I want to say right now, it saved my life. Improvement began with the first bottle, and after taking one dozen bottles I was a well and happy man again," says George Moore, of Grimesland, N. C. As a remedy for coughs and colds and for weak, sore lungs and for preventing pneumonia New Discovery is supreme. 50c and $1.00 at F. G. Hines & Co.'s druggists. Trial bottle free.

LEGAL NOTICES

Notice of Mortgage Sale.

Whereas, Mary L. Jolls, and Walter Jolls, husband and wife, of Melrose township, Charlevoix county, Michigan, made and executed a certain mortgage bearing date the 15th day of October, A. D. 1898, to Gerhard Fochtman, of Petoskey, Mich gan, which was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of the county of Charlevoix on the 17th day of October, A. D. 1898 at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, in liber 28 of mortgages on page 448;

And whereas, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage is the sum of Two Hundred and 04 100 dollars, and no suit or proceeding has been instituted at law to recover the debt now remaining secured thereby, or any part thereof;

And whereas, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by said mortgage, whereby the power of sale contained therein has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance thereof, and of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises, at public vendue, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the court house, at the Village of Charlevoix, in said county of Charlevoix, that being the place of holding the circuit court within said county, on the 30th day of April, A. D. 1908, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, the description of which said premises contained in said mortgage is as follows: the south-west quarter of the north west quarter of section twenty-nine, township thirty-three north, range five west, Melrose township Charlevoix County, Michigan

Dated, February 8th, 1908.

Neighborhood Notes

Farmers may be interested to know that the law regarding payment for sheep killed by dogs was changed at the last session of the legislature. Formerly the law was such that if the losses exceeded the amount in the dog fund those who had losses were obliged to take their pro-rata of the fund and call it square. Senator Keyes, of Eaton county, secured the passage of a bill which changed the law so that if the money in the dog fund is not sufficient to pay all claims in full the balances on these claims remaining unpaid shall stand as claim against the dog fund until they are paid in full.

Michigan still holds second place in the production of beet sugar in the United states. Statistics collected by the National Farmer show that 16 factories were operated in Michigan in 1907, producing 81,000 tons of sugar, falling short of the product of the preceding year, 22,000 pounds due to unfavorable climatic conditions early last year.

Ninety-four thousand acres were planted to beets last year, and farmers received $4,500,000 for beets. Colorado led the country with 422,732,580 pounds of sugar from 138,336 acres; California third with 164,000,000 pounds of sugar, and Utah produced 100,000, pounds.

Beet sugar production for 1907 in the United States was 410,000 long tons, compared with 433,010 long tons in 0906.

The Stearns Salt and Lumber Co. of Ludington, who were some months ago indicted for accepting rebates for shipments of lumber from Ludington to Toledo, pleaded guilty in Judge Knappen's court at Grand Rapids, and the matter was taken under advisement. The plea was a great surprise to all who have watched the proceedings. As entered, the plea admits guilt as charged on twenty-nine counts. The penalty provided by law under such circumstances is a fine of $1,000 to $20,000 on each count, making it possible for the court to impose a maximum fine of $400,000.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's catarrh cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment, Hall's catarrh cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer one hundred dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address:

KILLS MAN WHO CONVICTED HIM

Alleged Indiana Dynamiter Wounds Four Others in Terre Haute Circuit Court.

Terre Haute, Ind., April 3.—Henry F. McDonald, convicted dynamiter of two stores and a church, murdered the man whose testimony convicted him and shot four others in the circuit courtroom before he was shot down by the police officers present. The tragedy followed the reading of the verdict of the jury finding McDonald guilty of destroying three buildings at Sanford owned by men who exposed his "blind tiger" a year ago.

Hardly had the last words of the verdict been read, when McDonald sprang to his feet, revolver in hand, and opened fire. The first shot was aimed at Prosecuting Attorney James A. Cooper, Jr., who saw what was coming and tumbled out of his chair to the floor out of harm's way. At the next shot William E. Dwyer, chief of detectives, was killed. Before the police officers could get into action Harvey V. Jones, superintendent of police, was shot in the side, Deputy Sheriff Ira Wellman sustained a wound in the chin and Sylvester Doyle, court bailiff, was shot in the leg and a bystander struck in the leg.

McDonald was seriously wounded by the police. Surgeons, however, say he will recover.

BIG REAL ESTATE MAN IS BANKRUPT

Samuel E. Gross of Chicago Files Petition in United States Court in Detroit.

Chicago, April 3.—Samuel Eberly Gross, Chicago real estate promoter and playwright, filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy in the United States court at Detroit, scheduling liabilities of $585,762.17 and assets of $101,815.

For more than a year Mr. Gross, who attained international prominence because of his suit for plagiarism against Edmond Rostand of Paris, has not been in Chicago. For seven months he has lived at Battle Creek, Mich., because of ill health, and he gave his residence as Battle Creek in filing the bankruptcy petition.

The voluntary bankruptcy, according to friends of Mr. Gross, followed as a result of involuntary proceedings brought against him in 1904 by creditors. At that time a creditors' committee was appointed and Mr. Gross satisfied liabilities of $800,000. Since then, though he has had an office in Chicago, he has transacted little business.

Denies Dowie's Son Shot Thief.

Valet of Alfred G. Is the First Witness in Divorce Case.

HEARING IS HELD IN SECRET

From Indications the Case Will Be Pushed to an Early Conclusion.

None of the Family Present at the Proceedings—Alimony the Principal Issue—Custody of Child.

New York, April 3.—David McClure, the referee appointed to hear the case of Mrs. Alfred G. Vanderbilt, who has brought an action, believed to be for absolute divorce, has begun taking testimony. The first witness was Howard Kempster, who was the valet of Cornelius Vanderbilt and became valet for Alfred when the latter was made the head of the family upon his father's death.

MRS. ALFRED G. VANDERBILT.

Kempster testified at length, but as the hearing was conducted behind closed doors the nature of his testimony is a matter of conjecture.

Early Conclusion Expected.

It is said that Kempster had enjoyed a position with Mr. Vanderbilt considerably more confidential than that of the ordinary valet and the fact that he was left behind as a witness when his employer sailed for Europe is believed to indicate that the taking of testimony will proceed rapidly and that the hearings will reach an early conclusion. This is said to be in accordance with the wishes of all concerned, including the relatives of both Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt.

No member of the family has attended the hearing, but it is believed that Mrs. Vanderbilt will be called to testify to the date of her marriage. This is expected to be the extent of her testimony. The custody of the 6-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt is considered one of the questions the referee must decide.

Alimony Principal Issue.

The principal question at issue is said to be the amount of alimony to be paid by Mr. Vanderbilt. It is reported that he has consented to giving a lump sum of $1,500,000 and if this is accepted his defense will be passive, but that if it is rejected the action will be contested.

The ground upon which Mrs. Vanderbilt's suit is brought has not been made public. She might have begun action in Rhode Island, where she was living, upon one of several grounds. In New York it must be based on the statutory charge.

Child Labor Discussed.

Atlanta, Ga., April 3.—The first business session of the annual meeting of the national child labor committee was devoted to reports of state and local committees. This was followed by a discussion of "What Is a Good Child Labor Law?" A. B. Roberts of Pennsylvania, Everett W. Lord, secretary of the national child labor committee for New England, and Dr. A. J. McKelway, secretary for the southern states, were the principal speakers.

To Build Huge Montana Dam.

Helena, Mont., April 3.—L. H. Cerry, Jr., manager of the Helena Power Transmission company, has announced that material has been ordered for the construction of the second largest dam in the world. This will be known as the third dam on the Missouri river, thirty miles from Helena. It will irrigate thousands of acres of land in this section, and furnish power for plants in Helena, Butte, and Anaconda.

Big Steamboat Launched.

Oshkosh, Wis., April 3.—The steamer Leander Choate, built here for the Oshkosh Steamboat company, and named after a local capitalist and philanthropist, was launched here. It is the largest steamer on these waters, and will be used for passenger and freight traffic on the Wolf and Fox rivers.

Marlin

THE snow and rain, rushes and sand inseparable from duck and goose shooting never bother the hunter who is using a Marlin Model 19 12 gauge repeating shotgun, the best all-around gun in the market.

The ejection is from the side (an exclusive Marlin feature) and the closed breech bolt covers the action keeping out all foreign matter which so often clogs repeating shotguns.

The Marlin automatic safety prevents the accidental opening of the action when firing, and holds the breech shut until after each blow, in case of hang-fire; the solid top of frame is always a protection between your head and the cartridge.

The man who loves a gun needs the 1907 Marlin Book. It is full of gun information, has the answer to every gun question, contains 136 pages of live matter. 10 cts. for postage prepaid.

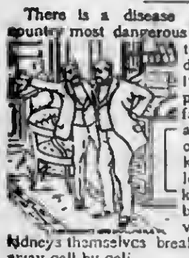
The Cause of Many Sudden Deaths



There is a disease prevailing in this country most dangerous because so deceptive. Many sudden deaths are caused by it—heart disease, pneumonia, heart failure or apoplexy are often the result of kidney disease. If kidney trouble is allowed to advance the kidney-poisoned blood will attack the vital organs or the kidneys themselves break down and waste away call by call.

Bladder troubles most always result from a derangement of the kidneys and a cure is obtained quickest by a proper treatment of the kidneys. If you are feeling badly you can make no mistake by taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and sold by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sized bottles. You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful new discovery and a book that tells all about it, both sent free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co. Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper.

INSTITUTE AT IRONTON

Was a Complete Success—Much Valuable Information.

How to Maintain the Productiveness of the Soil and Dairying Topics.

Tuesday, March 31, about fifty people gathered in the hall at Ironton to attend the sessions of the Farmer's Institute. The state board of agriculture was represented by H. B. Cannon, of Rochester, who addressed the morning session on "Maintaining the Productiveness of the Soil."

The speaker spoke in part as follows:

Plants require for their growth heat, moisture, air and plant food Plant food obtained from the soil is in solution It finds into the plant. The heat of the sun drives the complex machinery. The ground work that makes up the greatest bulk of the soil gives up slowly the necessary supplies of calcium, magnesium, iron and sulpher to the growing plants, the three elements nitrogen, phosphorus and potassium are required by plants in considerable amounts. Soils are frequently met with that are more or less deficient in one or more of these elements. The other essential elements, carbon, hydrogen and oxygen are contained in air and water. They constitute more than 90 per cent of most agricultural plants and being contained in air and water we need not worry about the supply.

Though nitrogen constitutes four fifths of the air, it is not taken directly from the air by growing plants. They obtain their nitrogen in the form of salts of nitrogen, known as nitrates. These are readily soluble in water. The plant uses nitrates in building up those complex bodies known as proteids an example of which is the gluten of the wheat berry. This function of plants is of the utmost importance, making possible the high development of the animal creation, since the higher animals have no power to build up complex substances, but are nourished by the reverse process. They obtain their energy and keep their bodies in repair by breaking down more or less completely the complex substances that the plants created. The animal digests the gluten and eliminate the nitrogen as urea. They consume starch and throw off carbonic acid gas from their lungs. The animal tears down, burns up. The plant stores energy, bottles the sunshine.

One by acting in motion a suitable train of events may expect to handle his land and find it increasingly productive. The round of nature is after this order: The plant feeds the animal, the animal feeds the soil. One cannot maintain a favorable condition of soil without keeping this round intact. Those who are minded nearly to grow crops to sell are in effect winners. They speedily exhaust the readily obtained plant food by their cropping and can make money continuously only by occasionally moving to unexhausted soil. Ours is a nation of soil robbers. For years we have been cropping. We must now turn about and rebuild the soils. How may this be done?

One may restore a depleted soil by following a rational agriculture. This always involves the keeping of animals. The animals will consume most of the coarse products of the farm, a portion of the grain and return in their voidings a good share of the plant food taken from the soil by the growing crop. Now if the farmer will push the business, he will buy some concentrated food materials that are themselves rich in plant food, such as cotton seed meal. The animals pay for the feed and the soil gets the benefit. Further the farmer takes advantage of the power of leguminous plants like the clover to draw upon the nitrogen stored in the air and so accumulate nitrogen in the soil at little expense. He will find it to his advantage also to use upon the manures, small amounts of fine ground bone or Tennessee rock phosphate, which the slowly decaying manures render available to the growing plants. The stubble mowed down by the plow gradually decays in the soil becoming humus ere it is entirely burned out. This partially oxidized material is wonderfully retentive of moisture. Soils suitably charged with humus are drought resistant. They plow readily, are easily put in condition for seeding, the air penetrates them with ease. Plants thrive in such soils. A correct rotation of crops favors the maintainance in the soil of sufficient humus. The humus is of great aid in keeping our soils in good mechanical condition.

In the afternoon the topic of dairying and sugar beet growing was taken up.

Mr. Cannon made a few points on this topic. The discussion following was entered into by Mr. Paddock, Mr. Shapton and others.

The dairy cow is a special purpose animal, having it in her disposition to turn into milk the excess of her food, not needed to keep her body in repair. A good dairy cow fed and cared for by a considerate owner will give her weight in milk each month after freshening. She will turn a dollar's worth of food into three dollars' worth of products. She can do her part in making a community prosperous.

The good dairyman provides ample feed for his cows. When pastures slackens he sees that a soiling crop or silage is at hand to supplement the pastures. He feeds some grain all the time for it is easily digested. He provides a clean light comfortable and properly ventilated place for his cows to live in cold weather. He houses them in stormy days in fall and spring. He provides plenty of pure water for them. He salts them. He accustoms them to gentle and regular attention. Milking is done at milking time in a painstaking way. One serves notice on a cow that she gives too much where he fails to draw all the milk.

Then the cow is fed to the limit of her digestive capacity with appetizing food. Clover hay is at hand, carefully cured, early cut. Silage made from matured corn is very satisfactory as a part of the ration. Three pecks of sliced roots daily is strongly urged for the winter feeding. Though the roots contain but a small percentage of nutrients those furnished are all digestible. Every pound of dry matter is as valuable as a pound of grain, and the animals appreciate the succulence.

Those so fortunately situated as to be able to grow sugar beets and obtain the pulp in return are able to make money going and coming. The beet pulp is excellent winter food for well housed cattle. They do well on it as a part of the ration. They may be fed up to about one hundred pounds a day. This should be fed after milking and the cotton seed meal may be fed upon it. Perhaps four pounds of this concentrate will be enough for the day's grain supply. As much as the animal will clean up is indicated. Under such conditions of feed the cows must be warmly housed. Men who have little shelter for cattle should not attempt dairying. Let them grow beef. The fat of the steer protects him from the cold. The dairy cow requires a comfortable stable as she endeavors to put her excess fat in the milk pail.

Mr. Shapton told the audience how the Ontario farmers are making money from root growing and dairying. Men grow sugar beets there on land worth a hundred dollars an acre and grow them extensively.

Mr. Marling explained that the Charlevoix Sugar Co. is anxious that the growers make money and that arraogements have been made whereby some fertilizer is to be handled for the growers. This material is a high class phosphorous bearing fertilizer. It is expected that the use of this fertilizer will help the beets aid at the critical period of their growth—the thinning process, disturbs the little beets—when small beets needs encouragement; when they catch their second wind they can take care of themselves.

Neighborhood Favorits.

Mrs. E. D. Charles, of Harbor, Maine, speaking of Electric Bitters, says: "It is a neighborhood favorite here with us." It deserves to be a favorite everywhere. It gives quick relief to dyspepsia, liver complaint, kidney derangement, malnutrition, nervousness, weakness and general debility. Its action on the blood, as a thorough purifier, makes it especially useful as a spring medicine. This grand alterative tonic is sold under guarantee at F. G. Hines & Co.'s drug store, 50c.

Deer Lake Grange No. 1269.

Deer Lake grange, No. 1269 met in regular session April 4, and opened in regular form in fourth degree.

Minutes of regular and special meetings were read and approved.

At the special meeting held March 35, Deer Lake grange decided to build a hall 26 feet wide and 60 feet long with a 12 foot ceiling, same to be constructed as soon as possible.

Wilbur McGeorge, Rena McGeorge, Wesley Sudman, Carl Sudman, John D. Baker, Grace Hunt, Edward Colley, Delbert Anderson and Miss Freda Methestreadt were obligated in the third and fourth degrees.

A good program was enjoyed followed by a supper. Six visitors were present from Wilson grange and ten from Boyne Valley. Receipts $8.70. Next meeting in two weeks.

Ironton Grange No. 707.

Ironton Grange No. 707 met in regular session March 31 with a good attendance. One visitor was present from Rock Elm and one from South Arm. After the grange was opened the meeting was turned over to the lecturer.

Lecturer's hour was taken up with roll call and the first program of the contest.

The grange decided to have refreshments at the next meeting April 14, when the South Arm degree team is expected over to assist in the initiation of three candidates.

Marion Center Grange No. 956.

Marion Center Grange No. 956 met in open session April 1. Officers nearly all present. Worthy Master Ward introduced H. B. Cannon, of Rochester, Michigan, who gave us an able talk on dairying.

E. S. Stacks gave a talk about cows and sugar beets. S. A. Marting on fertilizers and sugar beets. F. H. Hubbard talked on sugar beets.

Several questions were asked by farmers present and all were satisfactorily answered. Everybody present was pleased with the meeting and seemed to be interested.

The meeting closed about 11:00 o'clock. Next meeting in two weeks.

The Best Laxative for Children.

Parents should see to it that their children have one natural, easy movement of the bowels each day. Do not dose the child with salts or griping pills, as they are too powerful in effect, and literally tear their little insides to pieces, leaving the bowels weakened and less able to act naturally than before. Laxative Iron-ox Tablets tone and strengthen the bowels, and stimulate all the little organs to healthy activity. Chocolate coated tablets, easy to take, never gripe or nauseate. 10c, 25c and $1.00.

Recipe Easily Prepared and Many Swear By It.

Many of Our Citizens Speak Well of the Home Prescription Which Helped Them to Health.

Mix the following by shaking well in a bottle, and take in teaspoonful doses after meals and at bedtime.

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. A local druggist is the authority that these simple harmless ingredients can be obtained at nominal cost from our home druggists.

The mixture is said to cleanse and strengthen the clogged and inactive Kidneys, overcoming Backache, Bladder weakness and Urinary trouble of all kinds, if taken before the stage of Bright's disease.

Those who have tried this say it postively overcomes pain in the back, clears the urine of sediment and regulates urination, especially at night, curing even the worst forms of bladder weakness.

Every man or woman here who feels that the kidneys are not strong or acting in a healthy manner should mix this prescription at home and give it a trial, as it is said to do wonders for many persons.

The Scranton (Pa.) Times was first to print this remarkable prescription, in October, of 1906, since when all the leading newspapers of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburg and other cities have made many announcements of it to their readers.

Orchards' Counsel Seeks His Pardon

Boise, Ida., April 4.—Disregarding the refusal of Harry Orchard to file a petition for a pardon, Frank T. Wyman, his counsel, acting at the direction of Judge Fremont Wood of the trial court, has filed application with the state board of pardons. Four weeks must intervene before the application can be considered, and as the matter cannot be taken up except at a regular meeting of the board a respite will be required extending the date for the execution from May 15 until some time in July.

Evelyn Thaw Sues Hotel Manager.

New York, April 4.—Evelyn Thaw has brought suit for $50,000 damages against James E. Regan, proprietor of the Hotel Knickerbocker, for having caused to be published in newspapers an alleged libel in connection with her visit to the grillroom of that hostelry in company with E. R. Thomas, the banker and horseman. In her complaint Mrs. Thaw alleges that she and Mr. Thomas left the Knickerbocker of their own accord, and that Manager Regan did not even suggest that they depart

ELMER INGALLS IS PRESIDENT

Of the Newly Formed Charlevoix County Dairymen's Association.

TWENTY-TWO NAMES ON CHARTER LIST

Helmer Rabild Chief Speaker at Meeting Held Friday.

R. W. Paddock Secretary—A Move Which Means Much for the Development of Charlevoix County.

The meeting held at the court house last Friday for the purpose of organizing a county dairymen's association was well attended.

Colon C. Lillie, deputy state dairy and food commissioner, was unable to attend but his place was ably filled by Helmer Rabild of Alma, one of the inspectors of the department, a gentleman who has done much to advance the dairy interests of the state.

The meeting was called to order by E. W. Coulter, and Elmer Ingalls was chosen as chairman. Mr. Rabild addressed the meeting on dairy organizations, speaking for the desire of all industries to organize for improvement and protection, in this, the age of organization. He told of the legislation which had been accomplished by the dairy organizations of this country. Perhaps the greatest value of an organization of dairymen lies in its educational value, as in all other things the meeting together of people who are bound together by common ties of interests and talking them over enables each to go home with a better knowledge of how to conduct their business in a more profitable manner.

Speaking of his native country, Denmark, Mr. Rabild said that they had over 4,000 local dairy organizations. The yield per cow had increased from 107 pounds to 225.

In Wisconsin the value of organization in increasing the value of dairy products and the value of the community was strikingly brought out.

I. Z. Merriam, whose former home was in the heart of the dairy section of Wisconsin, presented figures from the different banks showing the vast amount of money which they paid out for the products of the cow, and while this money was going into the hands of the farmers land values were steadily increasing.

It was decided to form a county association under the name of "The Charlevoix County Dairymen's Association." A constitution was adopted which provides that any one interested in dairying may become a member by the payment of fifty cents a year dues.

Officers were elected as follows: President, Elmer Ingalls; vice-president, Emmet Coulter; secretary and treasurer, Hon. R. W. Paddock; executive committee, the above officers and George W. Simms, George Meggison, Nat Burns and Jerry Barry.

After a few remarks by S. A. Marling showing how closely connected together were the sugar and dairy interests, twenty-two members signed the membership roll. A committee on by-laws, consisting of E. W. Coulter, Albert Beattie and Nat Burns, was appointed who will report at the next meeting, when called by President Ingalls.

This is a move which means much for the future development of our county, which is peculiarly adopted to dairy farming. Statistics all go to prove that wherever dairying is one of the chief industries that prosperity is always present and values are always on the increase. The fostering of this association means better farmers and a better county all around. As everybody is interested in the development of Charlevoix county let all become members of the Charlevoix County Dairymen's Association.

HIS SEVENTY-FIRST BIRTHDAY

Chairman Bailey of the Board of Supervisors Reminded of It.

Thursday Geo. W. Bailey reached the seventy-first milestone in life's journey, and a few of his many friends took advantage of the occasion to visit him at his home and left a leather bottom chair to remind him of the occasion. Refreshments and good will helped to pass away a pleasant evening with the veteran supervisor and old G. A. R. comrade. George admits he is getting on the shady side of life, but his many friends hope for him many active years yet to come.—Boyne Citizen.

CARRIE S. BLANCHARD DEAD.

Charlevoix County Girl Died in Chicago Friday, April 10.

Carrie S. Blanchard died at her home 5210 South Halstead street, Chicago, of acute rheumatism of the heart April 10, 1908, at 2:00 a. m. at the age of 14 years and 11 days.

The Man of the Hour.

Always on the lookout to give its readers the best there is to be had, the COURIER, in next week's issue will begin the publication of the Man of the Hour, a story written from Broadhurst's great play, which made the hit of the season. The Man of the Hour is a powerful exposure of the political graft and knavery of the boss, as practiced in our great cities, and the triumph of the man who stands for civic righteousness under the most trying circumstances. Don't miss an issue of this great story.

MACCABEE CONVENTIONS

Knights Gather at East Jordan—Ladies at Charlevoix Tuesday.

Andrew Ross and Mrs. R. W. Elston Chosen as Delegates to the National Meeting.

Tuesday was Maccabee day in Charlevoix county, the two branches of the order holding their county conventions.

The convention of the L. O. T. M. M. held in Charlevoix was called to order in the forenoon by Lady Deputy Great Commander Etta Tillotson, commander of White Rose Hive, delegates being present from Boyne City, Bay Shore, Ironton, Boyne Falls and East Jordan, besides visitors from Flint and Kingsley, and the following temporary officers were chosen:

Commander—Lady Baker, Boyne City.
Record Keeper—Lady Keine, East Jordan.
Chaplain—Lady Miles, Boyne City.
Mistress of Arms—Lady Jones, Bay Shore.
Sergeant Lady McMulkin, Ironton.
Picket Lady Aenis, Boyne Falls.

In the afternoon the following changes in officers were made for permanent officers for two years:

Lieut. Commander—Lady Elston, Charlevoix.
Finance Keeper Lady Aenis, Boyne Falls.
Sergeant Lady Jones, Bay Shore.
Chaplain Lady McMulkin, Ironton.
Mistress at Arms Lady Miles, Boyne City.
Sentinel and Picket Lady Young, Charlevoix.

Lady Elston, of Charlevoix and Lady Miles, of Boyne City, were elected delegates to the great hive which meets in Toledo in June. After the regular order of business a program and supper was served by White Rose Hive. Next meeting will be held at Boyne City.

K. O. T. M. M.

This convention was held at East Jordan, delegates being present from the eleven tents of the county.

Andrew Ross, Charlevoix, W. J. Gallagher, St. James, and M. S. Mires, of Boyne City, were elected delegates to the great camp, which meets in Toledo in June.

F. L. Pierce, of Boyne Falls, was elected county commander, and John Lagh, of East Jordan, county record keeper for the next two years. Next meeting will be held at Boyne City.

Young People's Pedro Club.

The last meeting of the Young People's Pedro Club was held at the home of Miss Marion Harris last Monday night. Miss Mary Jones and Meyer Levinson won first prizes, while Miss Antoinette Chaloupka and Will Finucan received consolation prizes. Dainty refreshments were served and the evening was spent in a very enjoyable manner.

Will Produce a Comedy.

The Royal Neighbors, under the direction of Agnes M. Jarvis, are now working upon a play to be produced in the near future. It is in the comedy line, and a rare treat is promised to all.

DEPUTY GREAT COMMANDER

Lady Ella Tillotson Began L. O. T. M. M. Work Today—Was Surprised Saturday.

Lady Ella Tillotson, commander of White Rose Hive, No. 413, L. O. T. M. M., left today for Alanson, to commence her work as great deputy commander.

While the local hive deeply regrets the departure of one who has served them so well during the past few years, she takes up her work with their best wishes.

On Saturday, a few of her many friends took it upon themselves to walk into her house in her absence, and make themselves at home. On her return she was somewhat surprised at the situation, but decided to make the best of it.

All present report a jolly good time, and hope "Tilly" will be successful in her new work.

HYATT—PROVOST

Charlevoix County Lady and Newaygo Gentleman Married Friday.

Married Friday evening at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Cleo LaPeer, by Rev. R. A. Wright, Thomas Hyatt, of Newaygo county, and Rachel Provost, of East Jordan. They were accompanied by Jack Fitzgibbons and Margaret Provost.

The young couple left Tuesday for their home in the south. Their many friends wish them much happiness.

FIRE AT BAY SHORE

Neighboring Town Has Bad Blaze Wednesday Morning.

Loss Over $15,000 Insurance $11,000—Origin of Fire Unknown.

Shortly after twelve o'clock this (Wednesday) morning fire from an unknown cause, broke out in the large store building owned by the Bay Shore Mercantile Co. at Bay Shore, the store being run by A. C. Stauffer.

A short time after the fire started, it exploded a quanity of dynamite percussion caps, which exploded with terrible force, causing the fire to spread so rapidly that it was impossible to save any portion of the building or contents. The flames leaped across the street, setting fire to a small mill and feed store which was also totally consumed.

The Maccabees, Odd Fellows and Woodmen who occupied the hall over the store lost everything they had.

The loss on store building and contents is from twelve to fifteen thousand dollars, on mill and feed store about fifteen hundred. Total insurance eleven hundred dollars.

A Beautiful Window Display.

Johnston, the plumber, is running a rival attraction to the bridge and the Electric Theater in that end of town this spring. His display windows causing everybody to stop, look and admire.

One window is arranged as a bath room, while the other presents a display of lamps and a beautiful array of plumber's supplies.

LECTURES BY DR VINCENT.

Will be Given Friday and Saturday at Bridge Electric Theater.

Dr George E. Vincent, who is to deliver the last number on the lecture course has been secured to give two addresses before a patrons' and teachers' meeting to be held at the Bridge Electric Theater Friday afternoon, April 17, and Saturday morning, April 18. In order that everybody may have an opportunity to hear this most popular educator and Chautauqua lecturer, the patrons of the citizens' lecture course will be given admission to both sessions for the regular association fee of 25 cents. To those who have not season lecture tickets, the price for the two sessions will be the same, providing they purchase single admission tickets for the Friday night lecture, making the price of the three addresses 75 cents. This is less than the price usually charged for one of Dr. Vincent's lectures. Everybody in Charlevoix who desires to hear a most entertaining and forceful speaker and one who is acknowledged to be the foremost child psychologist and sorialologist in the United States today should not fail to hear these lectures.

MET WITH BAD ACCIDENT

City Treasurer-Elect Cook Had Bad Fall Last Thursday.

Last Thursday forenoon while John Cook, our new city treasurer, was doing chores at the barn, he fell through a hole in the loft to the floor below, giving his left shoulder a bad wrench and straining the ligaments. While it is a very painful sprain Mr. Cook is able to be out again this week, although it probably will bother him for quite awhile.

NEW MAYOR IN CHAIR

At Meeting of Council Monday Night—Meeting Night Changed.

Little Business Was Transacted, But Much Work Was Laid Out for Next Meeting.

The council at their meeting Monday night was presided over by the new mayor, all the members being present. Alderman Ward, of the street committee, reported the sale of the old coal trestle for $110, it going to Benton Harbor.

The nights of meeting were changed from Monday to Thursday nights.

The proposition made by E. S. Stacks relative to the leasing of the city stone quarry was rejected.

While this was all the business transacted much work was laid out for the next meeting.

Alderman Fowler and the chief of police were instructed to continue their work of examination of public buildings and report at next meeting.

The committee on fire and prevention were instructed to bring in the report as to the needs of the firemen next meeting.

The bonds of John Cook, city treasurer elect, were presented and referred to committee on finance.

The committee on buildings were instructed to ascertain what supplies were needed in the treasurer's office.

Cream Separator Users Warned.

According to newspaper reports Sears, Roebuck & Co. have been enjoined by the United States court of New York from advertising to sell or selling the Economy or Improved Economy Cream Separators, it claiming to be an infringement on the patents held by the Empire Co. and the Vermont Farm Machinery Co.

As this injunction covers all users of the Economy separators making them liable for damages, all who have purchased separators of Sears, Roebuck & Co. should investigate the matter.

Fagan's Theater Re-Opened.

Fagan's Electric Theater was re-opened Saturday night. Many improvements have been made and an inclined floor placed in the auditorium, and ample provision made for escape in case of fire. A change of program will be put on each night during the season.

FISHERMEN ARE RESCUED

Tug Maeta Relieved After a Twelve-Hour Struggle With Ice.

BY CARTERRY MANISTIQUE NO. 1

Captain Geneit and Engineer Collins Still on Board—Provisions Short.

Prompt Action Taken by Mayor Rose and Captain Robertson Highly Commended.

In last week's COURIER we told of the fishing tug Little Maeta, being imprisoned in the ice and the assistance which had been rendered her up to that time.

From the time we went to press until Saturday, only occasionally was a sight of her got from this port, when she was seen to be drifting helpless in the ice.

Saturday, Mayor Rose realizing the desperate condition in which the Maeta was placed, and the necessity of prompt action being taken if the tug and men on board, Capt. John Geneit, John Geneit, Jr., Engineer Collins, Charles Anderson and Clinton Castel, all of this city, were to be rescued, and the impossibility of assistance being given from this place, got into communication with Captain Robertson, of Carterry Manistique No. 1 asking him to go to her assistance. Captain Robertson replied that he would make every effort to rescue the men, the only charge he would make being for the coal consumed and set out immediately for the work of rescue. About 2:00 o'clock in the afternoon he sighted the Maeta in an ice pack over two miles in extent and in some places over ten feet high.

After several hours' struggle with the ice, Captain Robertson succeeded in the work of rescue fetching the tug into Northport at 2:00 o'clock Sunday morning. When found Captain Geneit and Engineer Collins were still on board, the other members of the crew having made their way to shore Saturday morning. During the time they had been imprisoned in the ice they had been drifting between Cathead light and Skillagee point, it is estimated they covered a distance of over one hundred miles.

While they had not suffered any from hunger, as yet, on Saturday they were so reduced in supplies that all that was left was one-half ton of coal and one potato each.

The prompt action taken by Mayor Rose is highly commended by all our citizens as the work of rescue could not have been delayed longer, and much credit should also be given to Captain Robertson for his quick response to the call for help.

We understand that the cost will be borne by the local tugmen and fishermen with the assistance of the citizens of Charlevoix generally.

Pleasant Evening Spent

Monday evening a number of friends gathered at the home of Mrs. Winthrop Vanderhook, on west Mason street. The evening was a very enjoyable one, being spent in the playing of games, etc. Refreshments were served and all left for home hoping they might enjoy many such evenings.

TEACHERS' INSTITUTE APRIL 17-18.

To teachers and patrons of Charlevoix county schools:

A teacher's institute will be held in Charlevoix on Friday afternoon and evening and Saturday morning, April 17 18, 1908.

This will be a regularly appointed institute under the direction of the state and we are anxious that every teacher in the county shall attend. We also wish that we could get a large number of the patrons to attend, and in a measure become acquainted with some of the many problems that the teacher has to solve. The teacher needs, and to be successful, must have the co-operation of the parent. The disposition on the part of many patrons to allow the school to shift for itself has brought about, in many instances, the same result that similar methods will bring in any other line of work.

The program for this meeting will be full of good things. Dr. George Vincent, of Chicago, will give an address at each of the meetings and this feature alone will be worth the effort that it will cost any patron or teacher in the county to attend. Dr. Vincent is one of the ablest school men and one of the most pleasing speakers among our educators.

No person who is interested in our schools can afford to miss hearing Dr. Vincent's addresses in this meeting.

You are doubtless intending to be in Charlevoix sometime this spring. See if you cannot arrange to make that trip on April 17-18 and meet with the teachers. It will do us all good to get better acquainted with each other.

We have had some meetings similar to this which were very interesting but the discouraging feature of such work has been the lack of interest shown by the patrons and it seems to the teachers that they are the ones most vitally interested.

Break away from your work for a day and let us have the largest and most interesting meeting of this kind that the county has known.

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

Unexpected Result.

The saloonkeepers of Joliet, Ill., sought to intimidate the temperance voters by displaying in their places of business large posters bearing the names of those who signed the petition for a local option election in April. Merchants whose names were up in the petition were visited by men connected with the brewing and saloon interests and told that because of their signing the petition, they would lose the trade of the saloon and brewing people and their friends.

On Sunday March 15, the situation was discussed in every church in the city and the congregations, twenty-three in number, voted unanimously to throw the entire voting force of the church body into the fight against the saloons. Catholic and Protestant, Jew and Gentile, foreign and American born, have united with remarkable unanimity in the movement for civic righteousness. The churches, the Salvation Army and the several reform societies will perfect a central organization for the direction of systematic campaign work.

The power of the saloon as a director of public policy is decidedly on the wane.

The "Corn" is on the Brewer.

In 1906 four Illinois counties, Champaign, Livingston, McLean and Lee, produced more corn than was used in the manufacture of liquor in the entire United States, including that used in the manufacture of alcohol for industrial purposes.

The farmers of Illinois in 1907 planted 336,056 acres of corn less than in 1906, or one-third of the acreage necessary to produce all the corn used in the United States in the manufacture of liquor; and the price of corn was not in the least affected. Probably not one farmer in fifty knew of the reduction in acreage.

These facts (from report of Illinois state board of agriculture), from one state only, indicate that the farmer has no need to be frightened by brewers' circulars alleging that his corn market is threatened by prohibition—Union Signal, March 26.

Big Meeting—Great Enthusiasm.

A masterly address was given last Sunday evening by Mrs. E. L. Calkins, of Kalamazoo, state president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The Methodist church was packed with a representative audience, the interest growing more and more intense to the very last.

The topic, "Living Issues," was strong and clear on every point, and surely no one could go out from that presence without feeling more determined to meet present national conditions with firmness and courage. Mrs. Calkins spoke at the Congregational church in the morning service, giving inspiration and instruction to the large and attentive audience.

Mrs. Calkins is giving two weeks time now to the different unions in the district. Mrs. P. J. Howard district president is attending her on the route and assisting in the meetings. Mrs. Howard gave a scripture reading at the evening meeting in a very impressive manner. She also spoke at the young people's meeting at the Baptist church.

These workers came here from the Antrim county meeting held at Elk Rapids last week, and go from here to East Jordan to attend the Charlevoix county meeting, then on to other places.

The work on the district is encouraging, temperance is "in the air" everywhere, and the cry is, "the saloon must go.

The local W. C. T. U. is taking on new life, and are encouraged by having a large number of new members, who are putting on the white ribbon and taking part in the work. They have a membership contest on now, the winning side to be treated to a banquet by the losing side.

They also have an oratorical contest under way by six high school students, to be given April 22d. This will be very attractive and all should hear it, not only for their own pleasure, but to show their appreciation of this effort.

The meeting Saturday afternoon was well attended, the time being mostly given to the state and district presidents. The following delegates hope to attend the county meeting: Mesdames Jennie Allcox, Wilkinson, Blair and Burdick.

Mrs. Wilkinson entertained Mrs. Calkins and Mrs. Allcox entertained Mrs. Howard over Sunday.

Marlin

THE snow and rain, rushes and sand inseparable from duck and goose shooting never bother the hunter who is using a Marlin Model 19 12 gauge repeating shotgun, the best all-around gun in the market.

The ejection is from the side (an exclusive Marlin feature) and the closed breech bolt covers the action keeping out all foreign matter which so often clogs repeating shotguns.

The Marlin automatic safety prevents the accidental firing of the action when firing, and holds the breech shut until after explosion in case of hang-fire; the solid back of frame is always a protection between your head and the cartridge.

The man who buys a gun needs the 1908 Marlin Book. It is full of gun information, for 10 cents in stamps (Canada 15 cents).

PLAN FOR A TEST OF LOCAL OPTION

Saloon Interests Await Result of Three Village Elections.

PREPARE TO GO INTO COURT

Michigan Saloon Keeper Whom the Local Option Law Does Not Worry.

Is in Village Situated in Four Counties, So He Switches from the "Dry" to the "Wet" County to Do Business.

Chicago, April 10.—The villages of Lyons, Willow Springs and Summit will be among the two scores of places to vote on the saloon issue April 21 and the election in these three municipalities is likely to result in a test later before the courts regarding the legality of the local option law.

All three villages last Tuesday went for the saloons by overwhelming majorities, Summit by 116 to 39 Willow Springs by 128 to 25 and Lyons by 304 to 32, but the township of Lyons, in which the three villages are located, declared against saloons by a margin of 164. It is the belief of the saloon interests that the villages of Lyons, Summit and Willow Springs will repeat on April 21 their declaration of April 7 upon the saloon issue.

Plans to Go Into the Courts.

In case they do the liquor interests plan to go into the courts at once and test the local option law upon the plea that cities, villages and precincts have the right to a separate vote on local option within their own boundaries, independently of how the townships in which they are located may go.

The village of Barrington in Cook country will vote on saloons April 21. The biggest place to take a ballot on the liquor question week after next will be Cairo, in the extreme southwest corner of the state. Other villages and cities to vote on that day concerning saloons are Naperville, Nashville, Meredosia, Harding, Postone, Pinckneyville, Wetang, Willisville, Wilmington and Winchester.

MOVES TO "WET" GROUNDS

Michigan Saloonist in Village Which Is Located in Four Counties.

Traverse City, Mich., April 10.—This week's local option elections have produced an interesting situation in the village of Wexford, which is located at a point where four counties adjoin. Benzie and Manistee counties did not vote on local option, but Grand Traverse and Wexford counties did, the latter going "dry" and Grand Traverse "wet." Willis Sanford, Wexford village saloon keeper, will have to move his place of business only a few rods to leave the county of Wexford and locate in Grand Traverse. And if Grand Traverse county had also gone "dry" Sanford could have moved into either Manistee or Benzie counties without leaving the village.

There is only one other saloon in the village and its proprietor, Albert Knipp, has no need of moving, as his property is in the Grand Traverse county portion of the village.

Construes Georgia Liquor Law.

Atlanta, Ga., April 10.—Judge Hill, in an opinion, holds that the keeping of beer, whisky, wines or any other intoxicant for use in the manufacture of drink, the sale of which in not illegal, in a place which is not open to the public, is not a violation of the law. The sale of soft drinks, which although containing alcohol, will not if drunk to excess produce intoxication, is not violative of the statute. It is not a violation of the law to sell liquor for medical or culinary preparations, which are not manufactured for use as intoxicating beverages, although it can be shown that they contain alcohol.

Governor Johnson for State's Rights.

Shiloh Battlefield, Tenn., April 10.—John A. Johnson, governor of Minnesota and a Democratic candidate for president, speaking at Shiloh battlefield at the dedication of the Minnesota monument, took strong ground in favor of state's rights. Governor Johnson also paid a tribute of respect and affection to the memory of the sons of Minnesota who yielded up their lives around Shiloh church, during the civil war, and discussed the constitution of the United States as a sacred import.

Ten Die in Mine Explosion.

Bath, England, April 10.—Ten miners lost their lives in the Norton Hill colliery in Somersetshire as a result of an explosion of coal gas. The first rescue parties to go down were overcome by the fumes in the mine and were saved only with the greatest difficulty.

Knapp for State Treasurer.

Monroe, Mich., April 11.—The Republican county convention indorsed the Roosevelt policies, Representative Charles R. Townsend and William F. Knapp, nurseryman, for state treasurer. Knapp was county treasurer for four years and has served as chairman of the county committee

TRIGGS MARRIES GIRL HE TAUGHT

Professor Who Was Recently Divorced by His Wife Tackles Matrimony Once More.

Chicago, April 11.—Oscar Lovell Triggs, erstwhile professor of English literature at the University of Chicago, who recently was divorced by his wife after a short but sensational hearing, has married again—and this despite beliefs he is said to entertain that mere man-made wedding vows are not at all essential to dual bliss. The ceremony was performed at Turlock, Cal.

Professor Triggs' connection with the university was severed because of his views on sociological questions. He also proclaimed that Rockefeller and Carnegie were the Shakespeares of the period, and Shakespearean lovers at once began to rave.

According to dispatches received from Canton, O., Professor Triggs' bride was once a member of a class at the University of Chicago taught by him. She was Miss Ada Beall Cox of Canton.

BAY STATE FOR SECRETARY TAFT

Platform Recognizes This Fact But Refrains from Instructing the Delegates.

Boston, April 11.—The four men who will head the Massachusetts delegation to the Republican national convention as delegates at large, Henry Cabot Lodge, W. Murray Crane, John D. Long and Sidney O. Bigney, will go to Chicago unpledged. The platform adopted by the state convention, "while recognizing that a majority of the delegates to the convention desire the nomination of Secretary Taft," did not include a resolution of instruction because it was "uncertain whether a resolution of preference would be carried, and its presentation would certainly lead to a contest which would be injurious to the welfare of the party."

The resolutions indorse Governor Curtis Guild for vice president, favor a "wise revision" of the tariff and warmly indorse President Roosevelt's policies.

MITCHELL TURNS DOWN TWO JOBS

Retiring Miners' President Declines Offers from Roosevelt.

POSITIONS HE COULD OBTAIN

One Was Assistant Secretary of Department of Commerce and Labor.

The Other to Investigate Labor Conditions in Panama—Murray's Appointment as Comptroller of the Currency.

Washington, April 11.—John Mitchell, president of the United Mine Workers of America, has been offered the position of assistant secretary of the department of commerce and labor to succeed Lawrence O. Murray, who is to become controller of the currency.

Mr. Mitchell has declined. He has also declined to investigate labor conditions at Panama and has announced that it is not his intention to become in any wise conected with the government.

Murray's Successor Named.

The successor to Mr. Murray has not yet been selected. Mr. Murray's nomination as controller of the currency will be sent to the senate by the president very soon. He may at the same time send in the name of the successor to Secretary Strauss.

Mr. Murray's acceptance of the controllership disposes of any aspirations in that quarter that may have been held by Colonel Frank Stoith, of Dwight, Ill. Despite the fact that Mayor Busse, who accompanied Colonel Smith from Chicago on a recent visit to Washington, announced that Mr. Smith was not seeking the position of controller, it is known that Mayor Busse and Senators Cullom and Hopkins earnestly requested the president to give Mr. Smith the place.

Not Desired by Colonel Smith.

President Roosevelt told them if Mr. Murray refused Colonel Smith should have it. The assistant secretaryship of the department of commerce and labor, which remained open, apparently was not desired by Colonel Smith nor has the Illinois delegation in congress shown any intention of making an effort to obtain that patronage for the state.

President Roosevelt in making the appointment will no doubt follow the wishes of Secretary Straus and possibly another of his cabinet officials.

New York, April 11.—James P. Munyon, the multimillionaire homeopathic medicine man of Altoona, and Mrs. Pauline Metzger, known to the stage as Pauline Neff, a former dazzling beauty of "The Social Whirl," were married in Jersey City and are now at the Waldorf-Astoria. Pauline Neff is the daughter of Judge Daniel J. Neff of Altoona.

CHICAGO GREEKS IN FIERCE RIOT

Knives, Clubs and Revolvers Used in Desperate Conflict.

ONE MAN IS FATALLY INJURED

Two Men Engage in a Quarrel and Spectators Soon Take Sides.

Police Arrive at Scene and Fight the Rioters for Ten Minutes Before They Are Able to Restore Order.

Chicago, April 11. — Thirty-five Greeks battled in a fierce riot in front of 311 Halstead street. With faces covered with blood and one fatally shot they resisted the police who responded to a riot call. Struggling back and forth, slashing and stabbing at each other, the excited mob would not yield until the policemen had fired a number of shots and wielded their clubs with good effect.

The fight, starting in the restaurant and poolroom of Philip Manil's & Bro., was continued on the street, where policemen from the Maxwell street station and detectives from the assistant chief's office took part. The man fatally wounded was taken to the county hospital, where he gave the name of V. Lampis Takas.

Beginning of the Trouble.

The Greeks were hanging around the poolroom when Takas and Peter De Fountas, 52 Blue Island avenue, quarreled. A blow was struck, and Takas fired at De Fountas' head. The bullet passed through the intended victim's hat and he fell. Here he drew his pistol, and with a pool table between them the men crawled back and forth, trying to shoot each other.

Takas finally dropped with a shot through the left breast. Then the spectators, who up to this time had been sitting in fear, joined sides. In a moment knives flashed, and the men struggled toward the entrance. Policeman Paul Riccio was attracted, and, seeing the fighting mob, turned in a riot call. When the police reached the scene the men were battling desperately on the street.

Mob Charged by Police.

The police charged the mob, fighting for ten minutes, and then the exhausted men were forced to submit. During the fight the police lost trace of Takas. A trail of blood led to the alley in the rear of the place. Riccio rushed back to see the wounded man dragging himself away. Takas fired two shots through the policeman's coat and then fell unconscious from loss of blood.

De Fountas was arrested after a struggle and taken to the Maxwell street police station. The other Greeks were released after furnishing the police with their names and addresses.

MME. GOULD HAS GONE TO EUROPE

Prince de Sagan Also Starts for the Other Side but on a Different Vessel.

New York, April 11.—Mme. Anna Gould, with her children and their tutor, sailed for Genoa and Naples on the steamer Fredrich der Grosse. About the same hour the Prince de Sagan, who has been paying assiduous court to Mme. Gould, sailed for Europe on the American line steamer St. Paul.

Mme. Gould and her children passed the night on board the steamer. She was registered on the passenger list as Miss Annette Chapin. The Gould party arrived at the pier about midnight in five automobiles. Mme. Gould was accompanied by the Prince de Sagan and Mr. and Mrs. Tyler Morse, whom she had been visiting at the Hotel St. Regis. The sailing party was assigned to the captain's suite on the upper deck. The Prince de Sagan and Mr. and Mrs. Morse remained only long enough to bid them farewell.

Robbers Get $1,300 in Saloon.

Chicago, April 11.—Two masked men held up Louis Rottenberg in his saloon at 165 North Sacramento avenue at 10 o'clock at night, and while one compelled him to stand with his face to the wall with hands uplifted the other stole $1,300 from a drawer. The money had been sent to the saloon from a brewery for the purpose of cashing pay checks for workmen.

Wholesale Executions in Nicaragua.

Kingston, Jamaica, April 11.—Central American mail reports received here say that wholesale executions have taken place in Nicaragua as the result of political troubles. Between seventy and eighty persons are reported to have been shot by order of President Zelaya for political reasons.

Kills Man Who Lured Husband.

South Bend, Ind., April 11.—Mrs. Christian A. Melsker shot dead from ambush Carlton Morgan a wealthy resident of South Bend, whom she accused of enticing her husband away from his home and into the society of other women. The murder took place at Cassopolis, Mich., outside a house where the men had been visiting two women.

THE COURIER is now nicely started on the last half of the first year under the present management and we desire at this time to thank the many friends whom we have made in that time, for kind words spoken and the assistance rendered us in our ambition to make the COURIER the best paper in northern Michigan. Politically the position of the COURIER is republican, an advocate of the principles which have been forced to the front by the aggressive republican administration of Theodore Roosevelt—a policy which, we believe, will be continued by the next administration, which will be republican, unless the republican party is false to its trust.

Believing, however, that every man's opinion should be heard, so that by much study we may arrive at just conclusions, our news columns will always endeavor to present all sides fairly and impartially, reserving to ourselves our editorial page.

Believing that the great agricultural interests of Charlevoix county should be pushed to the front, we shall always devote a liberal amount of space to the farm and good roads. Thanking the many subscribers who have renewed during the past month, and the many whose names have been placed on our list for the first time, we enter the last half determined to give you better value than ever before.

BEAUTY TIPS FOR WOMEN.

How to Bleach the Skin Without Harming It.

Not one person in five hundred knows how to bleach the skin. Yet it is a thing that every woman ought to know. No matter how dark the skin may be, you will be good looking, provided your skin is clear. The Japanese woman is as brown as a berry, yet she is pretty. The Cuban women are, many of them, a clear, ripe coffee color. Yet they are beauties. The Malay women are as yellow as saffron. Yet they are pretty, because their skins are clear.

The trouble with most faces is that they do not get washed enough. A wash cloth is not of much good, for it is too harsh, and a sponge is little better. The finger tips are best. And they should be followed with a vigorous spraying. The facial spray is the best thing that was ever used upon the skin, says the New York American. There are women whose faces need to be bleached at least once a day. One woman so situated uses ripe strawberries for the purpose, alternating with a few bruised lettuce leaves.

One day she takes the lettuce leaves, breaks them and rubs them on her face. The next day she takes a soft berry and goes over her skin with it. She keeps doing this as long as strawberries are to be had. In certain months she uses a ripe cucumber. She cuts it, rubs the juice on her face and then washes it off in warm water.

There are good bleaches, though, that can be made without going to the chemist, and one of these is the corn flour bleach. Take enough corn flour to fill an after dinner coffee cup. There ought to be no lumps in it and no roughness. It should be as soft as face powder. Next take a basin of boiling water and add a teaspoonful of borax powder to it. Into this throw the cup of corn flour. Let it stand a little while to strain.

Use this mixture upon the face and hands. It will make them soft and white. And the same is true of ordinary oatmeal. It is very soothing to the skin.

How to Do Up Curtains.

One way to do up curtains that answers equally well for madras, muslin, net and lace is to hang them instead of either ironing or stretching. Baste a broadish hem at the top and bottom and run into each a stout curtain pole from which you have scratched off all the paint. Stretch smoothly upon the pole at each end. Then hang up to dry. The weight of the lower pole will straighten and smooth it. You can usually make room for one to be hung even if you cannot for one to be stretched upon the floor. As soon as one is dry hang up another and when they are all done rip out the hems and press lightly with an iron that is warm rather than hot.

Ruffled curtains can have the ruffles ironed or fluted after coming off the poles, and if there are any little wrinkles left wet the spots and pull them out. Before curtains are put in the wash they should be brushed or shaken free from all dust and then should be squeezed and moved up and down in the warm suds instead of rubbing. Boil and rinse them and then dip them in another water in which you have put bluing or coffee, according as they need to be white or cream color. Starch them lightly while still wet.

How to Lighten Nursery Cares.

Baby baskets are expensive and not so convenient in caring for baby as the following: Buy a bamboo music rack, the kind that retails for 75 cents. This rack has four shelves and four knobs on top, joined by little bars. Everything required for baby's complete wardrobe can be placed on this, within easy reach. Use the top shelf for the various articles most needed for baby's toilet, such as powder, soap, pincushion, tiny brush and comb, little scissors, toilet water, etc. On the second shelf put bib, bands, stockings and planing blankets. On the third shelf place some soft towels and baby's napkins. On the bottom shelf put little quilts, etc. The knobs are useful to hold little dresses, skirts, wrappers and sacks, while the bars are for wash cloths. An elderdown flannel pocket may be hung on one corner for keeping bottle warm while mamma is bathing baby. This arrangement takes up little room, is light in weight and may be easily carried about.

How to Clean Walls.

Painted walls are healthy and sanitary, especially in the rooms which are used a great deal, such as the kitchen and sewing room. If they have been carefully treated the painted walls may be kept as fresh and pretty as when new by cleaning as follows: Add one-half a cupful of washing soda, thoroughly dissolved, to two-thirds of a pail of warm water. Wash the walls with a soft woolen cloth or a sponge. Wash a small space at a time and wipe dry immediately with a soft cloth.

How to Dust Furniture Properly.

Soft cloths make the best dusters. In dusting any piece of furniture begin at the top and dust down, whiting carefully with the cloth, which can be frequently shaken. A great many people seem to have no idea what dusting is intended to accomplish, and instead of wiping off and removing the dust it is simply flirted off into the air and soon settles down upon the articles dusted. If carefully taken up by the cloth, it can be shaken out of the window into the open air. If the furniture will permit the use of a damp cloth, that will more easily take up the dust, and it can be washed out in a pail of suds. It is far easier to save work by covering up nice furniture while sweeping than to clean the dust out, besides leaving the furniture far better in the long run.

How to Clean Bronzes.

It is not a good plan to clean bronzes, as the polish is very easily spoiled, but if necessary nothing is better than cleaning them with water and ammonia, using a stiff brush like a nailbrush. Dry carefully after rinsing thoroughly. They should be carefully dusted every day with a soft cloth and a feather brush, and a little sweet oil may be rubbed on occasionally. To remove stains from bronze make the article very hot by dipping it in boiling water. Then rub it with a piece of flannel dipped in suds made from yellow soap, rubbing clean with soft linen cloths.

A quiet, rainy day game for children old enough to read is to cut out all the animals and birds you can find; then write the names of each on small slips of paper, let the children have one corner of the room for a playground, and let them place all the animals on the floor; then find the name of each one. It will not only amuse them for hours, but they will soon learn to know all the different kinds of animals and birds. Give them crayons and let them color them.

NEW REVENUE BILL FRAMED

Illinois Mayors Decide on Measure to Go Before Legislature When It Convenes.

Chicago, April 10.—A bill which will give the city of Chicago an increase in revenue of $15,000,000 agreed upon at a conference of Illinois mayors in Chicago, will be presented to the legislature when it convenes May 5. The bill is designed to permit an increase in the bonded indebtedness of municipalities in order that public works, otherwise impossible, may be undertaken.

The committee decided that a bill be framed which will change the present assessed valuation of property from one-fifth to one-third of the actual valuation, and also to change the tax limitation in the Juul law from 5 to 3 per cent, in order to keep the tax rate where it now stands.

"The proposed change," said Comptroller Wilson after the conference, "will not increase the taxes of the individual property owner. They will remain the same as they are under the present law. The only change will be to give counties and cities increased bonding power to a limit of 66 2-3 per cent. This will enable cities to make necessary public improvements without increasing the taxation of citizens."

SPEAKER CANNON TALKS RIGHT OUT

Does Not Seem to Believe the Newspapermen to Excess Dinner in His Honor.

Washington, April 10.—A dinner in honor of United States Senator Knox and the Pennsylvania delegation in congress was given at the Raleigh by Representative J. Hampton Moore, of Philadelphia, and among the guests was Speaker Cannon, who after saying that "There is today more patriotism, more conservatism, more ability, than there ever was before in the history of the republic," added that the man of any nationality who would represent to a candidate for political office that he controlled "a million votes" lied.

Then he unbosomed himself regarding the agitation for the removal of the duty on wood pulp. He said that a pile driver could not get the eighteen thousand newspaper proprietors to tell the truth about the matter. He pointed out that nine hundred thousand tons of pulp were produced in the United States as against nine thousand tons imported, and referring to the duty, of 15 per cent inquired how far its removal would help the newspapers.

Seek Bodies of Missing Boys.

Saginaw, Mich., April 10.—While Mrs. T. Hart of the suburb of Jamestown is speeding westward on her way to California, groups of neighbors are working with boats and grappling hooks, trying to recover the bodies of Mrs. Hart's son, Thomas, thirteen years old, and Fred Egerer, a playmate of the same age, who have been missing since Wednesday. The boat that the two boys took to go boating in was found, half full of water, after friends had searched all night for a trace of them.

Mrs. Vanderbilt Wins Case.

New York, April 10.—A recommendation that Mrs. Ellen French Vanderbilt be granted an absolute divorce from Alfred G. Vanderbilt will be handed up to Supreme Court Justice O'Gorman Monday by Referee David McCure. Lawyers concerned in the suit think that Justice O'Gorman will order an interlocutory decree to be filed on the same day and that after the usual three months, Mrs. Vanderbilt will be permitted to resume her maiden name.

Teacher Fails to Leave Jail.

Champaign, Ill., April 10.—Sherman Cass, a school teacher, imprisoned for "rebel" under the relic of old English law, which permits the confinement of defendants in certain cases, has served six months in the Champaign county jail, but he failed to secure his freedom, as he had hoped. Cass went to jail rather than pay $1,800 to W. F. Burke on a judgment for whipping his boy, a pupil. Burke has paid Sheriff Peters $3.45 for another week's board.

Chinese to Build $100,000 Club.

New York, April 10.—Chinamen of the city who wish to preserve the traditions of their native land are planning to build a $100,000 clubhouse as the home of the Confucian association. C. H. Chen, a postgraduate student of Columbia university and an undersecretary connected with the imperial civil service, is president of the organization.

Iowa Prohibitionists.

Des Moines, Ia., April 11.—Iowa Prohibitionists met in state conference at the Wellington Hotel and, after listening to Rev. Sam Small of Georgia and National Chairman Charles F. Jones, nominated a ticket to be voted upon at the primaries June 2.

Socialist Hunter Has a Bad Fall.

Stamford, Conn., April 10.—Robert Hunter, the socialist writer and speaker, was thrown from his horse while riding in Harbor and received a dislocated shoulder.

How to Mend Matting.

Often in moving a heavy piece of furniture the matting on the floor will have an ugly hole torn in it, says the Chicago News. The torn place is usually where it is the most noticeable and cannot be covered with a rug. There is an excellent way to remedy this defect by darning the place with raffia of colors to match the matting straw. It is much better than threads, and the work can be neatly done. It may be necessary to run heavy cords across the work through which the raffia is to be woven. The threads are sewed in place with a large darning needle. Torn places on the edge of matting can be remedied in the same manner. It is best to sew matting together with a loose stitch, using very heavy linen thread for the purpose, but where this cannot be done then use the regular matting tacks or ordinary tacks, placing first one side, then the opposite side, to prevent the baggy appearance which so often occurs. Never use a claw hammer to lift tacks from matting; since it invariably breaks the straw. Get an old blunt chisel, place it beneath the matting and tack head, pound gently with the hammer and pry the tack up. This will draw the tack out straight and leave the matting unbroken.

How to Wash Ivory Ornaments.

Wash ivory ornaments well in soap and water, using a soft toothbrush to remove the dust from any fine work that may be upon them. Dry them by putting them in bright sunshine, keeping them constantly wet with soapy water for several days while they are in the sun. Finally wash and rinse them again. If the ivory is much stained, but not very deeply, rub the surface with finely ground pumice stone and water, moisten it well and lay in the sun to bleach.

The Jumping Off Place.

"Consumption had me in its grasp, and I had almost reached the jumping off place when I was advised to try Dr. King's New Discovery; and I want to say right now, it saved my life. Improvement began with the first bottle, and after taking one dozen bottles I was well and happy once again," says George Moore, of Grimesland, N. C. As a remedy for coughs and colds and healer of weak, sore lungs and for preventing pneumonia New Discovery is supreme. 50c and $1.00 at F. G. Bates & Co's druggists. Trial bottle free.

LEGAL NOTICES

Notice of Mortgage Sale.

Whereas, Mary L. Jones, and Willey Jones, husband and wife, of Melrose township, Charlevoix county, Michigan, made and executed a certain mortgage bearing date the 15th day of October, A. D. 1895, to Verlend Lumber Co., of Petoskey, Michigan, which was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of the county of Charlevoix on the 17th day of October, A. D. 1898 at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, in liber 28 of mortgages on page 431;

And whereas, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage is the sum of Two Hundred and 14/100 dollars, and no suit or proceeding has been instituted at law to recover the debt now remaining secured thereby, or any part thereof;

And whereas, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by said mortgage, whereby the power of sale contained therein has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance thereof, and of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises, at public vendue, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the court house, at the Village of Charlevoix, in said county of Charlevoix, that being the place of holding the circuit court within said county, on the 30th day of April, A. D. 1908, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, the description of which said premises contained in said mortgage is as follows: the south-west quarter of the north west quarter of section twenty-nine, township thirty-three north, range five west, Melrose township Charlevoix County, Michigan.

Dated, February 6th, 1908.

JEALOUS WIFE'S ACT

Goes Gunning for Her Wayward Husband; Shoots Another Man Dead.

DEAD MAN IS FROM SOUTH BEND

Tragedy Occurs at Cassopolis, and Accident Is the Latest Plea—Roast for a Jury.

Cassopolis Mich., April 11.—Thinking he was her husband, Mrs. George Metzker shot and killed Carlton Morgan, a wealthy man of South Bend, Ind. The shooting occurred at the home of Mrs. May Green, a widow of this place. Mrs. Metzker was arrested. When Mrs. Metzker, who lives at South Bend, learned that her husband and Carlton Morgan had gone to the home of the pretty widow she became frenzied with jealousy. Disgusting herself, she came at once to Cassopolis. Going straight to the door of the Green residence, she rang the bell and demanded to see her husband. The maid informed Metzker, who hid in the house.

Morgan Went to the Door.

Morgan went to the door to disarm suspicion and was shot down. "I thought he was my husband," screamed the woman as she realized her mistake. Mrs. Green, in whose home the two men were found by Mrs. Metzker, was prostrated by the shooting. She declared that several of her friends had been having a card game and that these were other men in the house with Metzker and Morgan when the shooting occurred.

Concludes to Call It an Accident.

"I am sorry that I shot the wrong man," said Mrs. Metzker, following her arrest. "I received information that my husband was at this place after his repeated promises to me that he would not go there again. As soon as I found it out my mind was made up. I followed him there, and then shot the wrong man in the dark." Later she said she intended to fire a shot in the air to frighten her husband, and that in the excitement of the moment she shot Morgan by mistake. Mrs. Metzker is in a hysterical condition at the jail.

Mrs. Green Is a Divorcee.

Mrs. Green is the divorced wife of Ray Green, who is in Minnesota. Morgan's father, H. C. Morgan, was one of South Bend's most prominent citizens. He died in January. Young Morgan lived in Niles, where he had a wife and a twelve-year-old child. Another woman who was in the house at the time of the murder was Mrs. John Berner, a daughter of George McCabe, a prominent meat dealer of this place.

JUDGE ROASTS A JURY

Twelve Men Who Acquitted a Prisoner Who Had Confessed His Crime.

Detroit, April 11.—"This is one of the vilest miscarriages of justice that has ever been heard of in this community," said Judge Phelan, when a jury found Percy Bowin, eighteen years old, of Woodville, Ont., not guilty of the murder on Jan. 7 of Mrs. Cornelia Welch, sixty-three years old. The prosecution presented a confession made to the police by Bowin, who told how he killed the woman and stole and pawned her diamonds. Bowin took the stand and said Captain McDonnell induced him to make it by promising to help him to a pardon later. This the police denied absolutely. Judge Phelan said the community should be thankful that the jurors are barred from trying any more criminal cases for three years.

Has an Ideal Booze Stand.

Traverse City, Mich., April 11.—Willis Sanford, a saloon keeper in the little village of Wexford, is not worried over Wexford county going "dry." He will move his saloon a few rods and then will be in Grand Traverse county. If Grand Traverse also had gone "dry" he could have had his choice of Benzie or Manistee, as the village is on four corners. Albert Kulpe, the other village saloon keeper, is safely over the Grand Traverse line.

Graft in a University?

Ann Arbor, Mich., April 11.—Attorney General John E. Bird was here investigating stories circulating at the university. One of those reports is that a number of tons of hard coal which had been charged to the university and the state had been delivered to the residences of professors, President Angell and the observatory and engineering laboratory all use hard coal. Bird had a false tip.

Thief and Would-Be Murderer.

Battle Creek, Mich., April 11.—Hearing a noise in his barnyard William Huller, residing near Climax, dressed and started in the direction of the noise. As he approached the building a stranger stepped to the door and blazed away with a shotgun. Huller's left arm was so shattered that amputation was necessary. It is believed the shooter was attempting to steal Huller's team.

Six Hurt in Auto Crash.

St. Louis, Mo., April 11.—Six persons were injured, two seriously, in a collision between a Jefferson avenue car and an automobile. Five of the injured were in the automobile, Elizabeth Mitzmain, a school girl, was the only passenger on the car who was injured. The seriously injured are William Boyd and Thomas Smith. Besides Miss Mitzmain, the others injured are J. J. Jeffrey, Robert Cronin and H. J. Volkert.

Arbor Day Proclamation.

To the people of the state of Michigan, greeting:

In accordance with a well-established custom, I, Fred M. Warner, governor of the state of Michigan, do hereby set apart Friday, May 1, 1908, as Arbor day.

The season of the year has come that reminds that much can be done to improve the scenes about us and make our homes, our highways and our state more attractive. It was that commendable sentiment that brought about the designation of a day that would be known as Arbor day and its observance year after year will benefit our state and its people.

No monument that a man can build is as imposing as a stately tree, and he who plants it has a claim upon posterity greater than that of the artist or the sculptor. He who plants a tree and watches its growth and development must love the land that nourishes it, the country that protects it and the government that is over all.

Public conscience has awakened to the fact that the time is present when energetic, intelligent and practical efforts should be made to restore in some measure, at least, the generous gifts which nature bestowed upon our state but which have been swept away to provide for the constantly increasing demands of a constantly increasing population. The protection of the forest resources still existing is a matter of local and national importance.

Arbor day gives the children an opportunity to resume the first responsibility of citizenship. It is not enough to plant a tree. The children should give their intelligent care to the trees after they are planted. It is constancy to any undertaking that insures its success. I recommend that appropriate exercises be held in our schools which will tend to impress the significance of the day upon the minds of the rising generation.

FRED M. WARNER, Governor.

How to Prepare a Mixture to Cure Rheumatism.

This Town Has Its Share of Dread Disease, Which is Said to Yield to Simple Home Recipe.

To relieve the worst forms of Rheumatism, take a teaspoonful of the following mixture after each meal and at bedtime:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces.

These harmless ingredients can be obtained from our home druggists, and are easily mixed by shaking them well in a bottle. Relief is generally felt from the first few doses.

This prescription states a well-known authority in a Cleveland morning paper, forces the clogged up, inactive kidneys to filter and strain from the blood the poisonous waste matter and uric acid, which causes Rheumatism.

As Rheumatism is not only the most painful and torturous disease, but dangerous to life, this simple recipe will no doubt be greatly valued by many sufferers here at home who should at once prepare the mixture to get this relief.

It is said that a person who would take this prescription regularly, a dose or two daily or even a few times a week, would never have serious Kidney or Urinary disorders or Rheumatism.

Cut this out and preserve it. Good Rheumatism prescriptions which really relieve are scarce, indeed, and when you need it, you want it badly. Our druggists here say they will either supply these ingredients or make the mixture ready to take, if any of our readers so prefer.

A FAIR QUESTION.

What Is Left Now Under Capitalism? Some Economic Facts.

A contemporary of ours not a thousand miles away is perplexing itself and its readers with its inepacity to understand elementary economic facts. It therefore asks us if we will explain what there is left as private property to anybody "after all the land, all the capital and all the means of production have been taken over by the community under Socialism."

We shall answer that conundrum like a shot. Everything that is not land and is not capital and is not means of collective production will be left to the people to make their private property if they choose. Their clothes, their furniture, their pots, their silver and table china and cutlery, their garden flowers and vegetables, their photographs, books, paintings, automobiles, horses and carriages, pleasure boats, toys, watches, brooches, spectacles, combs, bicycles, cats, pigs and canaries and ever so many things more that most people own as their private property today will be their own private property to their hearts' content. Nobody else will either need or desire to deprive them of these possessions, and they will have in addition the use of all the public means of wealth provided by the co-operative labor of the community, such as good horses, good places to work, fine public works, etc.

And now we have so cheerfully answered our neighbor will he kindly answer us in return? Will he tell us what there is left to the overwhelming mass of the producing and working class of this country today "after all the land, all the capital and all the means of collective production have been taken" by the landlords and the capitalists as their own private property?—Appeal to Reason.

FOR THE GOOD OF ALL.

Socialism Alone Can Prevent the Disorganization of Society.

The Socialist programme is not a theory imposed upon society for its acceptance or rejection. It is but the interpretation of what is sooner or later inevitable. Capitalism is already struggling to its destruction. It is no longer competent to organize or administer the work of the world or even to preserve itself. The captains of industry are appalled at their own inability to control or direct the rapidly Socializing forces of industry. The so called trust is but a sign and form of this developing Socialization of the world's work. The universal increase of the uncertainty of employment, the universal determination to break down the unity of labor in the trades unions, the widespread apprehensions of impending change, reveal that the institutions of capitalist society are passing under the power of inhering forces that will soon destroy them.

Into the midst of the strain and crisis of civilization the Socialist movement comes as the only saving or conservative force. If the world is to be saved from chaos, from universal disorder and misery, it must be by the union of the workers of all nations in the Socialist movement. The Socialist party comes with the only proposition or programme for intelligently and deliberately organizing the nation for the common good of all its citizens. It is the first time that the mind of man has ever been directed toward the conscious organization of society.—National Platform.

The Bloodiness of History.

Who have been responsible for the bloodshed of this and several globe, the workingmen or the ruling classes? Always those ruling or seeking to rule politically, commercially or even ecclesiastically. The ruling class is always a bloodthirsty class. It is ready to bring about bloodshed to maintain its fleecing rights. And in spite of this fact and the fact that history has always shown it, this class is forever hinting at bloodthirsty intentions on the part of the masses. It is more than a case of bad conscience; it is an employment of the "Stop thief!" principle which is so often used to divert attention from the real thief. Once in awhile, however, some member of the ruling class incautiously breaks loose, like Chancellor Day of the Syracuse university, and hints at "streets full of blood" and the like.

Class Rule.

At the present time the capitalist class, being the dominant economic class, owning and controlling all of the great industries of the world, is also the ruling class. The governments of all civilized countries are dominated by the capitalists. The interests of the capitalists alone are considered in the deliberations and actions of legislative, executive and judicial branches of government, except where the working class is represented by elected members of its organizations.

Starve Them Out.

A new way to deal with Social Democracy has been discovered in Schoenwald, Germany. A master painter of that place has just made the proposal that merchants and farmers refuse hereafter to sell potatoes to Socialists "Then they would starve to death, and that would be the end of Social Democracy!" he declared triumphantly.

Ought Not to Be Resisted.

Some time ago the Rev. Lyman Abbott lectured at Yale college and devoted a part of his lecture to Socialism. "I believe the movement toward Socialism in this country to be irresistible," he said, "and I believe, too, it ought not to be resisted."

Neighborhood Notes

The fourth annual report of the Michigan State Telephone Co., for 1907, shows an increase of 13 per cent in gross earnings and a very slight increase in construction and maintenance, so that the net showing is one of large profit. The gross earnings were $1,092,225.02, as compared with $966,296.12 for the previous year. The general operating expenses were only $10,000 more.

The net earnings were $407,252 for the years from which is deducted $28,175 for general expenses, $111,756 for interest, $136,911 for dividends and $27,185 for maintenance reserve. This leaves a surplus of $105,887 for the year or a total surplus of $651,- 13 to the credit of the company since its organization.

The surplus for 1906 was only $110,367, although there was nothing charged off for maintenance reserve.

The report states that it has kept the policy of the company to reduce low rates and has promotable installations, thus reducing the expenditure for construction also. The gain in exchange stations was 9,661 for 1907 as compared with 1,656 for 1906.

According to the State report of precincts are 265 - about 70 the counties in which the people declared for prohibition but it is said

10 have gone out of existence since that time. In the same year the saloons of the 10 counties, which have a population of 250,000, paid the state liquor taxes of $120,622.50. The property is estimated to be worth $500,000, while about 1,000 persons are employed by the barrooms exclusive of those who will thrown out of work in the breweries which supply them.

P. DuBois, of Manceloua, a railway brakeman, narrowly escaped death near Bayne Falls Friday. He was riding the foot board of his engine when he lost his hold and fell headlong between the rails. The engine had passed nearly over him as he lay crouched between tracks, when his coat caught some part of the machinery, throwing him against the rail, cutting his left arm off at the elbow and otherwise bruising him.

The annual convention of the Northern Michigan Bee Keepers' Association was held at Manceloua last week with the largest attendance in its history. The following officers were elected

Vice president, C. J. Smith, Charlevoix

Secretary, W. A. Grayson, Petoskey

Jack McKendrick, a Alanistique woodsman fell headlong out of a third-story window, a distance of thirty-five feet, although somewhat stunned, the only injury he received was a slight cut under the chin.

Dan Cleland, of Traverse City man, plead guilty to distributing liquors to voters on election day and paid a fine of $25 and costs.

Straight Talks on Patent Medicines

The "Rexall" Remedies deserve confidence.

As all these remedies are grouped under one name, they must succeed or fail together. There must be no weak links in this chain. One unworthy remedy would mean disaster to the entire plan. If you, for example, purchased the "Rexall" Cough Cure and were not cured by it, how could we expect you to place any faith thereafter in the "Rexall" Dyspepsia Cure or any other member of the "Rexall" family?

You can understand, therefore, why such anxious care was given to finding and choosing the remedies to which the name "Rexall" was given. We have admitted none to this circle until our committee of experts had been convinced by investigation and test that it was the best remedy known to medical science for the ailment it aimed to relieve.

Who should know better than the leading thousand druggists of this country what are, and what are not, efficient medicine?

Remember, the success of our enterprise depends on the merit of each individual remedy. Our reputation, which is our very business existence is at stake. Can you doubt, that in buying a "Rexall" Remedy, you are buying the best that science and experience can give you?

Here are three prominent members of the "Rexall" family:

REXALL "93" HAIR TONIC

The famous Rexall "93" Hair Tonic is composed in chief of Resorcin, Beta Naphthol and Pilocarpin.

Resorcin is one of the latest and most effective germ-killers discovered by science, and in connection with Beta Naphthol, which is both germicidal and antiseptic, a combination is formed which not only destroys the germs which rob the hair of its nutriment, but creates a clean and healthy condition of the scalp, which prevents the lodgment and development of new germs.

Pilocarpin is a well-known agent for restoring the hair to its natural color, where the loss of color has been due to a disease of the scalp. It is not a coloring matter or dye—it produces its effect by stimulating the scalp and hair follicles to health and active life.

This combination of [illegible] with alcohol as a stimulant, makes the most effective remedy for hair [illegible] scalp, [illegible]

REXALL DYSPEPSIA TABLETS

The remarkable success of Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets, is largely due to the new and successful method of manufacture, whereby the well known properties of Bismuth Subnitrate and Pepsin have been combined with carminatives and other agents.

Bismuth Subnitrate and Pepsin are recognized by the entire medical profession as specifics for acute indigestion or chronic dyspepsia.

The Pepsin used in [illegible] manufactured under a new process which develops its greatest efficiency. Pepsin [illegible] supplies to the digestive [illegible] one of the most important elements that the [illegible] to digest a full [illegible] upon the glands [illegible] in other elements.

REXALL CHERRY JUICE COUGH SYRUP

A new idea in Cough Syrups.

This preparation owes its efficiency to the presence of Wild Cherry, Vinegar Squills, Boneset, Horehound and Syrup.

All of these have been known for a hundred years as remedies for coughs and hoarseness.

In Rexall Cherry Juice Cough Syrup, all of these remedies have been combined by a process of manufacture that has [illegible] perfect medicine [illegible] whereby the [illegible] of each support [illegible] others.

Courier Grange Column

South Arm Grange No. 815.

South Arm Grange No. 815 met April 4, with a good attendance.

The coming township elections were discussed and the proposition to raise money for new industries to locate at East Jordan was discussed by all tax payers present.

The debate, "Resolved That Our Form of Government is Best," was discussed at great length by all interested. The affirmative side won. The rest of the lecturer's hour consisted of songs, recitations, readings and quotations.

Ironton Grange invited the South Arm degree team to meet with them April 11, and initiate the candidates which they have lost obtained. The degree team accepted the invitation.

The debate for the next program is, "Resolved That Irrigation is Better Than Rainfall."

Brother Clarence Lalonde, who has been confined to the house with rheumatism for the past months is able to be out again.

Peninsula Grange No. 706.

Peninsula Grange No. 706 met in regular session April 11 with a good attendance with the worthy master in the chair.

The committee on social held April 4 report that an extra good time was had. Receipts over $12.

A good program was rendered consisting of discussions and answering to roll call with quotations.

At the next meeting we are to answer to the roll call by telling, "If I had a thousand dollars, and a year's time, How would I spend it."

It was decided to have a contest of getting new members and reinstated members, the losing side to get a present for the hall.

Wilson Grange No. 719.

Wilson Grange met in regular session April 11. Officers and members present twenty-nine, visitors one. Conferred first and second degree on one candidate. Short, but very interesting lecturer's program.

Song by Grange, No. 90.
Recitation, Agnes Shepard.
Reading, George Todd.
Recitation, Anna Warden.
Reading, Mabel Holland.
Instrumental music, Jasper Warden.
Grange dismissed.

The woman's work committee held a box social Wednesday, April 3, which brought them in $26.

Michigan Crop Report.

The weather during the month of March—according to the state weather bureau, was generally pleasant. The precipitation was above the normal in the upper peninsula and the southeastern counties, but deficient in the northern and central counties of the lower peninsula.

The coodition of wheat on April first in the southern counties was 98, in the central counties 85, in the northern counties 81 and in the state 86.

The average depth of snow on March 15 in the state was 2.93, and in the northern counties 7.06 inches. On the 31st of March there was no snow in the southern and central counties 1.10 inches and in the state 0.31 of an inch.

The number of weeks protection to wheat by snow in the southern counties was 1.95, in the central counties 1.41, in the northern counties 2.11 and in the state 1.89. In answer to the question, "Has wheat during March suffered injury from any cause?" 123 correspondents in the southern counties answer "Yes" and 261 "No," in the central counties 50 answer "Yes" and 84 "No," in the central counties 19 answer "Yes" and 78 "No."

The average condition of rye is 88 in the state, southern and central counties and 87 in the northern counties.

The average condition of meadows in the southern counties 93, in the central counties 88, in the northern counties 86 and in the state 90.

The average condition of horses and swine in the state is 92, cattle 91 and sheep 93.

Reports concerning fruits are favorable although it is too early to tell definitely what the outcome will be.

The following table shows the prospect for an average of the various kinds of fruit in the different sections of the state.

Apples State, 86, northern counties, 86.

Pears—State 86, northern counties 81.

Peaches—State, 75, northern counties, 78.

Cherries State, 85; northern counties, 93.

Small fruit State, 87, northern counties, 91.

In regard to the question "Are peach orchards being sprayed for curl leaf?" 59 correspondents answer "Yes" and 201 "No."

Lake Shipyard To Be Idle.

Detroit, Mich., April 11.—With the launching of the 10,000-ton freighter, A. E. Nettleton, at the Wyandotte yard of the American Shipbuilding company, the business of the Wyandotte yard has almost reached a standstill. About 1,100 men are employed when the yard is operated at its full capacity, but all the employes have been laid off except a launching crew of fifty men, who will be retained for repair work.

New Place for Leslie M. Shaw.

Philadelphia, April 11.—Leslie M. Shaw, former secretary of the treasury who recently resigned the presidency of the Carnegie Trust company of New York, has under consideration an invitation to become the head of the First Mortgage Guarantee and Trust company of this city. The company is a comparatively young institution, and has not figured largely in financial affairs.

Neighborhood Favorite.

Mrs. E. D. Charles, of Harbor, Maine, speaking of Electric Bitters, says: "It is a neighborhood favorite here with us." It deserves to be a favorite everywhere. It gives quick relief in dyspepsia, liver complaint, kidney derangement, malnutrition, nervousness, weakness and general debility. Its action on the blood, as a thorough purifier, makes it especially useful as a spring medicine. This grand alterative tonic is sold under guarantee at F. G. Hines & Co.'s drug store. 50c

Farm, Field and Garden

WINTER SPRAYING.

It Not Only Destroys San Jose Scale, but Many Other Pests.

By A. B. CORDLEY, Oregon experiment station.

One application of lime, sulphur and salt each winter will do more for the neglected orchard than can be done in any other way by the same expenditure of cash and energy. It not only destroys San Jose scale, but it also destroys the branch form of woolly aphis, the eggs of the green aphis, the pear leaf blister mite, the hibernating larvae of the prune twig miner, probably the hibernating larvae of the bud moth, together with most other insects which may chance to be wintering upon the trees. It is also a good fungicide. If applied in early winter it is nearly or quite equal to bordeaux for the second application for apple tree anthracnose. Applied to peach trees just before the buds open in spring it is a preventive of peach leaf curl, and applied to apple trees under similar conditions it is a satisfactory substitute for the application of bordeaux, which is usually recommended for that time.

With all its good qualities, however, the lime, sulphur and salt spray is not a cure all. It does not, so far as known, reduce the number of wormy apples in an orchard, nor can it be used as a substitute for bordeaux while the trees are in foliage. It is a distinctly winter spray and should be used even in winter only upon deciduous trees.

The San Jose scale is very largely responsible for the present enthusiastic crusade against the old neglected, moss-covered orchards. Every one is pruning and spraying. Why? To destroy the San Jose scale. Yet I find that a very small percentage of our farmers know what this dreaded thing is which they are so earnestly endeavoring to destroy. If any other spray than the lime, sulphur and salt were being used, a portion against all spraying would certainly follow the poor results of so much misdirected energy. By using the lime, sulphur and salt spray beneficial results are absolutely sure to follow, whether the scale is present or not. Nevertheless every one who grows trees or plants should learn to know this destructive little pest and be prepared to combat it, since it may at any time appear upon the ornamentals of the city lot as well as the trees of the fruit home orchard.

If badly infested, the fruit, particularly pears and apples, [illegible] pitted, distorted in shape, cracked and unmarketable. It should be noted, however, that neither discoloration upon yellow fruits nor [illegible] caused by San Jose scale. Upon yellow apples and particularly upon peaches very similar spots are produced by attacks of certain minute fungi; hence such spots should not in themselves be taken as proof of infestation by the scale. This can be determined definately only by a careful examination and the actual detection of the scale. The presence of such blotches may well arouse suspicion of the presence of San Jose scale and should challenge a careful examination alike by growers, buyers and inspectors; so also should the presence of dead and shriveled leaves upon the trees in midwinter invite examination, for, although their presence is not proof of the presence of the scale, it is evidence that the vigality of the tree has been seriously impaired by some cause, and in regions where San Jose scale is prevalent that cause in a vast majority of instances is the scale.

CEMENT MORTAR.

Instruction In Mixing It For Making Pipe or Drainage.

A subject that interests farmers is the making of concrete pipe, either for use in irrigating systems or as a substitute for clay tile in drainage. From the Arizona experiment station comes the following practical details of the manufacture of such pipes as molds of two feet in length. The method of mixing the cement mortar will be useful for other kinds of cement work also:

The sand should be selected with the greatest care. It should be free from clay or dirt and preferably composed of grains of varying sizes. Roughly speaking, the strongest and densest sand for mortar contains two-thirds coarse grains and one-third fine grains. Often a gravelly sand can be passed through a half inch mesh screen and then mixed with one-half its volume of fine sand.

A cement should be selected which is very finely ground, rather slow setting and of unquestioned soundness.

Assuming the pipe to be fifteen inches in diameter and the proportions of the mortar to be one part cement to three and one-half parts sand, a batch can be made up as follows: One barrel (four sacks) of cement and three and a half barrels (seven wheelbarrows) of sand. The sand and cement should be mixed dry and turned three times with shovels. Water is then added in an amount sufficient to bring the mortar to a "dry" consistency—that is, such condition as will require much tamping to cause water to stand on the surface.

The batch should then be turned twice or three times and coned. It is profitable to work the mortar thoroughly.

Labor and Curing.

Three men—two to tamp and one to shovel the mortar—are a satisfactory team and can mix, mold and sprinkle at the rate of forty pipes per day of nine hours. The tamping must be done in small layers, not over three inches at a time.

An important feature in the manufacture of cement pipe is the curing. About twenty-four hours after the pipes are made they should be sprinkled with water so long as they seem to absorb it freely. For a week thereafter they should be wetted every day. They should then cure in the air for a week or two before being laid in the ground.

On the third day after molding a cement pipe a wash of pure cement should be applied on the inside of each length with a plasterer's brush.

Sugar Beets on Alkali Soil.

Beet fields subject to alkali are described as being characterized by a very uneven stand, considerable irregularity in the size of the plants and the prevalence of rudiments of the older leaves and of sprangling tops, etc. The cause given for these effects is that the alkali retards or prevents the germination of the seed or that it destroys the plants after germination. Clay soils were found to present greater difficulties in this respect than sandy soils. Attention is called to the fact that when the density of the soil solution becomes too great the vitality of the seed is destroyed, or, in the case of already growing plants, the passage of water from the soil into the plant is checked. The strength of the soil solution in Colorado analyses was found to be 2.97 per cent of alkali where the soil moisture was equal to 20 per cent and to 5.86 where it was only 10 per cent. On the field in question the heavy adobe soil two days after irrigation contained from 13 to 24 per cent of water on the side of the plant next the water furrow, but several days after irrigation the moisture content had fallen to 8 to 12 per cent, and the plants, while still growing, were suffering from lack of water.—G. W. Shaw, California.

Roots For Farm Animals.

Roots as a part of the ration have a decided value for all kinds of domestic animals. Professor T. F. Hunt and associates in a recent bulletin of the New York Cornell experiment station in discussing this subject call attention to the fact that their effect is tonic as well as nutritive and that for horses and feeders of farm animals for exhibition purposes [illegible] roots invaluable.

For most purposes the roots are chopped or sliced before feeding. Various [illegible] are made [illegible] for this work. Generally speaking, roots should be fed as [illegible] as they can be [illegible] much labor. A feed may vary from [illegible] pounds a day for a thousand pounds of animal, according to the amount of dry concentrates and roughage fed. It is usual to put the roots into the feed box and distribute the grain or grain mixture on them. For poultry, however, the whole roots may be given, allowing the fowls to pick them. It is said [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] danger to cows. However, if no roots are in the milking room at the time of milking and they are fed just after milking this may be avoided.

Injury From Winter Winds.

In some of the prairie states, where the winter winds are both cold and dry, it is very desirable that the soil be well tilled with moisture when winter sets in, since during the whole of the winter evaporation from the young fruit tree is constantly going on, and if the moisture is not in the soil to meet this demand the result is the serious injury or even death of the trees.

In the milder parts of the country a shed often suffices for housing pigs, but it should be well constructed in order to provide protection from stormy, damp and chilly weather. The location should be high and well drained, affording clean, dry sleeping places. The shed should open to the south. The expense of such a building is well warranted in view of the added comfort to the stock and the increased number of pigs raised.

For the Farm Dairy.

Work in breeding for milk production at the Canada experiment farms seems to show that (a) superior dairy cows may be found in all breeds; (b) pure bred females are not essential to success in dairy farming, but a pure bred bull should always be used.

Hardy Russian Apples.

Some of the Russian apples appear to be hardier than any apples of American origin and have been the means of extending the culture of this fruit to southern Manitoba.

Lum Hong, who has shed his queue, married an American woman and become Americanized, applied for naturalization papers, and the final hearing was to have been on Monday, but the application was canceled on order of the department of commerce and labor, holding that Mongolians cannot be naturalized.

WAS THE BEST EVER HELD

Teacher's Institute Friday and Saturday of last Week.

ATTENDANCE OF PATRONS WAS LIGHT

Lectures by Dr. Vincent Should Not Have Been Missed.

Commissioner Millord Writes Us a Complete Report of the Meeting—Important Topics Were Discussed.

The Teacher's Institute, which was held in Charlevoix on April 17-18, was decidedly the best meeting of the kind that has been held in Charlevoix county.

The meeting was called to order by Supt. Fuller, president of the association, with nearly 100 teachers present.

Miss Jessie M. Himes, principal of the Normal Training School, read a very well prepared paper on "What the Grades Should do For the Student in English."

Miss Himes' idea that we should get away from the old staid idea of technical grammar and stick more closely to the developement of pure English by having the pupils write about things with which they are acquainted is certainly a good one and one that every teacher should aim to use. It certainly is a fact that many teachers fail in teaching English because they do, or try to do, too much technical work.

The concensus of opinion among the more successful teachers seemed to be that very little technical grammar should be attempted until the sixth or seventh grade is reached.

Many valuable suggestions, both as to methods and material for the developement of English in the grades were given, in the paper and in the discussion which followed.

Following this the subject, High School English, was taken up by Miss Vida Collins, principal of the East Jordan high school.

Miss Collins' paper was full of good suggestions and the discussion which followed showed very plainly that we have teachers in our schools who are alive to the importance of this branch and that they are after the best method of presentation.

Supt. Woodley then appeared on the platform with a handful of questions which had been asked by the teachers. The questions were pointed and provoked considerable discussion.

Dr. Vincent entered the room at 4:15 and immediately made his way to the platform. He took for his subject, "The New Duty of the School." He spoke of the changes in the home life of the pupils, of shop made homes rather than home made homes, etc., showing conclusively that the new home conditions does place a very important new duty in the hands of the school. Dr. Vincent spoke for an hour and it is seldom that one will have the privilege of hearing so many good things in so short a time.

For the evening entertainment, Dr. Vincent gave his lecture "The Mind of the Mob." The house was crowded and the lecture was appreciated.

On Saturday morning Dr. Vincent took for his subject, "Social Geography." He spoke of the changes which condensing of population will inevitably bring and offered many valuable suggestions as to how these changed conditions may be met.

Commissioner Babcock of Emmet county, took for his subject, "Some Rural School Problems." We all know that the rural school presents many problems to the teacher and those who listened to Commissioner Babcock were convinced that he had solutions for some of them.

Supt. L. A. Butler of Central Lake, took for his subject "Is the Course Overcrowded." Principal J. E. Marshall of Petoskey, and Supt. H. E. Bell of Boyne led the discussion. In the mind of the writer, this is one of the most important subjects that the rural teacher meets with. With so many grades to handle and so many subjects to teach, truly the rural teacher has a busy time.

It seemed to be the opinion of the gentlemen who discussed the subject, however, that the course does not really contain much that ought not to be there and in fact that there are other things that might profitably be added. They did bring out the fact, however, that many parts of some of the subjects now taught may be safely and even profitably eliminated. No hint was given that any branch should be dropped from the course but teachers were shown very plainly that they could safely drop from their daily work many unpractical parts which now take up valuable time and are in reality of no use, and that this time could be used in developing the portions of the subjects that were practical, and that the student could use in his every day life.

To the rural teachers it seemed that this subject and its discussion was one of the most interesting in the program. Time is one of the most important things a rural teacher has to deal with, and any

FOOD FOR SUGAR BEETS

Experiments With Plant Food for Beets by M. Saillard, of France.

Michigan Methods Similar to Those Employed in Europe.

M. Saillard, director of the laboratory of the French Sugar Makers' association, has conducted a series of experiments, extending over a period of five years, upon the sugar beet. The work was conducted in all parts of the French sugar beet regions and some of his conclusions are: (1) The beets which are richest in sugar, are poorest in soda. He thinks that in many cases too much nitrate of soda has been employed. The soda tends to decrease the sugar content. (2) That in the majority of cases the use of from 130 to 160 pounds of sulphate or muriate of potash per acre was profitable. In addition to this the beet requires available nitrogen and phosphoric acid. (3) That the beets should receive per acre from 130 to 160 pounds of muriate or sulphate of potash, from 250 to 150 pounds per acre of acid phosphate, and the equivalent of the nitrogen in from 175 to 250 pounds per acre of nitrate of soda, part, at least of this nitrogen may be in form of blood, or ammonic sulfate. There is no economy in using less than from 130 to 160 pounds of potash salts, as this is the element that principally favors the elaboration of the sugar in the beet.

The French use their fertilizer material separately to a large extent, while the American practice is to use the ready mixed goods. The amount recommended above would be the equivalent of from 6 to 900 pounds per acre of a fertilizer containing about 4 per cent of nitrogen, 7 per cent of phosphoric acid and 10 per cent of potash.

In the sugar beet region of Michigan and Wisconsin the use of fertilizer has increased very rapidly and the formulas are not very different from the above, with the exception of the nitrogen, the Americans using only about one-half as much nitrogen as is recommended by the French. This perhaps, is to be expected because the American lands have been under cultivation for a much shorter period of time and their supply of nitrogen is, perhaps somewhat greater.

It is interesting to notice that the American formulas and the French recommends are very much alike, in regard to the amounts of phosphoric acid and potash required, and the extensive experiments in Michigan last year which were made with a 2-7-10 formula indicate that this formula increases both the yield and the sugar content in the majority of cases. The Michigan experiments were upon the use of 500 pounds per acre of the formula.

HELD COUNTY CONVENTION

W. C. T. U. at East Jordan Tuesday and Wednesday of Last Week.

Good Attendance, Strong Program—List of New County Officers.

The county convention of the W. C. T. U. was held at the Presbyterian church at East Jordan Tuesday and Wednesday of last week, delegates being present from the Charlevoix, Boyne City and East Jordan unions. Mrs. Howard, of Petoskey, district president, and Mrs. Calkins, of Battle Creek, state president, were also in attendance.

Reports showed that all the unions in the county were in a flourishing condidition. The following list of officers were elected:

President Mrs. M. E. Heston, Charlevoix.

Vice president at large Jessie C. Grosenbaugh, Boyne City.

Corresponding secretary Sarah M. Wilkinson, Charlevoix.

Recording secretary Mrs. A. M. Burdick, Charlevoix.

Treasurer—Mrs. M. H. Rothenland, East Jordan.

WORLD'S CHAMPION IN ACTION

Allie Moore Gave an Exhibition on Roller Skates Monday Night.

Allie Moore, the famous roller skater of this city, gave an exhibition on roller skates at the Charlevoix Theater last Monday night before a large crowd.

The first on the program was a waltz which was good. The next was skating the length of the hall on the toe of his skate and then on the heel. He then raced against little Ray Hamilton, thirteen year old son of Sam Hamilton, endeavoring to make two laps to Ray's one, for fifteen laps. In this he did not succeed, the little fellow holding his own well. Moore skated the thirty-five laps necessary to finish out the mile, covering it in about four minutes and twenty seconds. This was good time considering the size of the hall. His record for the mile is two minutes and thirty seconds. The last was a jump of six feet over some chairs. This was a rather diffjcult feat.

Moore said after the exhibition that Ray made the best showing of any skater under fifteen years old that he has raced against.

Moore left Tuesday morning for Chicago where he will fill skating dates beginning May 2.

FROM DR. W. E. HESTON

Letter to Her Mother Describes a Visit to Pompei.

Very Interesting Description of the Relics of the Long Ago.

Dr. W. E. Heston wrote from Naples, Italy, April 3rd. "Our hotel faces the most beautiful bay in the world. The guests are mostly American. Wednesday afternoon we visited the aquarium, which ought to be world famous, it is so wonderful. I never saw such beautiful and strange creatures, or dreamed they could exist outside the imagination. Thursday Miss McKinzie and I climbed Vesuvious the last bit having to be done on foot. Every now and then a gust of icy wind would nearly sweep us off our feet and I'm sure if we had not clung to our guides we would have been swept into the depths below. Cinders and ashes were blowing continually into our eyes and cutting our faces. Within the crater there are little burning places here and there looking as if just getting up steam for a terrific explosion. Compared with the outside the inside of the crater seems very smooth, though in reality it is serrated and seamed. All the peaks around are brown and barren covered with ashes and cinders.

The piece of lava, which I took as a souvenir, was hot to the touch, though the day was freezing cold. Coming down we went over our shoe tops in ashes.

Today we visited Poupeii. Excavations are still going on. The last house exhumed being a handsome one with noble pillars and spacious rooms. The ruts in the paved streets worn by chariot wheels more than 1900 years, the place on the well curb worn down by the pressure of many hands so long ago gave one a feeling of violation and meanness to those long dead. Bulwer Lyttons "Last Days of Pompeii" pictures it perfectly.

Tomorrow morning I spend at the museum and take the afternoon train to Rome.

Clean Up Friday, May 1.

The League of Michigan municipalities has recommended that Friday, May 1, be made a general cleaning up day by all the cities of the state. Let Charlevoix get into line with the rest of them. Remember the date.

COMMITTEES ARE NAMED

And Appointments Made by Mayor Rose Monday Night

FOR VACANCIES ON CITY BOARDS

John Ackert, Albert Holmes, Board of Works, Frank Wood Health

The Building of Fire Escapes on Theater and Central School Recommended—Supplies to be Purchased.

The Board of Aldermen, Monday night had a very busy session.

The committee on fire and prevention, recommended the purchase of a list of supplies for the firemen as follows: 500 feet of hose, 12 sou westers, 12 rubber coats, 2 lanterns, 1 nozzel tip, 1 hook and the board ordered the purchase.

They also recommended that the Charlevoix Theater be made more safe, in case of fire, by the widening of the stairway leading from the gallery, the extending of the stairway under the stage three feet into the body of the building; the building of a balcony along the entire east side of the building, with four fire escapes leading thereto, besides other minor changes.

They also recommended that a fire escape be placed from the second story of the Central school building. Laid over until next meeting.

The bond of John Cook, city treasurer, was accepted.

The committee on streets reported that a grade had been established on Upright avenue, from State street to Grant street, and was on file at the office of the city clerk for inspection.

Also that applications for the sweeping of Bridge street had been received from Jacob Weyburn, Robert Reid, John Dougherty and M. Babcock, referred to committee.

Bids for the running of the city stone quarry were received from Thomas Russell and E. S. Stacks and referred to the committee on streets.

A petition was received from the majority of the property owners interested for the building of a plank sidewalk, three feet wide, on the east side of May street, from Hulburt street to Staver road. Action will be taken at next meeting.

The council decided that all saloon bonds must be surety bonds the coming year.

The action of the Board of Cemetery trustees, in laying out lots and narrowing Bryant avenue, was brought up and the trustees will be asked by what authority such action was taken.

The resignation of J. L. Crane as a member of Board of Health was received and accepted.

The Mayor made the following appointments, which were confirmed. Member board of public works, full term, to succeed L. D. Bartholomew, John Ackert. Member board of public works, to fill vacancy caused by resignation of Frank M. Glassford, Albert Holmes. Member board of health, to succeed J. L. Crane, Frank E. Wood.

With all the advantages of youth, education and good looks and no vocation other the enjoyment of wealth, the hero of our present story chose rather than to sacrifice his ease and comfort on the altar of his duty as a citizen. His city called him to save her from spoliation and corruption, and he responded to the call. To lure him from the path of right came the seductions of love and the claims of a revered parent's memory, allied with the mighty forces at the command of political and financial malefactors. The firmness with which "the man of the hour," singled out for the highest post in a great municipality by those who saw in him only a weakling and a tool, resisted the very forces that had elevated him for their own purposes to official power will be an inspiration to the reader, as it has been an uplifting force in the minds of thousands who have witnessed its theatrical representation.

CHAPTER I.

The country house of Charles Wainwright, financier, topped the ridge overlooking the water in a climax of architectural hideousness and extravagant cost. The grounds of Charles Wainwright, financier, stretched out into countless acres of landscape gardening. The whole estate of Charles Wainwright, financier, eclipsed those of his neighbors in the fashionable suburb, even as the name of Charles Wainwright, financier, eclipsed almost every other in the city world where money ruled as undisputed and absolute monarch.

Even when he turned from the bustle of the city and fellow money builders and sought for a space the simple life on his $2,500,000 country place, with its modest equipment of forty-one servants, Mr. Wainwright so far carried into the wilds the atmosphere of business and the burden of other men's wealth as to have a very complete little stock-broker room fitted up adjoining his big library and to keep a man night and day at his private wire.

To-day we want to talk to you about "Catarrh cures"

During the past few months we have been publishing what some of our good friends have called "heart-to-heart talks" on patent medicines.

That name suits us all right—"heart-to-heart talks" is just what we have intended. There can't be anything more serious to a sick man or sick woman than his ailment and the remedies he or she takes to cure it.

Our talks have been "heart-to-heart." Every word we have printed has been written in absolute earnestness and sincerity, and judging from what our customers tell us, we have not been talking in vain. We are convinced that our frankness has been appreciated, and that our suggestions have been welcomed—which naturally encourages us to continue.

To-day, and perhaps for some time to come, we want to talk about that big class of remedies known generally as "catarrh cures."

Broadly speaking these are the patent medicines that have been the chief targets for the attacks of the "Ladies' Home Journal," "Collier's Weekly" and other magazines which are waging such a lively warfare against patent medicine abuses.

As we have pointed out in previous talks, it is not our business to pass judgment on the crusade of these well-known, highly-respected publications. The public alone must be the judge and jury. Our business, as we see it, is to carry in stock a complete line of patent medicines, and to sell those medicines at the lowest possible price.

We sell hundreds—yes, thousands of bottles of so-called "catarrh cures," and know nothing of their ingredients. The manufacturers advertise them, the public demands them; we order them from the manufacturers, and sell them at the lowest price. That is absolutely as far as our knowledge goes. The manufacturer keeps his formula a secret. It may be good, or it may not—we don't know, and we have no means of finding out.

Naturally, we would rather sell a remedy that we know is right—that we can back up with all our reputation for honesty and square-dealing.

And wouldn't you rather buy that kind of a remedy? Wouldn't you rather hold us responsible than to hold no one responsible? We are right here, right where you can get at us every day in the week, right where one false move on our part will bring upon us your condemnation, the loss of your friendship, your patronage, your influence. Can we afford to tell you anything that you will learn later is not absolutely true?

Are you not safer in taking our word for the merits of an article, than you are to rely on the printed statement of a patent medicine manufacturer, whom you never even saw and probably never will?

Common sense most emphatically tells you that we cannot afford to depart one hair's breadth from the rigid truth.

None of us can deny that there is such a disease known as "catarrh." Those who have it, or who have had it, know that it is one of the hardest diseases to cure.

Perhaps the worst thing about catarrh is its prevalence. Almost everyone—especially in a climate like ours—has catarrh in some form or another. That is what has made the "catarrh cure" business so profitable. There are so many thousands of cases of the disease and it is so hard to cure, that the patent medicine manufacturers have reaped a harvest in preparing remedies that appeal to this large class of sufferers.

One of the most serious things about catarrh is that it breaks down the system, so that the sufferer becomes a prey to other diseases. This fact has led the proprietors of so many "catarrh cures" to advertise their remedies as a specific for almost every disease under the sun.

We have ONE catarrh cure that we are willing to say to you: "We know this is all right. Take it home and use it with the full assurance that if it does not cure you, you can bring it back to us and we will promptly refund your money." That catarrh cure is

TRADE NAME

MUCU-TONE

There is no guess work with us on Rexall Mucu-Tone. We know what it is made of.

Not only do we know, but we will give you a copy of the formula.

There is no secret about any Rexall remedy—we make them—one thousand of us leading druggists all over America—in our great co-operative laboratories at Boston, Mass. We own the laboratories, and everything in them, and we operate them just as skillfully as our combined brains and money will let us, and just as honestly as honest men know how.

The Ingredients of Mucu-Tone

The chief ingredients of Mucu-Tone are Gentian, Cubebs, Cascara Sagrada, Glycerine, and Sarsaparilla.

Gentian is recognized in medicine as one of the greatest tonics ever discovered. It is the foundation on which Mucu-Tone is built. Gentian combines in high degree the tonic powers of all the known "bitters," with none of the disadvantages applying to them.

Cubebs have long been recognized as a specific in the treatment of all catarrhal conditions. Its action is prompt and its benefits almost invariable. In whatever part of the body the inflamed or diseased condition of the mucous membrane exists, the use of Cubebs has been recommended by the best physicians for many generations.

Cascara Sagrada is especially introduced for its necessary laxative properties.

The combination of these with Glycerine and Sarsaparilla makes Mucu-Tone a remedy that attacks catarrh from every point, gradually restores and rebuilds the diseased tissues to their former health and strength, promotes digestion and creates a normal appetite. Large trial bottle, 50c.

For Sale Only at This Store.

How can you know whether or not you have catarrh?

Well, here are the symptoms that usually indicate its presence. Check them over, and if you have any of them, try a bottle of Rexall Mucu-Tone.

KANSAS CITY TO NEW MEXICO

Thomas Cummings Writes of His Journey Through Four States.

A Close Observer—He Tells of the Advantages and Drawbacks.

Alamagordo, New Mexico, April 6.
Dear Editor:

As I have been asked by the COURIER to write and a number of my friends have asked me to write to the COURIER, so they could all hear from me, I will give what information I think will be of interest after I left Kansas City. I could not write anything I think would be of interest until then.

I left Kansas City at 11:00 a. m. March 20. Most of the farmers were at work plowing and putting in their spring crops. I learned from some of the passengers that some farmers had their corn planted. Almost every farm had a field of winter wheat most of which was looking fine.

I got to Bucklin at 11:00 p. m. I got acquainted with a real estate man at the hotel where I stopped over night, and he gave me his card, showing he had twenty thousand acres of land for sale. He said he was taking Mr. Ford out to show him lands and invited me to go with them. At Dodge City we got a team and rig and Mr. Horner showed us a large part of three counties, Gray, Feanie and Ford. We went through his cattle ranch. He has about five hundred head, all looking fine. They raise a large amount of winter wheat in this part of the state. Mr. Horner has a large tract of very fine wheat land, the soil is a dark chocolate clay. Land sells from ten to fifty dollars per acre. Dodge City is a very nice looking town of about 3,800.

Our next stop was a Mead, a village of about 1,500; the land is about the same quality as at Dodge City, except in the artesian valleys, where it sells from fifty to one hundred fifty dollars, where they can get the artesian wells.

I went from there to Libreal, a prosperous town of about 3,000. One of the real estate men had eight quarter sections which he showed me. He wants one thousand dollars a quarter section. It was very level chocolate clay land, almost too level, I think.

On our way out to the land, we drove through two towns, Springfield and Kingsley. Eighteen years ago they claim these were prosperous little towns of about fifteen hundred inhabitants each. The Rock Island R. R. was laid out through both. They got into a fight over the county seat, fifteen men were killed, the county seat was taken away from them and they lost the Rock Island R. R. also. Now all that is to be seen of the towns is the brick school house, a building like the Charlevoix county court house, and the trenches, where the water plant had been taken out, now nearly level.

I went to Texhoma next. A real estate man drove me out to look at his Oklahoma lands which he had for sale. His land was very fine wheat land, price ten to sixteen hundred dollars per quarter section. We drove about sixty-five miles with a team of broncho's and they seemed as free to go at night as when we started.

My next stop was at Delhart, a flourishing town of about four thousand. Land is higher here on account of the boom in farming lands in the Pan-handle. I went from there to Maravisa N. Mex., a town of about five hundred. All the government land has been filed on for about thirty miles back from Maravisa.

My next stop was at Perry, a new place just starting up, one grocery store, one hardware and a post-office. The land here has all been government land but has about all been filed on for seven miles around. I went out with Mr. Perry seven miles in the country. The land is sandy and drifts with the wind.

I next took the train to Tupancarry, a town of about four thousand, apparently in a prosperous condition. The land in the valley has been filed on for about thirty-five miles back. Mr. Welsh and I climbed to the top of Tupancarry mountain, four hundred feet higher than the valley and got a fine view of the valleys. It was all red land around Tupancarry and almost every quarter section had a small patch in crop. It looked from the top of the mountain as if the valleys were all covered with red blankets, a very beautiful sight.

My next stop was at Alamagordo. This is a very pretty town with park and lawns. They have thirty miles of shade trees, if they were all in a line, all from twenty to thirty feet high. The population is about four thousand. The land in this valley is all government land, but has about all been filed on for ten miles back. The fruit, which I have seen growing in this valley is apples, peaches, apricots, figs, prunes, plums and pears. All appear to do well. The land is mixed, some heavy land and some sand and some sand mixed with the clay, mostly red land.

There are two towns west of Alamagordo to be surveyed next July. There are some settlers going on it now. The average rainfall here is fifteen to eighteen weeks a year.

Perhaps it would be of some interest to my friends to know some of the disadvantages of these states. I have been trying to give both sides; as near as I can find out. They have local hailstorms in Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas, which destroy crops entirely, and very high winds and cyclones. I asked Mr. Horner, the first real estate man I was with, if they were troubled with hail storms destroying their crops. He said there would be strips of country, where the crops would be baited out, but those who were afraid got their crops insured. I asked him if they were ever troubled with cyclones. He said once in a while. I wanted to know if they would destroy buildings. He said you could never tell what what they would do. He had been here ten years and had never seen but one, which went by eighty rods from him, but broke two posts in his ranch. He followed it. It went through a town and every building it struck was torn to pieces. An iron safe in one building, weighing 1,000 pounds, was carried twenty rods.

Mr. Ford said he had been in Kansas since 1855 and had never seen but two cyclones. They don't have the hail storms, cyclones and high winds around Almagordo, it protected by the mountains.

This is perhaps all my readers will care about for the present so I will close.

A Prescription for Constipation.

Eminent medical authorities agree that ninety per cent of their patients suffer from ailments due to clogged bowel (Constipation.)

The bowels become clogged with impurities and body poisons, causing biliousness, colds, stomach trouble, headache, rheumatism, deranged liver and kidneys, etc.

A Tonic Laxative is prescribed in nearly every case. Those who need a laxative may use this prescription with the assurance that no harmful results will follow its use. It has been given to the Public in tablet form and is known as Iron-ox Laxative Iron-ox Tablets) and are put up in aluminum pocket cases.

The formula is wrapped around the case. The action of each ingredient is explained; that you may understand why Laxative Iron-ox Tablets are the safest Laxative to use; they strengthen the bowels, aid digestion, and keep the liver and kidneys healthy and active. We have secured the selling agency for Laxative Iron-ox Tablets and recommend them to our Customers. F. N. Chapel & Co.

Learning by Experience.

Apropos of the movement to secure prohibition for the District of Columbia, a newspaper correspondent says:

Prohibition laws cause many to reform, but a few of the lowest class "move on" to the place of open saloons. Washington is a great gateway to the prohibition south and so it is being flooded with bums—white and black fleeing from territory that is proving most uncomfortably "dry." * * * Thugs and footpads abound; people are assaulted and robbed by the score on main streets, at early hours; the city is rich in police—regular, park, capitol, crossing and special, and is bounded on the west by cavalry, on the south by artillery and on the east by marines. Yet the trouble grows. "Close the saloons," cries Representative Sims, "and crime will decrease with startling rapidity." Segregation has failed because you cannot segregate the fruits of the saloons. The slum gin-mill yields an assault in front of the British embassy. In self-defense, the District must prohibit.

This prohibition sentiment is not a wave to ebb again, but a growth the growth of a century's of suffering and tears. We are learning, at last, to smash the rattlesnake's head with a club, rather than to shout off the rattles on its tail. From Union Signal of March 26.

Rev. P. A. Baker, general superintendent of the American Anti-Saloon League, addressing a great audience at Toronto, Canada, said: "Let me pay a word of tribute to the W. C. T. U. There is no stronger arm for progress and betterment than a splendid, consecrated woman. When we wanted to sleep, they would not let us. They stirred up the dead sea of our indifference; they kept this question before us and called upon the manhood of America to wake up."

'And, commenting on the statement of a governor of one of our states to the effect that "This republic is safe, because we have universal education and universal suffrage," he added, "There is no universal suffrage when the intelligent womanhood of a county can only serve coffee and pray in a local option election. Union Signal, March 5.

AT the teacher's institute last week the same old complaint was heard from the officials and teachers in attendance that they could not get the parents and patrons of the schools to attend in any large numbers.

A splendid program was arranged, the topics which were discussed being of vital interest to every parent who has a child attending the schools of this county.

It was advertised so everybody knew of the program, and a special appeal was made for patrons to attend, yet the number was very small. No wonder at times our school officials and teachers become disappointed in their work.

THIS week has witnessed the appearance of a new candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor—Amos Musselman, of Grand Rapids. If Mr. Musselman consents to enter the field, others may look out, for he has all the qualities of a strong candidate, business ability, broad mindedness, and friends without number. Heres hoping.

FUNERAL HELD FRIDAY

Of George Smith, Who Died in Alberta April 12.

Died at Medicine Hat Hospital, Alberta, George W. Smith, of Norwood. Born at Ft. Gratiot, Mich., September 6, 1860, died April 12, 1908.

His brother Norman brought him home and he was laid to rest Friday in Norwood cemetery beside his father and near his sister, after years of suffering borne patiently.

He leaves his mother, sister and three brothers to mourn his loss.

The family feels very grateful to the friends for their kindness to them at this sad time.

REED CITY CONVENTION

Elects King of Alma and Brown of Big Rapids Delegates

Attendance was Large. Every County but Roscommon Represented.

The Republican district convention, to elect delegates to the national convention, held at Reed City last Wednesday was well attended, every county but Roscommon, being represented. George Glerman, of Osceola, was chairman, D. F. Meech, of Charlevoix, secretary. The names of H. C. Hull, of Traverse City, and Francis King, of Alma, were presented to the convention, for first delegate, King winning by a vote of 41 to 33, the northern counties standing solid for Hull.

Judge Michael Brown, of Big Rapids, was chosen second delegate by acclamation, as were the alternates, R. M. Belby, of Missaukee, and Nathan French, of Kalkaska. Both delegates pledged their support to William H. Taft for president.

While the northern delegates feel a trifle disapointed over the result they know they were defeated with honor.

WILL HOLD OPEN MEETING.

Historical Society Will Hold their Last Meeting Friday.

The Charlevoix Historical Society holds its last meeting this spring next Friday night, April 24, with Mr. and Mrs. Geo. McCartney, with the following program:

Music, piano solo—Miss Amy Harahn.

Current Events—Mrs. Mary Heston.

Paper, "Modern Art and Artists"—Mrs. J. L. Crane.

Music, vocal solo—Mrs. E. A. Jefferies.

Paper, "King Leopold and the Congo Free State"—Dr. F. H. Wilkinson.

INTERMISSION

Vocal duet—Mrs. W. H. Woodley and Dr. F. H. Wilkinson.

Paper, "Problems of the far East"—Judge F. W. Mayne.

This is an open meeting and all interested are invited to attend.

suggestion that will eliminate what is useless from the work and add to the time for the more practical parts, will prove valuable to the teacher who is obliged to handle from three to eight grades.

We believe that, as we have said before, this was the best meeting of the kind ever held in the county, and that no teacher who attended and listened to the discussions could help being benefitted and carrying to her work many helpful ideas. We are obliged, however, to find the same fault with this one that we have with others—a lack of interest on the part of the patrons. True we had a few of them with us, but the number was small. Why they cannot be induced to attend these meetings is a mystery to the writer. I am certain their presence would please the teachers and I am also sure that the discussions would interest the patrons. If parents were better acquainted with some of the problems that the teacher has to solve, I am inclined to believe that in many cases they would be more patient with teachers and would be more willing to assist the teacher in managing the boy, rather than to assist the boy in managing the teacher, as is often the case.

OLD OFFICERS RE-ELECTED.

Lecture Course Ended Friday Night With Lecture by Dr Vincent.

The Lecture Course ended Friday night, last, with a lecture by Dr. George E. Vincent. As in all the numbers of the course, the attraction was fully up to the published announcements.

Previous to the lecture the officers of the citizen's committee made reports, showing a very satisfactory condition of the affairs of the committee. So well pleased were those present with the work of the gentlemen in charge of the course, that they were all re elected by acclamation, as follows:

President, Rev. H. A. Putnam; vice president, I. Z. Merriam; secretary, A. L. Fitch; treasurer, W. H. Woodley.

The officers are already making arrangements for next year's course and hope to secure Missouri's famous governor, Folk.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's catarrh cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's catarrh cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer one hundred dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

ECZEMA

Cured in less than four weeks.

Those who have had experience with this stubborn disease can hardly believe at first that Wonderful Dream Salve can and does cure Eczema.

There is no doubt about the matter whatever. A great many letters are on file in our office from grateful patients, telling of the quick and easy way in which Wonderful Dream Salve has removed all traces of this torturing skin affliction.

Mr. John T. Kealey, a well-known business man, located in the Stevens Bldg., Detroit, Mich., was recently cured of a bad case of Eczema of fourteen years' standing. After treating with many doctors and taking many remedies without relief, Mr. Kealey was induced to try Wonderful Dream Salve, and in four weeks was entirely cured. He says:

"I certainly consider this a remarkable cure, inasmuch as I have spent hundreds of dollars in the fourteen years of annoyance with this troublesome itching skin ailment. I have since the cure of my case heard of other cures, some of them even more remarkable than mine, which go toward demonstrating the value of Wonderful Dream Salve as a great skin healer."

If you have Eczema, why not try a box of Wonderful Dream Salve. If it fails, your druggist will refund your money. Isn't that fair enough? Keep it in your home for Chilblains, Chapped hands, Piles, Cuts, Burns, Frost-bites, Boils and Sores of any kind. You will never use anything else. 25c a box at your druggist or mailed prepaid direct.

Notice of Mortgage Sale.

Whereas, Mary L. Jones, and Walter Jones, husband and wife, of Melrose township, Charlevoix county, Michigan, made and executed a certain mortgage bearing date the 14th day of October, A. D. 1898, to Gerhard Fochtman, of Petoskey, Michigan, which was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of the county of Charlevoix on the 17th day of October, A. D. 1898 at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, in liber 28 of mortgages on page 441;

And whereas, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage is the sum of Two Hundred and 14 100 dollars, and no suit or proceeding has been instituted at law to recover the debt now remaining secured thereby, or any part thereof;

And whereas, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by said mortgage, whereby the power of sale contained therein has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance thereof, and of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the east front door of the court house in said county of Charlevoix, on the twenty-third day of July next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to-wit: The south half (s½) of the north east quarter (ne¼) of section eighteen (18) town thirty-two (32) north, of range six (6) west; and the north west quarter (nw¼) of the south east quarter (se¼) of section eighteen (18) town thirty-two (32) north, of range six (6) west.

Mortgage Foreclosure.

Whereas, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage dated the 1st day of April, 1902, executed by Adolph Kirchner and Mary A. Kirchner, his wife to Citizens' State Bank of Whitewater, Wisconsin, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Charlevoix, Michigan, on liber thirty-seven of Mortgages on pages forty and forty one, on the 27th day of April, 1902 at nine o'clock in the forenoon. And whereas, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of one thousand four hundred fifteen and sixty-five one-hundredths (1,415.65) dollars, the principal, interest, taxes and insurance, and the further sum of fifty dollars as an attorney fee, stipulated for in said mortgage, and which is the whole amount claimed to be due on said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted either at law or equity, to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the east front door of the court house in said county of Charlevoix, on the twenty-third day of July next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to-wit: The south half (s½) of the north east quarter (ne¼) of section eighteen (18) town thirty-two (32) north, of range six (6) west; and the north west quarter (nw¼) of the south east quarter (se¼) of section eighteen (18) town thirty-two (32) north, of range six (6) west.

CHAPTER I—Continued.

Charles Wainwright, financier, was a bachelor. No obese or statuesque wife carried about with her a portable advertisement of his wealth in the shape of fabulously valuable jewels or maple his name renowned in opera box, Newport cabin or Lenox cottage. His only brother had died years before, leaving a mere beggarly million dollars or so and two children to divide it. Those children—Dallas, a strikingly pretty and still more strikingly independent girl of twenty-four, and Perry, a delightfully lazy, lovable lad of twenty-one—lived with their uncle, who managed their affairs, let them go pretty much as they chose and—as they were more or less ornamental and entertaining and decidedly popular—was rather fond of them.

The trio had passed a pleasant, uneventful month at the big house on the hill early in the summer of 19—, when a day dawned whereon fate booked a number of decidedly interesting fateful happenings to occur.

Wainwright himself was up bellmes and at work in his library, poring over market reports, cipher telegrams and a dozen other details of deals which his simple life cult did not prevent him from operating at long range. With him was his secretary, Thompson, a pallid, earnest looking young fellow, whose unobtrusive efficiency had long since won the financier's admiration.

This morning affairs in the financial world had gone more than ordinarily to Mr. Wainwright's liking. Moreover, a paragraph in one of the city papers that had caught his eyes and set his lean gray face to twitching with as near an approach to a smile as the great man ever permitted. Altogether he was in an unwontedly genial mood, and some of his good nature so far expanded as to include his busy secretary.

"Thompson," he remarked as the last batch of correspondence was cleared away, "you're looking pale. Do I work you too hard?"

"No, indeed, sir," replied the secretary, with a promptitude that had something almost slavish in it.

"Feeling all right?" went on Wainwright. "You need more exercise. Why don't you get out of doors oftener?"

"The work, sir"—

"Get another man to help you do the telegraph part of it, then. I"—

"Thank you, sir. You are very kind indeed; but, if it's just the same to you, I'd rather handle it all myself. I hope the work's perfectly satisfactory, sir?"

"Perfectly, Thompson. You're the only employee I have who seems to love work for work's sake. Seen anything of Mr. Gibbs this morning?"

"No, sir. I don't believe he's up yet. Coming he—such a late train last night, you know, sir, and"—

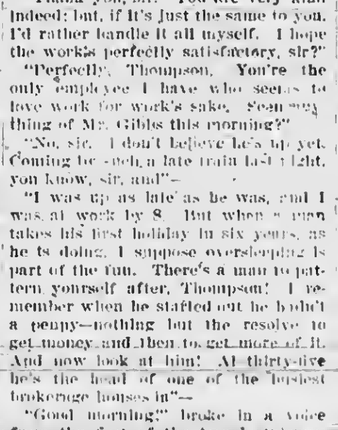
"I was up as late as he was, and I was at work by 8. But when a man takes his first holiday in six years, as he is doing, I suppose oversleeping is part of the fun. There's a man to pattern yourself after, Thompson! I remember when he started out he hadn't a penny—nothing but the resolve to get money and then to get more of it. And now look at him! At thirty-five he's the head of one of the busiest brokerage houses in"—

"Good morning!" broke in a voice from the foot of the broad stairway across the hall. "Sorry to be so late. Do you know how the market is?"

"It's opened even stronger than I hoped," said Wainwright. "Take a look at these dispatches and see for yourself. Had your breakfast?"

"Yes, thanks," answered the newcomer, a well groomed, stockily built man, lounging into the rooms, with a nod at Thompson, who discreetly withdrew into the adjoining office. "Seems queer to have a whole day away from the office. I hardly know what to do with so much spare time."

"It's the everyday hard work that's put you where you are today, Gibbs.



Scott Gibbs.

They've been hammering me for years and attributing all sorts of low motives to me. As long as the law doesn't interfere I'm going to get all I can. So are you. So is every sane man. As long as it can be done without any fuss or shouting. A mosquito could bite twice as often if only he didn't sing a song about it. By the way, have you seen the papers?"

"No. Anything new?"

"One thing at least that ought to interest you. Listen to this: 'The engagement of the niece of a world celebrated financier to a prominent young broker is about to be announced. The young lady and her brother are orphans and are not only their famous uncle's wards, but also the sole heirs to his vast wealth. They are summering at his magnificent country place, where the fortunate broker is said to spend every one of the very few moments left vacant by his daring stock manipulations.' No mistaking that, eh, Gibbs?"

"It—it ought to bring matters to a head, I should think."

"It certainly should," assented Wainwright. "In fact, it's such an audacious master stroke that I've a notion you may possibly have been at the bottom of it. Now, confess. Weren't you?"

"Well, of course I didn't exactly write it. But"—

"Clever boy! Dallas will have to show her hand now or never. She's kept you on the anxious seat too long as it is. That's the reason I asked you up here for the day. She must settle it today if I can manage it. She knows how anxious I am for her to accept you."

"But I'm sometimes afraid she does not care for me."

"Then make her care. As long as she cares for no one else you can persuade her to believe she adores you."

"How do you know? You're a bachelor."

"Perhaps that's how I know. And she doesn't care for any one else."

"You're sure? There's Bennett, for instance."

"Alwyn Bennett? Why, absurd! She's known him all her life. They're just good friends; nothing more. He's our nearest neighbor here, and it's only natural. Besides, he isn't the sort of man she wants. He's an idler. She likes men who have made something of themselves—like yourself, for instance. So make yourself easy on that score. If Bennett loved her, he'd have proposed long ago."

"Not necessarily. He's not a man to get started easily, but once started and"—

"Then don't start him. Go in and win. What is it, Thompson?"

The secretary entered from the office with a dispatch.

"There's an answer, sir," said he. "Here's a—a blank."

Wainwright read the message, scribbled a few lines and handed the reply to the secretary, who hurried out with it.

"So Thompson is not only a secretary, but a telegraph operator as well," remarked Gibbs as the clicking of a Morse instrument sounded from the office.

"He's everything," replied Wainwright. "He's a wonder. He heard me say I wished I had a good operator up here whom I could trust, so without a word to me he goes and learns telegraphy. I've had him nine years now and tested and tempted him fifty ways, but he's as true as steel, the one employee I ever had that I could trust. By the way, the message he just brought me ought to interest you. It tells me Borough Street railway stock is offered now at 63. I've given orders for your office to take all they can get hold of at that price quietly and without making any bids or attracting attention. That'll be the biggest deal of my career if I can carry it through. You understand your part perfectly—to take for yourself 20 per cent of the deal, handle the whole affair on the floor and not buy any of the stock for your own private account? Stick to that and there's just one thing that can possibly block us."

"You mean the defeat of the present city administration this fall?"

"Just that, and I don't believe it will be beaten. The organization's solid as a rock. They have the police, the officeholders and"—

"But the people at large?"

"The people at large are sheep that like to be driven by the strongest shepherd. If they weren't, they'd have broken loose a century ago and run the city and the country to suit themselves. Just now Dick Horrigan happens to be the 'shepherd' who can make them go wherever he says."

"Shepherd and 'crook' combined, I should say," commented Gibbs, chuckling at his own feeble joke.

"I wouldn't let a speech like that get back to Horrigan if I were you," returned Wainwright dryly. "Your career might suffer. Nothing (except, maybe, gratitude) is so bad as humor for spoiling a man's chances in business or politics. A laugh costs more than people think. But, speaking of the election this fall, a reform wave or any change of city administration would smash our Borough Street railway deal. To offset that I've joined hands with Horrigan. If I can bring him to see things my way, he shall have cash enough to buy all the honest voters he needs. He's coming here this noon to talk things over with me. Phelan's coming too."

"Phelan? You mean the alderman of the Eighth? You'll have a pleasant little gathering. Perhaps you didn't know that Phelan and Horrigan have had a row and"—

"And that's why I'm bringing them together here today. I want to patch up their quarrel if I can. I need them both. Phelan's a useful man."

"But Horrigan is boss of the organization. If you have him on your side, why do you bother about getting Phelan too?"

"Yes, Horrigan is boss. He's fought his way up by bulldog tactics. He has no diplomacy—nothing but brute force. Now, Phelan has just as much force in his way, but he's as tricky as a fox too. I've known him ever since he was chief of police. He's a dangerous man. If he's against us, he can make trouble. I want him. He's"—

"Judge Newman!" announced the butler.

A whimsical frown crossed Wainwright's face, but cleared into a passably hospitable expression as a little gray haired man, with a solemn, weak face, trotted pompously in on the heels of the butler's announcement.

"Good morning, judge," said the host pleasantly. "You don't know Mr. Gibbs, I think, of Gibbs, Norton & Co.? Judge Newman is my next door neighbor on the left as you come from the station, Gibbs. You must have noticed the place—Queen Anne house, with"—

"Oh, he probably never gave it a glance," put in the judge. "A mere cottage, that's all. When a man with my meager judicial salary has a social position to keep up and four daughters that aren't married and—Charles, you can't realize what it means to have four unmarried"—

"Nn, I cannot," assented Wainwright quickly, "and from present signs I'm not likely to. I hope Mrs. Newman is well?"

The little judge's face grew doubly important.

"Extremely well, thank you," said he. "A wonderful woman! You've met her, Mr. Gibbs?

No? But of course you have often heard—By the way, Charles, it was she who told me to drop in on you this morning. You see—I—she"—

"I thought you could say a word to Mr. Horrigan in my behalf."

Mrs. Newman is most anxious for me to come up for reelection this fall. Mr. Horrigan, to whom I broached the subject, doesn't quite seem to see it that way. He doesn't want to have me renominated. I thought perhaps, as a personal favor to so old a friend, you might say a word to Mr. Horrigan in my behalf."

"Of course I'll do what little I can. Horrigan will be here today. Drop in a little after noon and I'll tell you how my intervention turns out."

"Oh, thank you so much!" cried the judge, positively wriggling in his delight. "Mrs. Newman will be so pleased. And, by the way, won't you ask Perry why he never comes over to see my daughters? Please ask him if he won't. I'm sure Mrs. Newman would be glad if he did. Well, till afternoon, then. Good morning."

"Queer little rat!" observed Gibbs as the judge bowed himself out. "Mrs. Newman must be a marvel if all he says is"—

"She is a wonder as a husband trainer!" She's tamed him so he doesn't know his soul's his own. A good little man because he's never had a chance to be otherwise. I'll speak to Horrigan about him, though. It's always well to have a friend on the bench. One never can tell when"

But Gibbs was not listening. His heavy face had lighted with a sudden glow of eagerness. Turning to note the coast, Wainwright saw his niece Dallas descending the stairs. Involuntarily she halted as she reached the threshold and saw Gibbs. Then, her sense of hospitality triumphing over impulse, she came in and greeted her uncle's guest with some show of cordiality.

"Rendezvous, Dallas," said Wainwright as he prepared to go into his office. "Gibbs is here only for the day. I count on you to make his holiday as pleasant as you can." He glanced covertly at Gibbs, who had strolled to the window. Then the financier lowered his voice and said rapidly:

"Please be nice to Gibbs for my sake, Dallas. I do a great deal for you, and I don't often ask anything in return."

He patted her on the shoulder with a gesture meant to be affectionate and hurried into the adjoining office. Scarcely had the door closed when Gibbs turned from the window, crossed the room to where Dallas stood and in his usual direct fashion said:

"You saw that"

"The article in this morning's paper? Yes."

There was no confusion, no embarrassment, neither in the clear, girlish voice nor in the honest dark eyes that

Marlin

THE snow and rain, rushes and sand inseparable from duck and goose shooting never bother the hunter who is using a Marlin Model 19 12 gauge repeating shotgun, the best all-around gun in the market.

The ejection is from the side (an exclusive Marlin feature) and the closed breech bolt covers the action keeping out all foreign matter which is often clogs repeating shotguns.

The Marlin automatic safety prevents the accidental opening of the action when firing, and holds the breech shut until after ejection (in case of hang-fire); the solid top of frame is always a protection between your head and the cartridge.

The man who loves a gun needs the 1908 Marlin Book. It is full of gun information, has the answer to every gun question, contains 96 pages of fine matter. FREE for 2 stamps postage.

DO YOU GET UP WITH A LAME BACK?

Kidney Trouble Makes You Miserable

Almost everybody who reads the newspapers is sure to know of the wonderful cures made by Dr Kilmer's Swamp-Root the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It is the great medical triumph of the nineteenth century, discovered after years of scientific research by Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, and is wonderfully successful in promptly curing lame back, kidney, bladder, uric acid troubles and Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is not recommended for everything but if you have kidney, liver or bladder trouble it will be found just the remedy you need. It has been tested in so many ways, in hospital work, in private practice, among the helpless too poor to purchase relief and has proved so successful in every case that a special arrangement has been made by which all readers of this paper who have not already tried it, may have a sample bottle sent free by mail, also a book telling more about Swamp-Root and how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. The regular fifty cent and dollar sizes are sold by all good druggists.

Home of Swamp-Root.

Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

met Gibbs' so calmly. He went on with a shade less confidence.

"It annoys you?"

"Very much indeed."

"You can't feel worse about it than I do, Miss Wainwright. I"—

"You didn't write it yourself, then?"

"I? Of course not! How could you think"—

"I didn't; I just wondered. Please see that the rumor is denied."

"Why should I? You are going to marry me some day, aren't you, Dallas?"

"Have I ever given you reason to think I would?"

"You have let me keep on coming to see you. You have"—

"I have told you that I don't care for you the way you want me to. I have great admiration and respect for you, but that is all. And it is not enough to marry on."

"It is enough for me. If I have your admiration and respect to start on I'll soon make you love me."

"You would be satisfied with so little?"

"Yes. Knowing I could in time win more. You aren't the sort of girl who could marry a man if she didn't respect him—didn't admire him. You"—

"Perhaps I couldn't marry such a man. But perhaps I couldn't help loving him."

"Your chances for happiness would be better with me. Oh, Dallas, you know I love you! You've kept me waiting so long! Is it fair to either of us?"

"I hesitate because I want to be fair to us both. For that reason I must still ask you to wait."

"But I've waited so long! Tell me one thing: Is there any one else that"—

Steps, none too light, clattered down the stairs, and into the library bounced a lad in tennis flannels. He was tall, well set up and good to look at and seemed always to have stepped directly from a bandbox and to have had extremely recent acquaintance with much soap and water.

"Hello, Dallas!" he shouted, encompassing his sister in a bear hug. "How soon are"—

"Here's Mr. Gibbs, Perry," Dallas reminded him as she emerged, somewhat crumpled, from the embrace. "Have you"—

The lad's manner underwent a lightning and fetid change.

"Oh, good morning!" he grunted, with a curt nod to the visitor, and, picking up a paper, turned to the sporting sheet and became immersed in its contents, oblivious of all else.

"Mr. Gibbs is only spending one day with us," admonished Dallas, trying to soften her young brother's rudeness.

"Hope he'll enjoy it," came in absent tones from the depths of the paper.

Gibbs rose.

"I'm going out for a cigar on the terrace," said he. "I'll join you a little later."

"Perry," scolded Dallas as soon as the broker disappeared through the long windows, "how could you treat a guest of uncle's so rudely?"

"I don't like the fellow. And I don't like what I read in the paper today about him and you. Gee, what a measly paragraph! It's enough to make a white man want to dash out his brains with a cigarette. You're going to deny it in time for the retraction to get into tomorrow's papers, aren't you?"

"I—I'm not quite sure."

"Good Lord!" gasped Perry, slumping down in the nearest chair. "Are you crazy? Say, if you are looking for a real good, exciting match why don't you marry a Wall street stock report? It'd be better 'n Gibbs. If you marry him you'll only be an 'also ran' with the ticker tape and the market news. Oh, keep out of it, old girl! You owe something to your intelligent and distinguished little brother. If you've got to commit matrimony, marry some one I like, can't you?"

"I haven't given him a definite answer yet," admitted the girl, a little touched by the real feeling that underlay her brother's flippant words.

"That's good medicine. Confidence restored and the run on Brother's Emotions is checked. Next time you get the marry-bee I have a dandy candidate to suggest for the job."

"Who?" laughed Dallas, amused in spite of herself.

"Alwyn Bennett!"

"How silly!"

"Not on your life! Words of wisdom from the young—that's what it is. Go ahead and marry Bennett. Be a sport and say 'Yes.' Why don't you want to marry him?"

"For any one of a million reasons. First of all, he never asked me to."

"Maybe he's scared to. But if he wasn't stuck on you he wouldn't be hanging around here every day and going everywhere with you the way he does. I'll bet $9 he's"—

"Mr. Bennett!" the butler announced. Brother and sister stared guiltily at each other.

"Speaking of angels"— muttered Perry. But Dallas had already turned to welcome the visitor.

Alwyn Bennett at first glance had little to distinguish him from the average good looking young man about town. But a closer observer would have noticed a firmness about the shapely mouth, an honesty and strength of purpose about the eyes, a general air of latent power that lay unawakened beneath the jolly, purposeless exterior. No crisis had yet called forth any special manifestation of this power, and meanwhile Bennett was content to loaf through an existence that thus far had been decidedly pleasant. The only son of a widowed mother who adored and spoiled him, more than comfortably well off from the great fortune amassed by his dead father, possessed of a social position unassailable and equally fortunate in that mysterious quality that spells popularity—all these gifts had saved Alwyn Bennett the trouble of fighting life's battle or showing who might be within his reach.

"Good old Bennett!" hailed Perry. "We were just talking about you."

Dallas Wainwright.

"Good!" answered Alwyn. "Anything is better than indifference. What were you saying about me?"

"You tell him, Dallas!" grinned the boy.

"Be quiet!" whispered his sister, flushing with vexation.

"Then I'll tell for myself," went on Perry gleefully. "I was just asking her"—

Seeing the girl's confusion, Bennett quickly changed the subject by interrupting:

"My mother will be over here in a few minutes, Dallas. She is bringing along a guest of ours, who says you and she were chums at school—Miss Garrison."

"Cynthia Garrison! Oh, I'll be ever so glad to see her again! I"—

"I know who she is!" cried Perry, refusing to be snubbed. "They say she's a gorgeous looker. When her kennel was under the hammer I bought in her two pet Boston terriers, Betty and Prince. Maybe that won't make me solid with her, eh? Well, I guess. All I ask is a start, and you'll find a whole lot of cripples slower than I'll be, if they're walking over I might wander out, sort of aimless-like and happen to meet 'em. Maybe that's a bum idea? Good old me!"

Full of his Machiavellian scheme, the lad bolted through the long window and was gone.

"Dallas," began Bennett, without preamble, "you must surely know why I'm here today. You've seen that paragraph in the"—

"I have seen it," she answered quietly.

Taken aback by her manner, Bennett hesitated an instant; then asked nervously:

"The—the rumor isn't true, Dallas? Tell me it isn't."

"Why shouldn't it be true?" she countered perversely, as though not wholly sorry to witness the new look her words called to his face. The look deepened as Bennett continued:

"You don't love Gibbs? Surely you don't love him?"

"I"—

The French windows swung wide, breaking off her reply.

Judge C. C. Chittenden has received the following telegram from Senator Burrows.

"District attorney for the western district of Washington has been instructed by attorney general to dismiss the proceedings against you and your brother."

Judge Chittenden, in commenting on the matter, said that he had received the same advice from Seattle several days ago, but did not care to make it public until it had been confirmed from Washington.

"While the government's action," remarked Judge Chittenden, "in thus dismissing the suit on its own motion, is commendable, nevertheless a grave wrong has been done my brother and myself by a careless or over-zealous agent of the government inspired no doubt by jealous rivals."

The catalogue and calendar for the year 1907-08 of the University of Michigan has just been issued and shows that the institution in enrollment has passed the 5,000 mark "by a nose." The exact figures are 5,013, but the tabulation in the summary of the volume says there are but 5,010. According to Secretary Wade there are three who did not get in on the original count, but they are here just the same.

In the list there are represented 48 states, three colonies and 23 foreign countries making the University of Michigan a wonderful cosmopolitan institution. Michigan students leads in numbers, there being 2,729 enrolled. The foreign countries represented are as follows: Ontario, 19; Mexico, 8; Japan 6; China, 6; Netherlands, 4; Germany, 4; Russia, 3; Turkey, 3; India, 2; British Columbia, 2; Columbia 1; England 1; New Zealand, 1; Burmah, 1; New Brunswick, 1; Chili, 1; Brazil, 1; Persia, 1; Panama, 1; Cuba, 1.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Smith, four small children and Miss Enger, employed in the Smith home were driven out in the freezing cold at at 1 o'clock last Wednesday morning by fire which distroyed the Smith general store and residence at Mayfield. The fire was discovered by Miss Enger and had such a start that that entire family had to escape through a window, having no time to dress or save a single possession. Mrs. Smith was badly cut by broken glass.

The village had a narrow escape, as residents had almost all been front fishing and were so tired from exertions that it was almost impossible to awaken them. A bucket brigade saved the rest of town after the villagers has been routed out by Mr. Smith.

Deer Lake Grange No. 1269.

Held regular meeting April 18.

Grange opened in due form by Master. A motion was made by Brother Henry Sudman that we let the building of our hall to a contractor, the grange puts up the foundation and furnishes all material needed. Hall will be 26 by 60 feet with 12 foot ceiling, lath and plastered; with chimney, ten window frames, three doors and all complete except siding. We don't expect to put any siding on right away. For roof, sound, butt shingles will be used. The job to be let to the lowest bidder, using sealed bids sent to chairman of building committee, Brother Jesse May, Boyne, Mich.

All bids must be sent in before May 1st, 1908, building ought to be ready for use by May 20.

With 24 members present and 4 visitors we enjoyed a fine program given by the ladies of our grange. Receipts $2.30.

Next meeting in two weeks.

Marion Center Grange No. 956.

Marion Center Grange No. 956 met in regular session April 15, opened in usual form in fourth degree. Officers all present except chaplain.

After the usual order of business the lecturer provided a good program of songs and recitations, also a lively debate on "What are the Necessary Qualification to Make a Successful School Teacher."

Part of the evening in two weeks will be, taken up discussing the new constitution.

Grange closed in form to meet again in two weeks. Everybody come and tell us what you know about the constitution.

South Arm Grange No. 815.

South Arm Grange No. 815 met Saturday night and was opened by Worthy Master Olney. Twenty-three visitors were present, two from Wilson grange and twenty-one from Ironton grange.

The third and fourth degrees were conferred on eight of the visiting members from Ironton. After the initiatory work a bountiful supper was served in honor of the candidates and other visiting members. The ladies having remembered that it was Easter time, served eggs in several different ways.

On account of the lateness of the hour the lecturer's hour was omitted.

Brother George Allen, who for some time past has been suffering from a cancer, passed away at St. Mary's hospital in Saginaw Wednesday, April 15. The funeral was held in the grange hall Sunday, April 19. Brother Allen was 28 years of age and leaves a wife and three small children.

Brother James Keat and family are preparing to move to their farm one-half mile west of the hall.

Three of our members attended the teachers' institute held at Charlevoix last Friday and Saturday.

BOLD ATTEMPT TO GAIN LIBERTY

Arthur Deuell and Edward Cooley Try to Escape.

CAUGHT IN THE ACT BY CLERK LEWIS

Who Was Disturbed by Noise While at Work in His Office.

Bars of Outer and Inner Doors of Jail Cut With Hack Saw—Used Pinch Bar to Make Opening.

A bold attempt to gain their freedom was made Tuesday night by Arthur Denell and Edward Cooley, two prisoners at the county jail, but was balked by County Clerk Lewis, who was working in his office.

Several times during the evening Mr. Lewis heard suspicious noises, but paid little attention to them until about 11:00 o'clock in the evening, when again the noise interrupted him in his work and he decided to investigate.

He started from his office through the hall leading to the cells where the prisoners are confined and when about to open the door leading direct to the outer door of the cell, felt a hand on the door knob opposite. He then could hear whispering in the corridor opposite, and waited until the door was opened. He was confronted by Arthur Duell, a prisoner. Mr. Lewis at once realized that the prisoners were making an attempt to escape. He told Deuell to stand still and he would see that he would regain his cell in an easier manner than that in which he had gotten out. Jailer Driggett was called and Deuell forced back into the cells, and then the situation was revealed to them.

The prisoners had in some manner obtained a saw or instrument of other nature and had cut through one of the bars of the inner door, gaining the outer corridor, and sawed through a bar in the outer door, gaining access to the hall leading from the cells to the street.

They had also obtained possession of a pinch bar, which had been lost by Contractor Jones while repairing the court house, and for which a thorough search had been made at the time. The bar was used to force the bars apart, making a hole large enough for a man to crowd himself through.

Edward Cooley, the other prisoner, had come through the hole in the inner door, and was waiting inside the outer door for Deuell to see if the coast was clear. They had their clothes packed in a bag, also a blanket and some articles belonging to Jailer Driggett.

When Deuell was surprised at the door by Mr. Lewis, Cooley, who was inside the outer door, hid in a cell used for women at the end of the corridor and was found there a moment later.

It will be remembered that Deuell was arrested and placed in jail last December on charge of forgery. He had had a hearing and the case was put over until the May term of court.

Cooley has a bad record. He was arrested about two years ago at Boyne City on the charge of forgery, placed in jail at that place, but made his escape and was captured but a few days ago at Flint, and brought here for confinement.

It was a well planned escape and only frustrated by the fortunate appearance of Mr. Lewis.

During an interview with Deuell he claimed that Guy Faut, a prisoner who was confined in the jail during the winter, on the charge of adultery, and has since obtained his liberty, had in his possession a hack saw, and had cut the bars of the cell he had occupied, also the bars of the outer and inner doors. Search reveals the fact that the bars in Faut's cell were cut, but this may be a ruse to escape by laying the charge upon another's shoulders. Deuell also claims that Faut obtained possession of the pinch bar lost by Contractor Jones and concealed it.

FISHING AT MONROE CREEK

Local Fishermen and Farm Dog Have Argument of Supremacy.

Reports of good strings of brook trout caught in Mourpe Creek induced three of our local fishermen to don their fishing garb and start for that place last Sunday. They made the trip to the creek all right, and were welcomed at the place where they were to house their team by the loud barking of the farm dog. They made the remark that they hoped their welcome by the people living there would be as hearty as that of the enthusiastic canine, and drove into the yard, anxious to get into the stream at the earliest moment. One of the party jumped out of the buggy to unharness the horse when the dog in one mouthful took all the slack out of the bosom of his trousers and started to give him a vigorous shaking up. It was some time before the fishermen were able to convince the dog that their intentions were all right, and with the help of farmer, finally persuaded him to relinquish his hold, and the party proceeded to the creek for a day's sport.

Later in the day another fisherman from Charlevoix, who had gone to this creek to fish, was attacked from the rear by the dog, who, elated by his successful attack in the morning, wished to show his authority and not be disturbed by his master. The only way the fisherman could reach the dog was leaning forward and throwing dirt and stones between between his legs, finally driving the dog away.

W. R. C. TO ENTERTAIN

Will Give Supper and Concert at Bank Hall May 5.

A Fine Program to be Rendered by Home Talent—Help Them by Buying Tickets.

The ladies of the W. R. C. will give a supper and concert in the bank hall Tuesday, May 5, for the purpose of raising money to help defray the expenses of our Decoration Day celebration.

It is well known that the ladies expend both time and money every spring in clearing off neglected graves and otherwise making the cemetery more beautiful. As this is a work in which we are all more or less interested in, let us help by our liberal patronage.

Genuine army hard tack served with supper by the ladies of the W. R. C. at bank hall Tuesday, May 5. Supper from 6 to 8 p. m.

INCREASE IN PENSION

Widows Gets a Raise From $8 to $12 Without New Application.

Pension Commissioner Warner announces that all widows now on the pension rolls will not be required to make application for the increase from $8 to $12 a month recently voted by congress.

The commissioner has instructed the pension agencies throughout the country to put the law into effect automatically, the first payment of the increase to be made May 4. This action will result in a saving of several hundred thousand dollars to the pensioners affected.

Widows not already on the rolls, but who are entitled to the increase, are required to make application as in the past.

IMPORTANT BANK CHANGE

F. E. Turrell Retires from State Savings Bank

J. W. Rachow, New Cashier, Purchaser of Stock, Assumes Control To-morrow.

An important business change was made last night at a meeting of the directors of the Charlevoix State Savings Bank, at which time new officers were chosen for that institution.

The new list of officers stand as follows:

President—for the present vacancy.

First Vice President—G. C. Geiken

Second Vice President H. S. Harshu.

Cashier—W. J. Rachow.

Mr. F. E. Turrell will retire from official connection with the bank, the change taking effect tommorrow, Thursday.

Mr. Rachow, the new cashier, is enthusiastically spoken of by his friend as being a very fine man, and he comes to Charlevoix bearing the highest recomendation as a business man. He has, until recently, been a banker in Copemish, having sold out his interests there a short time ago, and has purchased a large block of the stock of the Charlevoix State Savings Bank.

The bank has been doing business here about two years, and it is speaking well for the management and for Charlevoix to note that the block of stock purchased by Mr. Rachow sold at a substantial premium. Mr. Turrell, who retires from the business has done much to make the bank successful and has been prominent in the business interests of Charlevoix. He is at present serving his second year as president of the Board of Commerce. His plans for the future are as yet undecided.

The people of this city will be glad to note the progress of the bank under its old management, and will wish the new cashier and the concern a most satisfactory future.

FACE BADLY CUT

George Dougherty, of Marion Township, Meets With Painful Accident.

Last Thursday morning George Dougherty, of Marion, met with a painful accident while working around a drag saw. He was lifting a large log, when in some way he slipped and fell so that the end of the saw struck him on the cheek bone, cutting a deep gash and bruising the flesh. He at once came to Charlevoix for medical attendance. The cut was a deep one, and it will be some time before Mr. Dougherty will be able to forget his narrow escape from a more serious injury.

CONTESTANTS DID WELL

Oratorical Contest at M. E. Church a Successful One

Miss Frederica Hubbard Won First Place A Close Race for Honors.

Last Wednesday evening occurred an oratorical contest for a silver medal in the M. E. church, under the auspices of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

The class was under the training of Miss Winifred Gale and was composed of three girls and two boys—Alice Madill, Frederica Hubbard, Margaret McNeil, Douglas Nettleton and Lynn Thomas. Invocation by Rev. R. A. Wright. The contestants all did well. It was rather a difficult task to decide who should have the medal, but the judges, Mrs. P. D. Campbell, W. Herschel Miller and Miss Himes, on comparing notes, found that Miss Frederica Hubbard came out a point or two ahead. Several things were to be taken into consideration, voice, memory, articulation and general effect.

The beautiful medal was presented to Miss Frederica Hubbard in a few well chosen words by Superintendent Woodley.

The other members of the class were by no means forgotten, but each received a book as a token.

The orchestra furnished several musical numbers. Mrs. R. W. Kane and daughter, Miss Dorris, gave an instrumental duet which was appreciated. The ladies' quartet, composed of Mrs. Jefferies, Mrs. Coulter, Miss Johnson and Miss Gale gave selections which were fine.

There was a very good attendance but owing to the threatening weather would have been larger. Receipts over $17, which for a starter was encouraging. The expenses however were quite heavy.

The committee in charge desire to express thanks to all those who so kindly assisted in making the contest so much of a success.

Great credit is due Mrs. Allcox president of the local union for her perseverance in the face of many hindrances in seeing the thing through, and may we have more of these educational entertainments in the future.

WHO ARE THE DELINQUENT ONES?

VanPelt of Chicago Inquires as to Friends Whereabouts.

Chicago, April 27, 1908,

Charlevoix COURIER,

Charlevoix, Mich.

My Dear COURIER:

I have written several business letters to northern Michigan, and one bunch of five that I have not had any answer from at all.

Is there an unusual death rate up there?

I intend to come up about the middle of May, but if things are going wrong, certainly I do not want to come up.

Yours very truly,

Wormser, burial in the Barnard cemetery. She leaves to mourn their loss, three sons and one daughter, Dan, who lives in this city and Carlos and Harmon Himebauck, of Marion township, and Mrs. E. Ingalls, of Banks, at whose place she made her home up to the time of her death.

AUTOS DESTROY GOOD ROADS

Soft Rubber Tires Strip Hard Surface Highways.

France Calls an International Congress for October to Discuss this Serious Condition.

The office of public roads of the United States department of agriculture has recently been conducting a series of interesting experiments to learn the amount of damage done to the rock surface thoroughfares by automobiles. The results prove that the modern fast moving motor car is the greatest menace to macadam roads that has ever made its appearance.

On some stretches of thoroughfare, especially in New England, where many broad and smooth roads have been constructed, the retrogression is not less than 40 per cent and it has forced upon the director of the office of public roads and upon many highway engineers that if some plan is not speedily devised for overcoming the bad effects of men's latest and most sensational mode of land transportation, the monetary loss will be stupendeous and the good work of many years will go for naught.

It is not only in America that this condition prevails. The men of England, France, Germany, Holland, Belgium and other countries of the old world, where hard surfaced highways are appreciated, have also learned that the big soft rubber tires of the automobile are doing an almost incredible amount of harm. France has officially taken cogizance of the condition and has called an international congress to meet at Paris on October 11 to discuss plans for saving the roads, while in no way interfer-

DEATHS IN THE COUNTY

Well Known Resident of Bay Township Passes Away in Petoskey.

William Keeler, aged 66 years, a resident of Bay township, died of consumption at Petoskey, Sunday, April 19. Mr. Keeler had lived in Bay township for 35 years, when he removed to Petoskey, where he lived on the west section. He was at one time a member of the board of supervisors. He left a widow and two children. Funeral services were held at Petoskey from the Grace M. E. church the following Tuesday, Rev. Mr. Keen officiating.

George L. Allen, an esteemed and honored resident of East Jordan, died at that place last week. He was taken ill about two years ago and since that time his health continued to fail until death relieved him of his suffering. The funeral services were held from the South Arm Grange hall, of which order he was a member. He leaves a wife and three children to mourn their loss.

In the death of Albert S. Sheldon, East Jordan loses one of its most promising young men. He was born at Trenton, but came to East Jordan when but a child, and since has made that place his home. The funeral services were held from the Metho list church at that place on Tuesday, April 22, and were conducted by Rev. W. W. Lamport, assisted by Rev. James Healy of Ithaca. The high school attended in a body. Interment in East Jordan cemetery.

HERBERT TO JOHN

Jane Gets Divorce from Herbert Porter

Immediately Takes Out License to Wed John McNamara.

Granted a divorce from one husband to take out a marriage license for a second, all within the hour is the record established at the court house last Wednesday by Mrs. Jane Porter.

Mrs. Porter married Herbert Porter in the city of Lockport, N. Y., June 17, 1875, and lived with him until the 15th of September, 1904. Three children were the results of the union, all of whom are married one living in Detroit, one in California and another in Kansas.

The bill of complaint alleges extreme cruelty and non-support.

After leaving, Mrs. Porter says that she lived with her daughter in Detroit for a time, later coming to Petoskey. She has been for some time past employed as a housekeeper by John McNamara.

The divorce decree was granted on default of defense by the husband, and on account of the vivid story of her wrongs and trials told by the wife, no time limit was placed upon the decree regarding a future marriage, the lady apparently being too much elated at her release to again seek matrimonial bonds.

However, appearances are sometimes deceiving, as the divorce was no sooner granted than application was made to County Clerk Lewis for a license to wed John McNamara, for whom she has been employed, and the license granted.

A MOVE IN THE RIGHT DIRECTION

Good Work Being Done by the Charlevoix Land Co.

BRING IN PROSPECTIVE FARM BUYERS

Who Consider It an Advantage to Own Sugar Beet Land.

The Community is Just Beginning to Realize the Benefits from the Sugar Factory in Promoting Agricultural Development

F. H. Hubbard has just returned from Chicago with about twenty beet workers and prospective farmers most of whom were located at Elk Rapids. Monday a sale was made of P. J. Peterson's farm in Marion to one of the number, James Dvorak, and another member, John Svaroha, rented Charles Hull's farm. The latter expects to purchase a farm later. These are well educated refined Bohemian people who are Americanized and will make good citizens. They consider it quite an advantage to have farms where they can raise beets. This makes nine Austrian families that have recently come here, and as they are well pleased with the country, it is probable that many of their friends will follow them. The Charlevoix Land Company is in correspondence, with a number of other families who are considering coming here to buy farms. They have also arranged connection with a Chicago real estate firm who are now doing a large business in colonizing people from that city in various parts of the country. The manager of the latter company is expected here next week to look over the situation and see some of the farms that are for sale.

Mr. Hubbard reports that there are more men out of work in Chicago now than at any other time during the past ten years, while living expenses in the city were never higher. The condition is driving hundreds of men out of the city on to farms, and it is an opportune time for any one who wants to sell out to do so. Thousands of acres of almost barren pine lands south of here are being palmed off on the unsuspecting city people as good agricultural lands, and sold to them at high prices. Once get them started up this way, where the land is good, the vacant and poorly farmed lands will soon be changed to fields of sugar beets and other crops.

It seems to us that a move in the right direction would be for the Board of Commerce or any other societies or individuals who are interested in the development of country to assist in this effort to gain new farm settlers.

Death of Mrs. F. C. Warren.

Word comes from East Jordan announcing the death of Mrs. F. C. Warren, wife of Dr. F. C. Warren, at Shelbyville, Indiana, last Monday.

Mrs. Warren is well known throughout the county, Dr. Warren being one of the oldest practitioners in this section.

Her remains were brought to East Jordan Wednesday.

SOCIALISM WILL COME.

Unless Social Evolution Stops and Civilization Crumbles.

Capitalism followed feudalism because it has bred and developed its organs in feudal society. Neither capitalism nor any other social form ever came into existence because of any propaganda proclaiming its superiority to its predecessors.

Things do not arise at the beck of ideas. Ideas are the result of things impressing themselves on the brain.

Socialism is an explanation of existing society—an explanation which explains those of its contents which constitute the embryo of a future society. If the embryo of a Socialist society is not there, no amount of propaganda can create it. If it is there, it is there because it is an integral part of the evolving universe, and no Socialist faint heartedness, no declining Socialist vote and no capitalist conspiracy or repression can either destroy it or turn it aside into an industrial feudalism or anything else.

Our forecast of the co-operative commonwealth is on the same footing as an astronomer's prediction of an eclipse.

Socialism points to that social evolution which is making the capitalist class a decadent, functionless and therefore unnecessary class.

The evolution of society toward Socialism is not the result of Socialist propaganda, but our advocacy of Socialism is the intellectual result of that changing industrial society which constitutes its material foundation.

We are not drawing nearer a new society because an increasing number of persons are in favor of the change, but the rapid upbuilding of the organs of a new society now proceeding everywhere within the rotting shell of capitalism is becoming more and more apparent to every man and woman whose brains are highly enough organized to respond to their environment and perceive what lies plainly before their eyes.

If Socialism may fail of realization it can only be because we have blundered in our interpretation of social evolution in the past and in our analysis of those social forces operating in society today. It is upon these things that the validity of the Socialist position depends.

That body of ideas known as the Socialist philosophy stands today practically unchallenged in the world of thought. It has no critics among those who have taken the trouble to really understand it. If Socialism is in any real sense true, it is also inevitable.

If there is any flaw in the Socialist interpretation of the past, its analysis of the present or its forecast of the future, the bourgeois world with all its plentitude of purchased brains has never been able to put forward a man who could point it out.—Arthur M. Lewis.

Work and Reward.

Though there are still many comfortably situated men and women who believe that, on the whole, industrial conditions are such as to apportion the "good things in life" in accordance with the deserts of the recipients, this belief is rarely held either by those whose circumstances give them a close and wide acquaintance with the "hard facts of life" or by those who have brought intellectual analysis to bear upon the processes by which distribution of wealth is effected. The political economy not only of "the masses," as voiced by Karl Marx, Henry George and their followers, but also of the classes through the mouths of academic teachers, is full of frank avowals of the deep injustices which underlie the existing apportionment of wealth. The following words of J. G. Hill may be taken as a representative expression of this feeling: "The very idea of distributive justice or any proportionality between success and exertion is in the present state of society so manifestly ethnerical as to be relegated to the region of romance."—John A. Hobson.

Socialist Notes.

"To eat or not to eat, that is the question"—in these days of high prices!

The people of Germany are now crying out against the increasing cost of living. Capitalism is international. You cannot escape it, but you can change it to a better and more humane system.

There is many a business man who hates the present business system, but who must grit his teeth, do what his competitors do and appear to believe in it. A business man who is a conscientious believer in the morals taught by religion has no especially hard time of it. There are many such who want the capitalist system evolved out of existence and who secretly favor the Socialist principles.

Who can witness the present money flurry without seeing that the people do get about the sort of thing they vote for?

Socialist Snapshots.

If the interests of the capitalist and laborer are identical, is it not strange these two classes should be so often fighting each other?

If a man steals 10 cents he is a thief, if he gets away with the money a lot of poor people have intrusted to a savings bank he is an embezzler, but if he robs the workers of the nation of a few millions he is a captain of industry.

It is announced that in 1906 the Standard Oil Company of Indiana "earned" over $10,000,000 on a capitalization of $1,000,000. No wonder the stockholders said it was an era of great prosperity.

Socialism Coming.

I am myself convinced that the society of the future will be some form of Socialism—labor organized for the good of all, like the postoffice, organized for the equal benefit of all.—Alfred Russel Wallace, Greatest Living Scientist.

Fire broke out in the cupola of Mercy hospital Tuesday afternoon last, and before the flames could be controlled the entire structure was destroyed. The patients were removed in safety. The damage is estimated at $100,000, of which about $30,000 is covered by insurance.

Mercy hospital was erected 28 years ago, and was considered the finest and oldest structure of its its kind in western Michigan. From this institution there have sprung up about 20 smaller hospitals, now flourishing and scattered through the state. It was the headquarters of the Sisters of Mercy in western Michigan. The Mercy hospital was a three story brick affair about 200 feet long by 150 wide. The tower in which the flames originated was four and one-half stories high. The cause of the fire is not definitely known, but it is believed that electric wires in the tower, or a defective flue was responsible.

Many of the valuable papers which had been locked up in the safe were in the hands of Mother Gertrude, and were taken by her to Grand Rapids just about an hour previous to the fire.

This fact prevented the loss from being far greater. In the absence of Mother Gertrude, Mother Alsunao was in charge, and after an investigation by her and Fr. Detanty, the loss was estimated at the above figure.

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

In a New England city, which has recently voted license (after a long period of no-license) the prospective liquor dealers were looking for desirable "stands," where they might set up a "respectable business," made so by a vote of the citizens.

One of these ambitious men approached a widow of property, of whom he evidently hoped to secure a very desirable building at a reasonable rent. Calling on this lady, he inquired concerning the building, telling her why he wanted it. Without a moment's hesitation she answered, "No, indeed; no building that I control shall ever be rented for a saloon." Then she was asked if she would sell the property, and again she replied, "No; never will I consent to have the building used for any such purpose."

Then the would-be purchaser, muttering that he "knew her husband had been very particular about whom he rented his buildings to, but did not know how she felt about it," departed, leaving this noble Christian woman a victor on the field.

Would that all who have such applications would be as prompt and decided in rejecting them. If all professing Christians, even, would do so, it would hasten the final victory of temperance. I once knew a man who belonged to the church and was quite active therein, who yielded to the request of the druggeller, and rented property for the sale of intoxicants. Thus he helped to introduce a liquor saloon into a very delightful residential community, and all for a higher rent than could otherwise be obtained! The citizens felt that it was a shame and disgrace for an office-bearer in the church to do such a thing, and the effect was soon seen, in that this man's influence for good was practically killed in that community. He paid a high price for his folly and wickedness. No Christian property holder can, in this age, safely tamper with such offers of evil.

We must never know when we are defeated. We must never know when there are lions in the way. We must keep evermore our eyes fixed upon the "hills" from whence cometh our help. Frances E. Willard.

Literary Notes

The Summer Fashions.

Grace Margaret Gould, the dress expert, says in Woman's Home Companion for May:

"There are two distinct types of dress this summer, both emphasizing the straight up-and-down effect. One is the tailored coat suit showing in many instances a cutaway coat, which gives the hipless effect, and a skirt comparatively narrow at the bottom that is, it is made without the sudden flare that the tailored skirt used to have.

"The other type of dress is the cut-in-one gown, and great will be its favor throughout the summer. In the form of the new princess jumper this cut-in-one dress is a most practical gown to own. It can fasten in the front quite as easily as the back, and it is a model equally good for silk or linen.

"This style is always cut out at the neck, and is generally sleeveless, to show the guimpe, or trimmed just sufficiently over the shoulders to give a modified large armhole effect. Or it may be made, as a number of the imported models are, so that it has much the effect of a polonaise cut out at the neck, but having a sleeve which is cut in one with the bodice.

"Now, of course, there are many variations of these two basic ideas in dress, but whatever the fashionable model this summer, it is sure to be simple in design, lacking entirely any exaggeration in design.

"Perhaps this idea is better shown in the sleeve than anywhere else, which has diminished in a pronounced way in size within the past six months, and now in most cases follows very closely the outline of the arm."

How She Got Them.

Edward Lear, the author of the famous "Book of Nonsense," once gave drawing lessons to Queen Victoria. It is recorded in the published volume of his letters that on one occasion the queen was showing him some of the precious treasures in cabinets at Windsor and telling him some of the details of their history. Lear, entirely carried away by the wonderful interest and beauty of what he saw, became totally oblivious of all other facts and in the excitement and forgetfulness of the moment exclaimed, "Oh, how did you get all these beautiful things?" Her majesty's answer, as he said, was an excellent one—kind, yet terse, and full of the dignity of a queen—"I inherited them, Mr. Lear."

Threadneedle Street.

The name Threadneedle as applied to the London street on which stands the Bank of England is a corruption of Thryddaaca, meaning third street from Cheapside to the great thoroughfare from London bridge to Bishopsgate. Another etymology is Thrig-needle (Three Needle street), from the three needles which the Needlemakers' company bore in its arms. It begins at the Mansion House, and therefore the Bank of England stands in it; hence the name "Old Lady of Threadneedle Street" as applied to the bank.—New York American.

In the Hanging Days.

Coke, in the time of Queen Elizabeth, remarks on the large number of persons hanged in England. In 1750 a great increase of crime occurred, and in the following year sixty-three persons were hanged in the small London of those days. But many more were sentenced than were actually hanged. In England in 1785 there were 242 sentenced, and 103 actually suffered. Towasend, the Bow street runner, said that between 1781 and 1787 he had seen as many as twelve, sixteen or twenty hanged at one execution. Twice he had seen forty hanged at one time.

Among the old fountains in the temple area at Jerusalem one of the finest is Bah Sitsitea. The inscription states that it was erected about 800 years ago, and for centuries it has been fed with water brought in pipes from Solomon's pools, nine miles away.—New York American.

A Prescription for Constipation.

Eminent medical authorities agree that ninety per cent of their patients suffer from ailments due to clogged bowels (Constipation.)

The bowels become clogged with impurities and body poisons, causing biliousness, colitis, stomach trouble, headache, rheumatism, deranged liver and kidneys, etc.

A Tonic Laxative is prescribed in nearly every case. Those who need a laxative may use this prescription with the assurance that no harmful results will follow its use. It has been given to the Public in tablet form and is known as Iron-ox Laxative Iron-ox Tablets and are put up in aluminum pocket cases.

The formula is wrapped around the case. The action of each ingredient is explained, that you may understand why Laxative Iron-ox Tablets are the safest Laxative to use; they strengthen the bowels, aid digestion, and keep the liver and kidneys healthy and active. We have secured the selling agency for Laxative Iron-ox Tablets and recommend them to our Customers. F. N. Chapel & Co.

THE man who looks upon boys as merely so many potential industrial units has no doubt as to what should be done with them. They should be given an industrial training, beginning as early as possible so that they may be finished workmen as early as possible.

The broad minded, unprejudiced educator, the sociologist and the parent find the problem not so simple. Their purpose primarily is not to provide skilled workmen for an industry, but to develope the boy so that he may realize to the greatest extent his potential efficiency. They realize that this is not satisfactorily done by our present purely academic school system. Many a boy, who graduates from the eighth grade or the high school has wasted time and effort on work for which he is not gifted and which might better have been bestowed on other kinds of work.

But admitting this, admitting even for argument's sake that these boys would all have profited more had they been put into an industrial school at the age of fourteen and given special manual training from the time they were twelve it does not follow that the parents or the teachers, much less the boys themselves, could have told at twelve just what sort of studies they should pursue. It is not unheard of that a boy between the ages of ten and eighteen feels drawn at various times to half a dozen different callings varying all the way from motorman to drug clerk, and yet finally turns out to be an exceptionally able lawyer. It would not have been to the advantage of the country to have made a carpenter of Gov. Hughes.

Probably William A. Greeson has come fairly near a solution of the problem with his phrase "industrial intelligence." The boy should be given time to develop industrial intelligence. That may mean adding one or two or three years to his schooling, but the time will be well spent if it results in turning out a better developed man and one who has chosen his life work with knowledge of what it means to himself instead of with a boy's ignorant desire to imitate something which has caught his fancy or the parents' desire to make him self-supporting as quickly as possible.

PLANT FOODS.

Farmer's Opportunity to Save on the Fertilizer Bill.

By R. J. DAVIDSON, Virginia experiment station.

The elements necessary to the growth of plants may be divided into the following groups:

First.—Those that are furnished in abundance from air and water.

Second.—Those which are furnished in abundance from the soil.

Third.—Those which are not usually furnished in abundance in an available form from air, water or soil, as nitrogen, phosphorus and potassium.

Nitrogen is found in large quantities, chiefly in the uncombined or free state. It constitutes about four-fifths of our atmosphere. In this form it is only available to leguminous plants, such as peas, beans, clover, alfalfa, etc., through the influence of micro-organisms found in soils and living in nodules on the roots of plants of this family. In the case of all other plants the nitrogen is taken in only in combination with other elements. Combined with hydrogen it forms ammonia, which may be taken up in small quantities. With oxygen it forms nitric acid, and this combined with some elements in the soil forms nitrates. These are readily taken up by plants and form the principal source of the plant's nitrogen.

Expensive to Purchase.

Nitrogen is the most expensive element the farmer has to purchase. It costs at least three times as much as the phosphorus or potassium. It is also the element most likely to be deficient in the soil, as it is readily converted into soluble nitrates and in addition to being used up by plants is sometimes leached out of the soil. There is a large quantity of free nitrogen in the air. By growing leguminous crops we can obtain a portion of this nitrogen and store it up in the soil in fixed and available forms in the roots and stubble or in the whole crop turned under. We can thus repair in large measure the loss to the soil of this element without any cost and in addition obtain an excellent food for stock in the form of clover hay, alfalfa hay, etc. It will thus be seen how important it is for the farmer to grow one of more of these nitrogen gathering crops on his land as often as his system of rotation will permit and thus save purchasing this most expensive element of plant food. It is poor economy to buy what we can have for the taking, especially when the taking costs nothing.

SEEDLESS TOMATOES.

A Medium Small Variety With Flesh of Particularly Fine Flavor.

The production of any vegetable novelty always arouses interest among seed growers and gardeners. More or less of this work has been done by the experiment stations. For a number of years breeding experiments with vegetables have been carried on by Professor Halsted and his associates at the New Jersey experiment stations. Among the distinct and valuable productions secured in this work is a nearly seedless tomato. As is well known, each fruit of the ordinary tomato contains hundreds of seeds, while the form which Professor Halsted has developed seldom contains more than fifty seeds, and frequently there are not more than five or six and often none.

This variety has become pretty well established now and has been called Giant because of the very large size that the plant attains. It originated five or six years ago as a result of a cross of Golden Saurise upon Dwarf Champion.

The flower clusters are small; flowers cup shaped, light lemon yellow, and the fruits few, medium small, light yellow and nearly seedless.

The flesh is particularly fine flavored. The plants flowered up to the killing frosts.

The type appears to be well fixed. Attempts to cross other sorts upon it have uniformly failed. Seedless fruits have also been produced by Professor Halsted on several varieties and crosses of tomatoes, due probably primarily to nonpollination with other conditions favorable to the stimulation of fruit production.

These crosses were quite uniformly dwarfed in size, many in a cluster being not larger than peas, but solid fleshed and often of good quality. In one instance the fruit had the flavor of the strawberry. Currant crossed upon Stone produced such fruit; likewise Crimson Cushion upon Sunnira. When Crimson Cushion was crossed upon Giant and Magnus many seedless fruits were produced, some of which were large enough for table use.

The work with seedless tomatoes is being continued and promises to result in the establishment of varieties with far less seeds than the sorts commonly grown.

SOCIALISM DEFINED.

Its Promises and Possibilities—A Guarantee of Peace.

Definition 1.—Socialism contemplates a more advanced civilization, social order and government under which distributive justice shall satisfy the inalienable rights of man by securing equally to all the natural means, developed resources and chances essential "to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

Definition 2.—Socialism is a theory or system of social reform which contemplates a complete reconstruction of society and a more just and equitable distribution of property and labor.—Webster.

After years of careful thought and study I have become convinced that the ideals of Socialism are founded in justice and are decidedly humane and practical and are therefore destined to win ultimately and give us more advanced and better civilization. The promises and possibilities of Socialism appear to me as follows:

First.—Socialism would give us a government of, by and for the people, in which Horace Greeley and Abraham Lincoln alike believed and for which all enlightened Socialists contend and argue in the interests of humanity everywhere.

Second.—Socialism would give universal prosperity and happiness by allowing and securing to all those "certain inalienable rights to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," along with nature's provided means thereto, in perfect agreement with the plain announcement of the American Declaration of Independence.

Third.—Socialism would declare and sustain the brotherhood of man by unifying interests and by destroying the evil of money and the profit system and establishing co-operation in fraternal government and dominion throughout the civilized world.

Fourth.—Socialism would give universal prosperity and peace rather than war and materially lessen crime by removing temptation and destroying the incentive thereto and by making the ways of justice and virtue so plain, attractive and easy as to be seen and respected by all, so that the world would be given a happy riddance of crime, lawyers, courts, prisons and gallows, to a very great extent at least, through the removal of causes that now instigate all manner of wrongdoing.

Fifth.—Socialism would establish by politic and equitable transition the public ownership of all utilities that serve and are essential to the welfare of all the people and secure the individual in the possession of those things which especially serve individual welfare, the people thus becoming proprietors and managers collectively of all public utilities, as the brotherhood of man most certainly requires.

Sixth.—Socialism would give us the most advanced civilization and, unlike anarchy, would secure both individual and national welfare by the wisest legislation and laws possible for an intelligent people, guided by experience, to make.

Seventh.—Socialism is full of life and salvation and would sustain and satisfy the Golden Rule with the best of government and perpetuate a golden age.

Eighth.—Socialism, finally, by mutual understanding and agreement among nations, would abandon the destructive art of war entirely, thus turning the energies now used to destroy and kill into channels of peaceful, productive industry for the greater prosperity and happiness of mankind in the ways of peace and unity.

War necessities are costly. Under Socialism no outlay for killing people would be sanctioned or required. Socialism rises above savagery and contemplates only peace and prosperity and would indeed "beat swords into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks."—Dr. William J. Hill, Michigan.

Collective Ownership.

Every engine that is constructed to do real work is a harbinger of the days to come when, civilization being more perfect than it is, the toil of the worker will be lightened and his path through life made easier than it has ever been in all the world's history. Before this, however, the worker must see to it that all these engines belong to all the people and not to a favored few. If he does not see to this, the advent of every new machine is likely to entail greater hardships upon him and make his position in society less secure than to improve his condition generally. There is but one way for workingmen to get possession of the tools and forces of construction—they must vote for them.—St. Louis Labor.

What Socialism Demands.

The average man devotes more time, more energy and more thought to the making of a living than to any other pursuit. This proves that in practice the most important occupation of men is the matter of getting the material means of life, such as clothes, food and shelter. But in getting these essential things the wageworker is under the domination and control of a master. Socialism demands for such nothing more nor less than industrial freedom, the kind of freedom that affects his real life.

Ministers Turn to Socialism.

The number of ministers of the gospel who have recently announced themselves converts to Socialism is attracting attention. They now have a national organization and no official propaganda paper, the Christian Socialist, published at Chicago.

Would End Selfishness.

Socialism would eliminate the motive for a selfish life.—Frances Willard.

DIED SUDDENLY

Lee Howland has finished his cement block work and began laying sidewalk on the Chicago Club grounds yesterday. He has a couple of small contracts there, and when these are completed he has some large contracts on the north side along Michigan avenue.

Monday morning a ripple of excitement was caused on our streets by a team owned by E. J. Tuttle. They were being hitched up preparatory for a trip, when a rig dropped onto the heels of one of them, causing them to dash out of the barn. They ran south on Bridge street, turning the corner onto Newman street, badly demolishing the buggy.

Mr. and Mrs. Chester Blanchard of Chicago, and Mr. Pierce and Miss Clara Blanchard were guests at Mr. and Mrs. Ben Ostrum of Burgess, last Thursday, returning to Chicago Saturday morning, where Mrs. Blanchard will take mineral treatment for inflammatory rheumatism with which she is severely afflicted. Mrs. Orton VanDusen was also a guest at the Ostrum home on the same date.

H. C. Melosh, of Marion Township, Meets With Peculiar Accident.

His Son Also Has Misfortune to Badly Cut His Foot With an Axe While Using Brush

The old saying, "it never rains, but it pours," was illustrated in the home of H. E. Melosh, of Marion township, by both father and son meeting with unfortunate accidents, within a space of a few hours.

Last Saturday while Jene, a young son of Mr. Melosh, was clearing away underbrush, the axe he using slipped, cutting a deep gash in his foot, causing a wound that will disable him for some time. He was brought to Charlevoix Saturday morning and Dr. Thielen attended the wound.

Monday morning Mr. Melosh, while attempting to milk a young cow, was stepped upon by the animal, badly crushing his ankle. These accidents are a climax to a series of misfortunes which have fallen to the lot of the Melosh family during the past two years.

LEGAL NOTICES

Notice of Mortgage Sale.

Whereas, Mary L. Ades, and Walter Ades, husband and wife, of Melrose township, Charlevoix county, Michigan, made and executed a certain mortgage bearing date the 16th day of October, A. D. 1905, to Gerhard Fochtman, of Petoskey, Mich. said, which was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of the county of Charlevoix on the 17th day of October, A. D. 1905 at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, in liber 28 of mortgages on page 446;

And whereas, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage is the sum of Two Hundred and 14 100 dollars, and no suit or proceeding has been instituted at law to recover the debt now remaining secured thereby, or any part thereof;

And whereas, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by said mortgage, whereby the power of sale contained therein has become operative;

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance thereof, and of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises, at public vendue, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the court house, at the Village of Charlevoix, in said county of Charlevoix, that being the place of holding the circuit court within said county, on the 30th day of April, A. D. 1908, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon; the description of which said premises contained in said mortgage is as follows: the southwest quarter of the north west quarter of section twenty-nine, township thirty-three north, range five west, Melrose township Charlevoix County, Michigan.

Dated, February 5th, 1908.

Mortgage Foreclosure.

Whereas, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage dated the tenth day of April, 1903, executed by Adolph Kirchner and Mary A. Kirchner, his wife to Citizens' State Bank of Whitewater, Wisconsin, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Charlevoix, Michigan, in liber thirty-seven of Mortgages the pages forty and forty-one, on the 27th day of April, 1903 at 9 o'clock, in the forenoon. And whereas, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of one thousand four hundred thirteen and sixty-five one-hundredths (1,413.65) dollars, the principal, interest, taxes and insurance, and the further sum of fifty dollars as an attorney fee, stipulated for in said mortgage, and which is the whole amount claimed to be due on said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted either in law or equity, to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the east front door of the court house in said county of Charlevoix, on the twenty-third day of July next, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon on that day; which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to-wit: The south half (s½) of the north-east quarter (ne¼) of section eighteen (18) town thirty-two (32) north, of range six (6) west; and the north west quarter (nw¼) of the south-east quarter (se¼) of section eighteen (18) town thirty-two (32) north, of range six (6) west.

ALWYN BENNETT turned sharply toward the window, angry at the interruption, but Perry Wallwright, ushering two ladies in from the veranda, met his scowl with a wink of triumph.

"Not so bad, eh?" called the boy. "Met them as they were turning into the drive. You see"—

"Oh," observed the younger of the two women—a pretty, flower faced girl who since her entrance into the room had been engaged in exchanging delighted greetings with Dallas. "So you came to meet us? You said you just happened"—

"Did I?" asked Perry in deep amazement. "Well, well! The fact is, I wanted to do something startling in honor of meeting you, so I told my first lie. I"—

"Don't mind him, Cynthia!" laughed Dallas. "He's taken that way quite often."

"Oh, it's his usual page, then?" queried Miss Garrison innocently. "I thought perhaps he was just warming up."

"And now," pursued Dallas, taking possession of Cynthia, much to Perry's disgust, "tell me all about yourself. Have"—

"There isn't much to tell. But there's going to be. I'm going to work."

"Work? What for?"

"For a living, of course."

"Not really."

"Yes, isn't it ridiculous?" broke in Mrs. Bennett, a sweet little old lady who now found her first chance to edge in a word amid the general volley of talk. "But Cynthia is set on doing it."

"Why shouldn't I? I haven't a dollar, and there's a theory that one must live."

"But what are you going to do?" asked Dallas.

"I don't know. I have a pretty good education. I shall find something. I—Dallas, I think your brother is giving us a high sign of some sort."

"I am?" declared Perry. "I just wanted to tell you there's a surprise waiting for you. Two surprises in one kennel. Want to see 'em?"

"Oh, the darlings! Of course I do. Where are they?"

"Come along and I'll show you. 'The darlings,' eh? Talk like that makes me wish I was a dog."

"Don't be spoilt," suggested Cynthia. "Maybe you'll grow."

Still puzzling vaguely as to the meaning of this cryptic utterance, Perry followed Miss Garrison from the room, a grin of satisfied ambition wreathing his tanned face.

Perry followed Miss Garrison from the room.

"To think of poor little Cynthia having to go to work!" sighed Dallas, looking after them. "One would as soon think of putting a butterfly into harness. Is it true she has no money left?"

"I'm afraid it's only too true," answered Mrs. Bennett. "Her father lost everything in speculating. He was cashier of the Israel Putnam Trust company and afterward president. He"—

She paused as the office door opened and Thompson, the secretary, came into the room. At sight of Mrs. Bennett he seemed about to turn back; but, changing his purpose, crossed to the table and began to look for some documents he had failed to gather up.

"What was the rest of the story about Mr Garrison?" asked Dallas, really interested in the older woman's recital.

Thompson's papers slipped through his fingers and went skidding across the polished floor. The others looked around in surprise.

"Excuse me!" muttered the secretary as he stooped to gather up the documents. "Very awkward! I'm sorry."

He went on arranging the scattered papers in his usual unobtrusive silence, effacing himself from the general talk.

"You were telling me about Cynthia's father," said Dallas.

"Oh, yes," said Mrs Bennett, taking up the thread of her tale. "He was looked on as one of the most honorable bankers in the city. And so he was until his misfortune."

"Misfortune?"

"More misfortune than crime. His wife was a girlhood friend of mine, so perhaps I am prejudiced in his favor. A famous financier—a dear friend of his—induced him to make a very large loan that proved to be a mistake. He went to the financier for advice as to how to recoup the loss. The financier told him of an investment by which he could get all the money back without any risk and could make good the loan. Mr Garrison took his advice, used the bank's funds for the purpose and—the investment proved worthless. The bank was insolvent. Mr. Garrison shot himself."

"Horrible! Horrible!" murmured Dallas.

"The 'horrible' part of the whole story came out later," said Alwyn Bennett. "It seems the financier had deliberately ruined Mr. Garrison and was on the other side of the deal by which the bank's funds were lost. In other words, he persuaded his friend to put money in what he knew was a losing venture, then took that money himself."

"He did it willfully," chimed in Mrs Bennett, "knowing his friend would be ruined and that the bank's money which he lured Mr Garrison into investing was going to swell his own ill gotten fortune."

"I did not think any one lived who could do such things," shuddered Dallas. "Poor Cynthia!"—

"Cynthia suffered least of all," said Mrs. Bennett. "She was little more than a child at the time. Her mother died of grief, and her brother—a promising, clever young fellow just entering college—disappeared."

"Deserted Cynthia?"

"Not so bad as that. He probably went away sooner than face his father's disgrace and began life somewhere far from home. That was nine years ago, yet ever since then he sends Cynthia a little money every month—not much, but no doubt all he can scrape together above his bare living expenses. She has tried in every way to get in touch with him, but she can't locate him anywhere. There is no clew except that monthly money order. I never knew him very well—in fact, I only saw him once or twice—but I've heard he was a fine, manly boy. The shock must have been worst of all on him."

"So a man lost his good name and his life, his wife died, his son's life was wrecked and his daughter impoverished," mused Dallas, "and all that a financier might grow a little richer. I can't believe it!"

A little ashamed of displaying such vehemence in the presence of one of her uncle's dependents, the girl glanced toward the table. But the secretary had gone.

"My husband," prattled Mrs. Bennett complacently, "always said that the men who rose highest in the money world reached their lofty places over the despoiled bodies of hundreds of victims. Thank God, my boy has no such potential record to look back on. My husband was one man in a million—the soul of honor both in business and in private life. You've read of his splendid civil war record. Then he went into business as a contractor and engineer and earned a fortune, every dollar of which was honest. That's something to be proud of—in these money loving times."

"What was the name of the financier who ruined Mr. Garrison?" asked Dallas, still haunted by the narrative she had just heard.

"No one knows. It was suppressed at the time. The facts in the written confession left by Mr. Garrison became public properly; but, through political influence, the name of the man responsible for the tragedy was suppressed. Here I am chatting on doleful topics, while those two young people are running all over the place unchaperoned. Excuse me, won't you, and I'll look them up?"

She smiled at Alwyn as she left the room, and his answering smile showed how fully he understood and appreciated her motive in leaving him alone with Dallas Wainwright. Perhaps Dallas, too, understood, for she made as though to follow Mrs. Bennett out into the lanyn. But Alwyn stepped between her and the window.

"Don't go just yet," he begged. "I've so much to talk over with you. When they came in we were speaking of that paragraph about Gibbs and yourself. You don't love him, do you, Dallas? Tell me you don't!"

"What right have you to ask me such a question?"

"Only the right that my love for you gives me, dearheart. You must have known I loved you even though I've never said it before. I love you, Dallas, though till today I think I never realized how much. Tell me it isn't true that you're going to marry Gibbs."

"Even if it weren't true I should not marry you, Alwyn."

"Ah!"

The exclamation was wrung unconsciously from his whitening lips. It was as though a pang of physical pain had pierced him.

"I wouldn't marry you," went on Dallas, though more gently, "because you don't really love me."

"I do! I do! With my whole heart, I"—

"Oh, Alwyn!" she exclaimed, with almost mother-like tolerance. "What a child you are! What a mere child! Some one tries to take away from you a plaything you've grown used to having. You never cared especially about the plaything before; but, now that you're in danger of losing it, you cry out: 'Oh, I love it! I love it!' You'll soon find another toy that'll make you forget"—

"Dallas, you are unfair! You have no right to treat my love for you as "You were the college hero—the man of the hour."

"As if it were a mere whim? Isn't it? Now, don't say 'No,' but look me in the eyes and answer one question. If Scott Gibbs hadn't proposed to me—if that paragraph had not appeared in the paper—would you have come here today and told me you loved me? No, you know you wouldn't!"

"Don't talk like that, dear!" implored Bennett. "I tell you I love you! More than I ever dreamed a woman could be loved. I love you! I"—

"There's an easy way to prove it, then."

"What way? Anything"—

"By doing something to make me feel proud of you. I don't feel so now. I could not marry a man who loiters his life away—a man who sits idle while others are trooping past him in the upward climb. You are rich, thanks to your father's efforts. What have you done with that wealth? If you've done no harm with it you've at least put it to no good use. You are young, talented, highly educated. What have you done with your youth, your talents, your education? How have you used them for your own betterment or for your fellow men's? What have you to offer me? Money? Social position? I have plenty of both. What else can you offer me? Nothing—absolutely nothing."

"My love, for one thing. I can offer you that."

"In what is your love better than any other man's? Behind it is not a record of hard work, of self sacrifice, of achievement—of any of the things that go toward making love strong and enduring and beautiful—to make it a support that a woman can lean on for life? What have you to offer me or any other woman?"

There was a silence. Yet when Bennett spoke there was a new note in his voice—a ring of awakening strength that impressed Dallas in spite of herself—that sent a wholly strange thrill through her and set her heart to beating with unwonted quickness.

"You are right," said he. "I have done nothing. I've been content to be a rich man's son, and I've nothing to offer that is worthy your acceptance, but that does not mean I never shall have. And by the grace of God I shall! You've put things in a new light. I see them as I never did. It isn't a wholly pleasant experience, but it's good for me. There's nothing yet that I'm fitted to do, but I'll find something, never fear. And when I do"—

"Don't say there's nothing you're fit for," protested Dallas. "There's nothing you couldn't accomplish if once you set yourself to it. Why, just think of those speeches you made for Mr Lorimer last campaign. They were fine. I was so"—

"Oh, those amounted to nothing. I just did it to oblige him. And, besides, it was fun to sway the crowds."

"That's just it. You did it for fun and for a friend. Why not do something in earnest and for yourself? The world is fairly bristling with opportunities for such a man as you. Grasp those opportunities. Won't you?"

"Yes! And when I do—is there any hope that you will?"

"I have given Mr Gibbs no promise. I told him to wait."

"Then my chance is as good as his! From now on I am going to drop the role of rich man's son and be something on my own account. If you have faith in me if you believe in me—if there is a ghost of a chance that you can some day love me"—

"I have faith in you, Alwyn," she answered softly, letting her hand lie passive in his grasp. Then, withdrawing it with a pretty gesture of petulance, she added:

"Only I wish it didn't always require a blow to rouse you to action. Did you ever happen to notice that trait in yourself?"

"Why, no. I don't quite understand."

"Then here's an instance. Had will show you what I mean: In your senior year at Yale when you were playing halfback on the varsity eleven I saw my first football game. It was against Princeton. You were the only man on either team I knew, so I watched you from first to last. Little as I understood football, I could see you were playing a clever, hard, conscientious game. But it wasn't a fighting game—not the sort of game that carries everything before it. Then, in the second half, in one of the scrimmages I saw a Princeton man strike you. Oh, it was a dastardly, cowardly blow! It struck you when your head was turned away. You saw who it was, and you made no appeal to the referee, but in the next scrimmage you broke that man's collar bone and stunned him. He was carried senseless from the field, and you kept on. You had begun to play a fighting game, and it carried you through the Princeton line for the only touchdown

THE snow and rain, rushes and sand inseparable from duck and goose shooting never bother the hunter who is using a Marlin Model 19 12 gauge repeating shotgun, the best all-around gun in the market.

The ejection is from the side (an exclusive Marlin feature) and the closed breech bolt covers the action keeping out all foreign matter which so often clogs repeating shotguns.

The Marlin automatic safety prevents the accidental opening of the action when firing, and holds the breech shut until after explosion in cases of hang-fire; the solid top of frame is always a protection between your head and the cartridge.

The man who loves a gun needs the 1908 Marlin Book. It is full of gun information, has the answer to a very keen question, contains 136 pages of interesting matter, and it's free if you send 3 stamps postage.

Women as Well as Men Are Made Miserable by Kidney Trouble.

Kidney trouble preys upon the mind, discourages and lessens ambition; beauty, vigor and cheerfulness soon disappear when the kidneys are out of order or diseased.

Kidney trouble has become so prevalent that it is not uncommon for a child to be born afflicted with weak kidneys. If the child urinates too often, if the urine scalds the flesh or if, when the child reaches an age when it should be able to control the passage, it is yet afflicted with bed-wetting, depend upon it, the cause of the difficulty is kidney trouble, and the first step should be towards the treatment of these important organs. This unpleasant trouble is due to a diseased condition of the kidneys and bladder and not to a habit as most people suppose.

Women as well as men are made miserable with kidney and bladder trouble, and both need the same great remedy. The mild and the immediate effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It is sold by druggists, in fifty-cent and one dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also pamphlet telling all about it, including many of the thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers cured. of the day. You won the game for Yale. You were the college hero—the man of the hour. But it took a blow to rouse you. Now do you understand?"

"Yes, I think I do. Perhaps you're right. I certainly remember the blow well enough. Do you happen to know who it was that struck me that day on the football field?"

"No. I knew none of the players except you. Who"—

"It was Gibbs."

"No!"

"I'm not likely to have forgotten. Ask him yourself. He will remember it, I fancy. It was a week before he left the infirmary."

"But I can't realize that Mr Gibbs would do such a thing! It was so cowardly, so"—

"Oh, don't hold it against him. He was excited and"—

"Tell Mr. Phelan I'll see him in the library," called Wainwright from the hall.

"More politics!" exclaimed Dallas. "Come, shall we go out to the tennis court?"

They passed through the open French window as Wainwright and Gibbs entered the library from the opposite door.

"The alderman's a little behind time," said Wainwright. "He's a character in his way. You'll be interested in meeting him, Gibbs."

"Mr. Phelan," announced the butler.

"I know my own name, son," remarked a voice behind him. "You needn't go hollerin' it at me like I was bein' ratified at an east side meeting. Mornin', Mr. Wainwright. Maybe it was you he was hollerin' at."

"You're a little late, alderman," said the financier.

"I always am. Let the other feller do the waitin' That's my motto, and many a good hour's time I've saved by it. Who's your friend?"

"Mr. Gibbs of Gibbs & Norton. Mr Gibbs, this is Alderman Phelan."

"Of the Eighth," amended Phelan. "Only wan to carry his ward last election runnin' independent. Pleased to meet you. Yes, sir, I ran independent, and I win, as Wainwright here can tell you. Horrigan's out against me this year, and he's got carried away by some fool idea that he can down me next campaign."

"Can he?" asked Gibbs politely, bored.

"Can he?" roared Phelan, his close clipped hair a-bristle. "Can he? 'Tan ehesty Dick Horrigan down Alderman Jimmy Phelan? Well! Nothin' to it, son. When I'm through with Dick Horrigan he'll have worried himself so thin they'll have to wear glasses to shave him. I'll bury him so deep this fall that they'll never find him till they start diggin' a subway to China."

"You seem pretty confident," observed Gibbs.

"Confident? Why not? Why not, I ask you? Why wouldn't I be confident? Is there a voter in the ward—black, white, yellow or greenhorn—that I can't call by his first name and ask after all his children by name? Is there a voter in the ward I haven't staked to coal or outings or ball or booze? Is there? If so, name him to me. Put a name to him. They're my friends twelve months of every year, not just at election time. Horrigan, indeed! Say, if he starts roamin' any man in my ward he'll have to sight him by a tree to see if he's makin' any progress or not. Horrigan, hey?"

"Come, come, alderman," interposed Wainwright. "Why don't you and Horrigan smoke the pipe of peace? Why"—

"The only pipe me an' Dick Horrigan will ever come together over will be a yard of lead pipe, an' my fist will be at one end of that an' his thick head at th' other."

"But," remonstrated Wainwright, "he is a strong man. Is it safe to fight him?"

"Why isn't it? He's got to come into the Eighth to lick me, and he'll be about as strong there as a barkeep's influence with the Prohibition party. Besides, I like a fight. I'm the original 'Stop, look and listen' signal at Trouble station!"—

"As a personal favor to me, alderman," wheedled Mr. Wainwright in his most persuasive manner, "won't you make a friend of Horrigan?"

"I'd gladly oblige you by makin' a fine, fashionable, rollickin' funeral of him, but friends—friends"—

"But if I asked him here to meet you wouldn't you try to be cordial to him?"

"I sure would—as cordial as a bankrupt to a rent collector. He'd be as pretty near as welcome as a broken leg."

"I'm sorry you look at it that way, alderman, because I've asked him today."

"To come here? Quit your joshin'!"

"But he doesn't know he'll meet you."

"An' he'll never find it out, for I'm on my way. I'd sooner meet a p'rade from th' contagion hospital."

"Of course, if you're really afraid of him"—

"Afraid of him!" snorted Phelan, coming to a full stop at the door and then returning to the middle of the room. "Afraid of Dick Horrigan! Show me the man I'm afraid to meet and I'll meet him with pleasure just to show you it's a lie. As for"—

"Mr. Horrigan!" came the butler's announcement from the threshold.

The man who followed the announcement was one who carried in his bearing the chief reasons for his success. Tall, stout, square of jaw, square of brow, hard of mouth, he seemed to dominate his very surroundings and to exhale a rough forcefulness that carried all before it. His physiognomy was essentially that of the born fighter as well as leader—the man that neither gives nor asks quarter. From the days when as a ferry ticket seller he had laid the foundations of his later fortunes by "knocking down fares," up through his varied career as policeman, contractor, politician and boss, he had fought his way ever to the front by that same force, backed by a bulldog pluck, a genius for organization and a mentality wholly devoid of scruple and conscience.

For a moment the enemies faced each other.

It could not be said of Richard Horrigan that his morals were bad. He simply had no morals at all. By contact with men of higher culture than his own he had lost his early incorrectness and vulgarity of speech. His domineering roughness of manner he had no wish to lose. It was by far too valuable an asset.

"Good morning, Mr Wainwright," began Horrigan, with a breezy familiarity, as he strode into the library, quite unabashed at finding himself in the presence of the dreaded finance king. "I'm a bit ahead of time, but"—

He stopped short, with a grunt of rage. His eyes had fallen on Phelan. Bristling like a plucky terrier at the onset of a mastiff, the alderman stood his ground, giving the boss glare for glare.

And so for a moment the enemies faced each other.

CHAPTER III.

HORRIGAN was first to break the tense silence.

"What's this here for?" he growled, indicating Phelan with a contemptuous jerk of the head and addressing no one in particular.

"Ask your friend Wainwright," grunted Phelan, with equal roughness.

"I—you see," began Wainwright conciliatingly, "I didn't like to see two such first rate chaps at odds with each other, so I wanted to bring you together here to"—

"Oh, you did, did you?" sneered Horrigan. "And what did Phelan say to that little plan?"

"I said," snapped Phelan before his host could reply—"I said I'd see you in — first!"

"Same here, twice over!" said Horrigan.

"But," interposed Wainwright wonkingly, "is there no way"—

"No," retorted Horrigan, his deep voice rumbling far down in his throat. "There isn't. Look here, Phelan! I'm out for your scalp, and I'm going to get it!"

ing with the development of the automobile for no scientist will condemn one worthy civilizing influence because it temporarily conflicts with another. He will merely admit that a new condition has arisen and then set his foot an investigation with the idea of mastering it.

To many it may seem beyond belief that a pneumatic rubber tire can work any injury to a road composed of bits of crushed flint rock, but it becomes plain when the theory of such roads is explained. The macadam road, named after John Loudon Macadam, of Ayr, Scotland, who was for years highway surveyor of Bristol, was first laid down by the eminent French road engineer Tresanget, of Limoges, who wisely figured that slowly moving iron tired wagons would crush dust particles from the stones of the road's surface; that those particles would be constantly sifted between the interstices of the large stones; that every passing wagon would crush them firmer into all ruts and inequalities; that that rains would aid and the ultimate result would be a smooth surface, water-shedding highway.

Tresanget planned wisely; MacAdams came two decades later and made a slight change in the laying of the road foundation and gave to such thoroughfares his name. For a century and a quarter the wisdom of the road engineer of Limogos and Ayr was justified. Then arose a condition they had never figured on; a fast moving vehicle running on broad soft tires. The roads began to suffer at once for the following reasons: The rubber tire, being soft, creates no rock dust itself as does the iron tire of a wagon, and the very life of these roads demands a constant supply of that material. It is the surface binder that keeps the road smooth; cracks filled in; that maintains the evenness and binds the rubble stones into one impervious mass. Every iron tired wheel does its own small quota of good by acting as a rock dust maker and a miniature road roller. The auto whirring along at dizzy speed simply flattened its tires against the ground as it sped and the inactive force so exerted hurled the precious rock dust into the air and from where it was swept it to the adjacent farms and lawns in blindings clouds. So pronounced was the mere dust nuisance created in many portions of the country that real estate decreased in value to an appreciable extent and farmers complained that the ever-increasing dust on their fields, vines and trees made it impossible for them to sell their harvests at as good prices as formerly.

When these conditions had been established by scientifically gathered data the director of the office of public roads set on foot numerous investigations and ordered many experiments; the result of which it is believed will ultimately prove the automobile to be a great benefactor, for in the struggle to overcome the conditions created highway engineers must do one of two things; find a road surfacing material which makes no dust and needs no dust to maintain its integrity, or discover a method of controlling the dust on the roads already laid. When that is done one of the greatest problems of the centuries will have been solved and humanity will have gained one of the greatest blessings imaginable. Absolutely dust-proof thoroughfares would add immeasurably to the comforts of the human race; multiply the beauty of vast stretches of country; add countless millions of wealth to suburban and country property and do much to retard disease, for dirt means disease and the 2,150,000 miles of highways in the United States makes not less than 90 per cent of the dust which a long-suffering people take into their lungs each year.

To the time of present writing no dust-proof road surface material cheap enough for use in country districts has been found, and the experiments now proceeding are therefore along the second line; the controlling of the dust by the various methods of spraying and by the use of binder materials. In some sections, especially through the great fruit belts of California, splendid success in dust suppression has been attained by spraying the dirt roads with oils possessing asphaltic bases. In other portions of the country the wise administering of coal tar preparations has aided to a great extent, and drenching with calcium chloride has shown that the dust can be kept at a minimum. Those methods, however, are not perfect solutions of the vast problem of road maintenance and dust suppression. They are merely palliatives, and while they are being advocated in such sections of the country as will be immediately benefited, the bigger problem of discovering an absolute antidote for the action of the automobile is occupying the attention of scientists on both sides of the Atlantic. The solution of that problem may be given at the big congress at Paris in the fall, or it may be discovered before; possibly on this side of the western ocean; possibly in the lands where good roads were known when America was in its swaddling clothes.

Keep a Written Account of All Your Expenditures

You know from experience it is hard to save from your earnings, but it can be done if you set your heart and head in that direction. The only way to do it is to keep an account of what you spend. The simplest way to keep this record is to have a bank account and pay all bills by check. Your bank book and return checks are the records you want—they will tell the story of all your money both earned and spent.

Now is the Proper Time to Begin.

Wilson Grange No. 719.

Wilson Grange met in regular session Saturday, April 25. A very short business session developed nothing of importance. One application for membership reported by the secretary. Members present 23, visitors none.

Lecturer's program was as follows

Reading, Anna Warden.
Recitation, Herbert Holland.
Recitation, Rufus Todd.
Reading, George Todd
Song, Willard Warden.
Reading, Lavina Brintnall.
Recitation, Ethel Brintnall.
Recitation, Arthur Brintnall.

Question box develops discussion on the proposed spelling match and also on the question, "Shall we build an addition to the hall this summer."

Wilson Grange will give a social dance Saturday, May 2, according announcement

Meeting closed in form.

THEATRICAL

"Higbee of Harvard."

The senior class, of the Charlevoix High School, will present "Higbee of Harvard" in the Charlevoix Theater on Friday evening, May 8. Admission prices 25c, 35c, and 50c.

The senior play has become an annual event in Charlevoix and our people, who are proud of the city schools, are always ready to support any endeavor in their behalf or for their benefit.

This effort on the part of the senior class will prove no exception and there is no doubt the play will draw the crowded house, which the work of the youngsters deserves.

The Congregational ladies, who were arranging an entertainment for this date, very kindly gave up the evening to the class.

Victor Fanst

In comedy musical act at the Bridge Electric Theater two nights, Monday and Tuesday, May 4 and 5.

Possibly the biggest hit of last evening, was Victor Fanst in his comedy musical act. This extremely versatile young man can find music in a candlestick by drawing it across an ancient clock.—He has a line of talk that would produce merriment on the great stone face. Traverse City Record.

Supplementing the usual program but not increasing the price. Five cents for every body.—Bridge Electric Theater. —1st t.

COUNT YOUR CHICKS BEFORE THEY'RE HATCHED.

To save cussin' the cluck or kicking that incubator to kindling wood just pass those eggs before a strong light in a dark closet or room. It's fun, it costs nothing, and you may save a whole batch and the ole Mr. Farmer, we mean you too. If it's only one setting, to test is best.

A lamp globe of tin, with a hole the size of a half dollar and covered with mica, will do. A bicycle lamp may do the trick. Use a dark lantern if the policeman is strolling by. The invisible germ is developed by 104 degrees in the incubator. The germ skin (chalaziferous) holds it on the top of the yolk. You may turn the egg, but you can't turn the yolk, as it is always kept in one position with the germ uppermost, by the chalazae, which act as balancing weights. This is remarkable, for two folks beaten up with old rye, rich milk and sugar will often come right inside out and upside down.

Test white eggs the fifth day, but let dark shelled eggs set seven days before testing.

Sunday tests bring crooked chickens.

If you are a beginner, test the fourth day.

Don't get nervous, but don't let the eggs get cold, and always have your hen ready (if she's a saint or your incubator warm to return the eggs.

Cover the eggs you are testing. If there are many, take only about 100 at a time.

Place side of egg toward aperture. If fertile, egg shows red spidge-like picture; clear, no germ; black spot, dead germ; red streak, ruptured blood vessel; big air space and black floating cloud, rotten. Boil cheap eggs for the chickens. If not certain as to egg, mark it and return to incubator for observation. If you crack an egg, heal with black court plaster. If it develops, wet and remove plaster the eighteenth day. If few eggs are tested out, don't crow too loud. Some germs are weak, and die of marasmus before the tenth day.

FIFTH DAY.

By the tenth day the chicks begin to get frisky and downy feathers. Remove all eggs unlike the cut, and always break all so rejected and sooty eggs. Do not throw castoff eggs to your hens not even dried eggshells. They will become egg eaters.

TENTH DAY.

By the fifteenth day the bird is nearly developed. If there is offensive odor, you have missed a spoiled egg. Take it up gently, handle with care, for it has vast possibilities that may suddenly spoil your boiled shirt and give you a bilious look. Always mark ten strongly fertile eggs for your thermometer to rest on. Cold rotten eggs knock out hatches as well as politicians.

FIFTEENTH DAY.

The chick now peeps. The white has all entered into the growth of the bird, and the yolk is being absorbed through the navel. The little fellow now uses his lungs, but before was supplied with oxygen by the allantois.

TWENTIETH DAY.

Birdie is old enough now to vote. He moves around the shell, cutting a circle. A temporary dinty point on the beak does the work. He spreads himself, gives a big kick, the trap door opens, and he is free."

TWENTY-FIRST DAY.

DER DUTCHMAN'S LAY.

I lofes to cackle roun' der place
Apout mein yaller hen.
She lays so many pig vite eggs
Down py der shicken's pen.

She sings so many leetle songs
Afore she goes ter lay,
I dink I nefer hear der like,
Dey vas so sveet und gay.

Und ven das leetle egg pops out
You dink she split der headt
A-singin' sveetly all der day
Und ven she shumps ter bed.

I often hears mein Katrine sing
Und often hears her scoldt,
Git me mein leetle yaller hen
Vat lays der eggs of goldt.

QUACKERY.

Are you a chicken quack? Shake! We are glad you aren't a hatchet fiend. They tell you "it seldom pays to doctor a sick chicken." Well, here are 100 big Rocks. They show signs of roup. You may lose a half dozen in treatment, but the hatchet remedy cleans up the coop. Yes, that was civil war surgery. "Saw off that leg," and off it came till legs and arms piled even with the window sill. Osterize your chickens? Well, we don't. The investigation of disease has led to a system of symptoms, causes and cures for poultry ailments that's a blessing to poultryman and fowl alike.

DON'TS.

Don't quote Scripture to the man who swindles you. It's casting pearls before swine.

Don't feed your chickens rot and expect them to be fit to eat and lay pure eggs. It's rotten.

Don't carry chickens by the legs. It's barbarous business. Ducks are carried by the neck. Rubber!

Don't sell salt, lime, glass or storage eggs for fresh stock. It's a mighty sneaky fox that never gets caught.

Don't let your wife get the reputation of having all the chicken knowledge on the place. It shows you're easy.

Don't say you have good stock for sale. Chickens of that breed always come home to scratch.

Don't get crazy if your neighbor's hen flies over the fence, especially when your "yaller" dog tracks all the porches in town. Hiss!

Don't get chicken crazy and mortgage your house to buy incubators. When the sheriff comes in at the door chicken fever flies out the window.

Don't get the chicken fever simply because the other fellow won a silver cup. Not every honest fellow gets a silver cup, and all is not silver that shines.

Don't get the lines if eggs drop in price. The farmer's pullets are leaking their debut. But, if a manager, you are getting more eggs now than ever, and the quantity makes up for lower price.

THE BACK YARD FANCIER.

Is he a new bird? No; he is older even than his oldest head and she is related to the rock that crew thrice. Is he restricted to any locality? No; he is everywhere. His roster challenge in Maine is answered by a Shanghai in Porto Rico. His Plymouth Rock's clarion to the sun as it rises from the Atlantic is shouted back by the cocks of Honolulu and Manila bay where they raise game chickens for religious purposes. You have the back yard fancier in your own town. He is so near that when his hen cackles over a new laid egg it wakens the baby. His roosters crow so loudly on a Sunday morning that you are cheated out of a half day's sleep.

This gentleman of back lotters has thus far succeeded in confining the chicken fever to a small area. If it succeeds in reaching the solar plexus, he will soon have a bad case of poultry farm. His stock is "fair to middlin'" and generally provides eggs for the family eat and custards and an occasional roast for the preacher.

Does poultry pay him? It does. If he makes a little profit, his investment is small, and he can rejoice. If he just makes the feed, he can buy eggs and roasts no cheaper, and his principal has worked for it. If it falls it's back, he must remember that eggs from his own hens and roasts from his own pens are more delicious and valuable than an unknown quantity.

FEATHERS AND EGGSHELLS.

When you look round for eggs for hatching, don't get the cheap kind.

Too many Canadian chickens are crossing the line to suit some northern fanciers.

California business men are offering inducements to poultrymen to settle in that state. A fine flock of White Leghorns would look mighty pretty in an orange grove.

If you have done your best to get a hatch from that old chaptrap incubator and only half succeeded, what's the use to try, try again? Buy a dependable machine and you'll quit swearing.

"I'm dirty, and John's dirty, too," replied a lady when asked the age of herself and husband. In her case she was dirty and yet clean, but some poultrymen are never above being dirty and yet are overdirty.

Pennsylvania raised over 400,000 green ducks in 1907. Did Jeff and the University of Pennsylvania turned out a drove of young green quacks, but they are now outdone. Cornell has established a chair of poultry husbandry. Will Old Jeff and the U. of P. still keep their slow waddle, or have they enough quack specialists?

When strictly fresh eggs are taken to the store the grocer should allow an even trade at the retail price. If the poultryman drops below the retail egg price, then the grocer should lower the price on goods exchanged. No fair dealer will demand two profits. A dog in the manger is bad, a hog in the hen's nest is worse, but a cross of dog and hog in a business deal is a blue ribbon hybrid.

The prevalence of soft corn is affording a problem for farmer, miller, stock raiser and poultryman to worry over. In some states half the corn is moldy. We have saved ours by running it through the power cutter and feeding it cob and all. But where's the corn to come from next summer? The duck men will yell the loudest, but these soft rooster fellows ought to leap for joy.

C. M. Barnitz.

"Has your wife any bad habits?"

"Yes; she was telling me this morning that her riding habit was not fit to be seen."

Barter and Exchange.

By JANE LEE.

Copyrighted, 1908, by P. C. Eastment.

The evening paper contained very little news. Evening papers were getting stupid and dry—at least so thought Ethel Yorke as she turned over one page after the other in hopes of finding an item of some interest.

Aimlessly her glance wandered from one sheet to another, and her attention was finally attracted to the "exchange" column. Only one ad. seemed to interest her. She read it to the end, mused to herself, "I wonder," then read it again aloud to herself to see if it sounded the least bit plausible.

"Will exchange a first class typewriter in A1 condition for genuine antiques. Fakirs need not apply. J. H. G., Box 411."

"Antiques!" commented Ethel to herself. "Well, we're strong on antiques—have everything from the human to still life, from dear old Aunt Cornelia to the pen used in signing the Declaration of Independence. Then, again, Aunt Cornelia is worth more than a secondhand typewriter, and the pen is probably not worth the belt on the old machine. Let me think."

Aunt Cornelia appeared at the doorway as if in answer to the suggestion.

"Whom are you talking to, Ethel?" she asked as she glanced around the apparently empty room. "It seems to be a very one sided conversation, for I hear only your own voice," she added.

"Auntie, dear, I am conversing with a very bright young person of my acquaintance—none other than yours truly, Ethel Yorke," said Ethel, with a sweeping bow. "Auntie, I want a typewriter, and"—

"I know you do, dearie, but talking to yourself won't get one."

"Auntie, I'm not fooling. I want a typewriter, and I'm going to get one. Behold!" said Ethel as she presented Aunt Cornelia with the ad. to read. The old lady read it carefully, glanced at Ethel, then said:

"Well, dearie, there is the old melodeon. That is a true antique. Your Grandfather Parker gave that to your grandmother for a wedding present. It is all carved by hand and inlaid with teakwood."

Aunt Cornelia sighed as she went on. "I suppose if you want to learn to be a stenographer and go out in the workaday world you must have a typewriter on which to learn, and I guess you had better offer the dear old melodeon in exchange."

The ad. was duly answered, and within forty-eight hours a prompt reply was received saying that the owner of the typewriter would call that evening to inspect the so called antique.

Ethel answered the doorbell of the little apartment that evening for the household insisted of no maid since the loss of their little fortune. A tall, smartly dressed man entered and was ushered into the sitting room, followed by Ethel.

"Are you the young lady who wants a typewriter?" he asked as he took in the graceful lines of her well rounded figure, her mass of red brown hair and the eyes out of her beautiful face.

"Yes," she replied as she offered him a chair. "I want to become an expert typist, and I was attracted by your ad. Here is the melodeon, if you want to look it over," and she walked across the room and lighted another gas jet to exhibit her instrument to better advantage. The man followed in silence.

"It's a really truly antique," said Ethel. "I'm not a fakir such as you suggest in your ad."

The young man walked up to the beautiful old melodeon, a priceless treasure to one who knew its value. For the moment he seemed lost in his admiration of the delicate workmanship, the beautifully tinted woods, and he sat down before it, dreaming. The girl looked at the man as if upon the figure in a picture. The lights fell upon him as he sat before the instrument, and she wondered why he did not speak. Maybe, after all, the old thing was worth nothing.

Howard Philips, man of leisure and collector of antiques, turned to his companion, hardly knowing which he admired most, the inanimate wooden treasure or the beautiful girl.

"If acceptable to you, Miss Yorke, I will take the melodeon, giving you in exchange the typewriter and a bonus of $50," he finally said. "The instrument is a beauty and a very rare specimen," he added.

The final arrangements were completed, and the next day found Ethel in possession of a typewriter and Philips with the melodeon. Philips went on with his search for antiques, but somehow he felt that the greatest treasure on which his eyes had rested in months—aye, even years—was the girl whose face seemed to haunt his dreams.

A terrific snow and hail storm kept him indoors some weeks after the purchase, and Philips sat down before the instrument to see what sort of music it would produce. His fingers ran over the keys, but no sound came forth. He pedalled with greater force, yet silence was his only reward.

Something was wrong within, and his deft fingers went to work in the mechanism, and after several minutes' search he was rewarded by finding a package pressed against the keys.

The package was apparently a wad of old papers; but, with the true instinct of the collector, Philips began to undo the yards and yards of twine about the long bundle. He was speechless. Before him lay a pile of bills, money that was not his by any other right than possession. The girl's money!

He counted it carefully twice—$1,300. He must find the girl and return it. Here was the longed for excuse to see her again.

The storm had somewhat abated and in a few minutes he started to the little apartment in search of the girl. He was informed that the Yorkes had moved out three weeks ago. Where? Nobody knew! The janitor thought they had moved to a smaller flat in Harlem.

Now that he could not find the girl Philips realized the folly of not having kept track of her. Perhaps it had been love at first sight. Indeed, as he thought about it seriously he knew that he was very much in love. But how could he tell her so if he could not find her?

A visit to the postoffice left him none the wiser. They furnished no addresses. He drifted home to his open fire and the evening paper. He sat in the twilight gazing in the embers, and it seemed that every flame carried with it a shadow of the girl.

He read the advertisements from force of habit and was about to throw the paper down and refill his pipe, when his eye caught this ad.:

"Young lady will give French lessons in exchange for lessons on the typewriter. Apply after 6. E. T. Y., 2 Broadway."

Philips sat up a bit straighter in his armchair. Could it be she? At least it was worth finding out.

At 8 o'clock that evening Philips rang the bell of the Harlem flat, to be admitted and made welcome by Ethel.

"You see, Miss Yorke, I am here again," he said as he turned to the girl. She seemed more lovely than ever. "I have been trying to find you for a long time, but you had run away from your old home, and I only traced you by the exchange column. The fact is—well—er—how would you consider me as a teacher?"

Ethel's eyes danced. "You see, Mr. Philips, I tried so hard to pick it out, but could not, so I thought of your idea of exchange and put that ad. in the paper," she explained. "I did not dream you taught typing."

"To be honest, I do not. But I have something here—something I found in the old melodeon that will buy hundreds of lessons." And he handed her the precious roll of bills.

A cry of joy brought Aunt Cornelia to the room, and a careful inspection of the money revived memories of a queer maiden aunt who did not believe in savings banks.

Of course Philips had to remain and discuss the wonderful find, and this made his one of the only visits, so that the next ad. inserted by either appeared under the column headed "Marriages."

The Diamond.

Writing on "The Romance of the Diamond" in the North American Review, Sir William Crookes refers to the theory advanced by some scientists that the diamond is a gift to us heaven conveyed to earth in meteoric showers, and he confesses that the theory is not without support. His description of the Kimberley diamond mines is interesting. The writer says:

"Many circumstances point to the conclusion that the diamond of the chemist and the diamond of the mine are strangely akin as to origin. It is evident that the diamond has not been formed in situ in the blue ground where it is found. The genesis must have taken place at vast depths under enormous pressure. The explosion of large diamonds on coming to the surface shows extreme tension. More diamonds are found in fragments and splinters than in perfect crystals, and it is noteworthy that, although these splinters and fragments must be derived from the breaking up of a large crystal, yet in only one instance have pieces been found which could be fitted together, and these occurred at different levels. Does not this fact point to the conclusion that the blue ground is not their true matrix? Nature does not make fragments of crystals. As the edges of the crystals are still sharp and unabraded, the locus of formation cannot have been very distant from the present sites. There were probably many sites of crystallization differing in place and time or we should not see such distinctive characters in the gems from different mines nor indeed in diamonds from different parts of the same mine."

How to Make Your Fern Grow.

If you have a fern that does not grow fast enough, try putting the pot in hot water—not boiling, but too hot to bear the hand. This is especially good for the beautiful fern that resembles the wild fern that grows on some shady hillside.

How to Drive Away Wrinkles.

Use both hands, place the finger directly beneath the eyes, press gently around the outer corners and upward, following the contour of the eye. This movement will also remove bagginess surrounding the eyes and should be applied fifty times every day

LANDED IN THE IONIA PRISON

Deuell and Cooley Sentenced Monday Morning by Judge Mayne.

TAKEN THERE BY SHERIFF TUESDAY

Further Plans to Escape Discovered and Balked by Clerk Lewis.

Remarkable Tribute to Mothers Written by Deuell Worth Careful Reading—Published in Full.

Monday morning Judge Mayne opened court and sentenced Edward Cooley and Arthur Deuell, the two men who tried to escape from the county jail last week. Cooley drew an indeterminate sentence of not less than one year nor more than fourteen years, with a recommendation of eighteen months, and Deuell the same with a recommendation of two years. They were taken to Ionia Tuesday morning by Sheriff McWain.

According to statements made by Walter Bannister, a colored prisoner, whose sentence expired Saturday, these two men had laid further plans to make their escape. Bannister, on being released Saturday, took the afternoon boat for Boyne City. Business had called Clerk Lewis to Boyne City the same day, and he was a passenger on the boat with Bannister. In a conversation with Bannister, he was told that the prisoners had sought his aid in further plans for escape. Bannister stated that he had promised Cooley and Deuell to furnish them with a couple of saws, and he was expected to return to Charlevoix Sunday night, crawl through the coal chute into the cellar at the court house, and pass the saws through the jail doors to them. They had planned to use a rope, reaching out of the doors of their cell and throwing it as near the jail door as possible, then Bannister was to get hold of the end of the rope, tie on the saws, so they could draw them in to their cells. They would then repeat the performance of a few nights previous and make their escape. Bannister said he had no intentions of keeping his word, and revealed the whole plot to Lewis. He also stated that the men confined had in their possession an oil stone, once they had been using to sharpen their razors, and had placed this in one of their socks, and would use as a weapon to lay out Jailer Drigget when he brought in their supper Monday night. Lewis left the boat when it stopped at the dock of the D. M. Ferry seed house, and telephoned Jailer Drigget the plans of the prisoners as had been told him, thus warning him of his danger.

Drigget confronted the prisoners, telling them he had been warned as to their intentions, and told them to deliver their weapon or he would search their cells. At first the prisoners proclaimed their innocence, but finally handed over to him the stone Banuister said they had in their possession.

One of the prisoners still in the jail said that last Sunday Deuell was in a repentant mood and spent a large portion of the day composing an epistle which he addressed "To Men Only, in Behalf of Old Mothers." This effort was secured by the COURIER, and as it is one worthy careful and thoughtful reading, we publish it in full below:

"Man, if you have an old mother be good to her. Kiss the old faded lips. Hold in yours the work-knotted old hands. Scatter a few of the flowers of tenderness and appreciation in her pathway while she is alive and can be made happy by them. Don't wait to put all your affection and gratitude and reverence for her into a costly tomb stone of marble, inscribed, "Mother." Don't wait to throw all your bouqets on her grave. It's mighty doubtful whether an angel in heaven takes any interest in cemeteries or gets any satisfaction from revisiting earth and contemplating a flattering tombstone; but it is an utter certainty you can make old mother's heart sing for joy by showing her, while she is alive, just one tithe of the love and appreciation that you will heap upon her when she is dead.

"Makes her feel in the way. He neglects her. He never says a word of affection to her. He never pays her any little attentions. When she ventures an opinion, he cuts it short with curt contempt. When she tells her garrulous old stories, as old people will, he does not even try to conceal how he is bored. In a thousand unintentional ways the old mother is made to feel she is a cumberer of the ground; an impediment in the household; an old-fashioned and useless piece of furniture everyone will be glad to be rid of. Under this coldness and neglect the poor old mother's heart is breaking and in a letter written in a trembling and feeble handwriting, she asks me if I cannot say something that her son will read and that may make him think.

"Ah, if I only could. If I could only say to him: "Man, man give love as well as duty to your mother. Give her the wine of life as well as the bread. Don't forget the woman who never forgets you."

PERMANENT BALL TEAM

Arrangements Made to Organize One Tuesday Night.

Practice to Start at Once—A Move in the Right Direction.

At a meeting held at Bedford's store Tuesday night, arrangements were made for the organizing of a permanent ball team of local players. Grounds will be fixed up, uniforms ordered and practice will commence Thursday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock.

Rollie L. Lewis was elected captain, A. J. Usher manager. Nothing is so necessary to a town as a good ball team, not only for the recreation it gives, both to the players and spectators, but the loyalty to one's own town which it inspires.

The Charlevoix team desires to make arrangements for games with neighboring teams.

Put It In the Paper.

A leading paper in a neighboring town furnishes the following execellent illustration of the advantages of advertising:

The other day a local merchant happened to see a farmer receiving some goods at the depot and noticed that they came from a mail-order house. He noticed also that the goods were right in his line and the same that he had carried in his store for years. He immediately approached the farmer and said, "I could have sold you every article you have there for less money than you paid the house and saved you the freight besides."

"Then why in the devil didn't you say so?" answer-the farmer. "I have taken two county papers for a year and have never seen a line about your selling these goods. This mail order house sent advertising matter to me asking for my trade and they got it. If you have any bargains, why didn't you have them put in the paper so we can see what they are?" They ended the argument and the merchant went up to corral other merchants who never advertise and explain to them that the mail order house was ruining their business.

"STIFFS" AND "GRAFTERS"

Will Fight to a Finish On Diamond Next Week

Business Men Take Exception to Name and Will Clean Up On the "Profesh."

The businees men of Charlevoix have organized a ball team and Tuesday issued a challenge to the professional men of the city. The professionals couldn't be bluffed and offered to play nine innings for a fish supper, the losers to pay for the supper. The date of the game was fixed for May 14, and on that date, rain or snow, the fur will fly.

Mayor Rose will pitch the first ball and Ex-mayor Armstrong will try to catch it. "Lardie" Meech will umpire until he is killed, then the game will proceed without an "ump" unless Dr. Bartlett shows up, in which event the diamond will be enlarged to accomodate the balance of the actors.

No admission will be charged and donations will be given to the board of public works to pay salaries.

The business men refer to the professionals as the "Grafters," and the professionals dub the business men the "Stiffs." Each member of the teams have pledged themselves to occupy the pitcher's box for one inning, so as to show no partiality.

Judge Mayne is captain of the "Grafters" and A. J. Usher of the "Stiffs." Following is the line up:

BEAN CROP IN PERIL

Warning Issued to Farmers Against the Rust of Plants.

G. W. Allmendinger, secretary of the Michigan Bean Jobbers' association, has issued the following warning to farmers against "bean rust:" "The bean crop of the state is worth annually from $3,000,000 to $7,000,000. In recent years there has come into existence here a disease commonly known as 'bean rust,' which has played havoc with the bean crop in New York state. Beans showing rust spots should not be used for seed, as when they are used for seed the probability is that the resulting crop will be affected to a very large extent.

"It may be said further that the crop of 1907 was one of the poorest in the history of the state. Many beans were soft and not thoroughly ripened. If soft stock is used for seed the result must naturally be an inferior crop. Farmers are therefore urged to use the same care with regard to bean seed that they would use in planting corn. It is of the greatest importance that this crop, in which Michigan lends the world, shall not show deterioration through the use of poor seed.'

ILLINOIS IN PORT

Reached This City on Her First Trip Friday Night

Came Up in Place of Steamer Missouri—Captain Stufflebeam in Command.

The steamer Illinois, of the North Michigan Transportation company, made its first appearance in this port last Friday night, leaving Chicago at midnight Wednesday in place of the Missouri. The Missouri is in the dry dock receiving repairs and being repainted.

The Illinois is in command of Captain John Stufflebeam, the first officer being William McGuiggan, second officer Walter Petrosky, chief engineer Ed. Wederhohl, assistant engineer Gene Beckel, steward George W. LeRoy, purser Harry G. Foster, assistant purser Frank Carlin.

Few passengers were aboard, but the Illinois carried a nice load of freight for merchants along the route.

Dock Agent O. E. Wilbur informs us there will be another boat out of Chicago Wednesday night.

ALWARD WITHDRAWS

Clare Man Will Not Be In the Race for Congressional Honors.

Dennis E. Alward, of Clare, reading clerk in the house of representatives, has withdrawn from the congressional race in the eleventh district of Michigan. This leave only two in the race, F. H. Dodge, of Mt. Pleasant, and Geo. Covell, of Traverse City. Mr. Alward authorizes the publication of the following:

"To the republicans of the eleventh congressional district: I had expected by this time to be in the eleventh district, actively engaged in the campaign for the republican nomination, but my duties have kept me here. It may be some weeks yet before congress adjourns. This prevents my getting into the contest on an even footing with other candidates and I therefore feel it my duty to my friends at home and to myself to announce that I will not be a candidate.

"D. E. Alward."

DIED IN INFANCY

Death of Infant Child of Rev. and Mrs. F. H. Bayles at Reed City.

Word was received of the death of the infant child of Rev. and Mrs. F. H. Bayles, of Reed City, where Mrs. Bayles was visiting her parents. Rev. Bayles was at Blissfield at the time of the little one's death. The funeral took place at Reed City April 29, interment at that place. Later information states that Rev. Bayles and wife will return to Charlevoix sometime this week.

Much sympathy is expressed for the bereaved family.

SENIOR PLAY FRIDAY NIGHT

"Higbee of Harvard" by the Senior Class Charlevoix High School.

Cast of Characters Given—Promise of an Evening of Enjoyment.

The senior class of the Charlevoix high school will present the play, "Higbee of Harvard" at the Charlevoix theater Friday evening, May 8. All indications point to its being a success in every way as the members have devoted as much time to its preparation as possible without neglecting their school duties. Everybody should make arrangements to attend early, not only to show their appreciation of the efforts of the class, but for their own pleasure as well. Undoubtedly the house will be crowded. Below follows the cast:

Lorin Higbee of Harvard, Henry Partridge.

Watson W. Higbee, his father, Sam Levinson.

Theodore Dalrymple, chum of Lorin, John Lyndklip.

Senator Withrow, Don Campbell.

Nancy Withrow, senator's daughter, Dorothy Iddinga.

Madge Cummings, a dear friend of Nancy, Doris Kane.

Mrs. Ballow, senator's sister, Katheryn LaPeer.

Malvina Medgrove, a widow from the west, Mac Felts.

Higgins, the butler, Cleland Mayne.

TO HEAD CAMP MODERN WOODMEN

J. T. Ridley, of Greenville, and J. E. Fuller, of Alma, also Winners.

Next Meeting Will be Held at Saulte Ste Marie If F. Baker Re-Elected State Consul.

The State Camp of Modern Woodmen of America held their state camp meeting at Petoskey this week. The city was in the hands of the Woodmen, over five hundred members of the order being in the city, which was finely decorated and did itself proud as an entertainer.

Tuesday was taken up in welcoming the arrivals who kept pouring into the city on every train, and a drill given by the famous Kent county team, who did the work in the evening to a class of seven in a manner which could not be excelled, after which several speeches were made by prominent members of the order.

Wednesday morning the business of the camp commenced. The chief contest was over the election of delegates to the head camp, which meets at Peoria, Illinois, next June. Right here is where Charlevoix county's interest came to the front, her candidate, F. A. Butler being the winner for first delegate, from the eleventh district, J. T. Ridley, of Greenville, and J. E. Fuller, of Alma, being chosen as his associates, at the eleventh district caucus.

The meeting of the camp proper was called to order at 10 a. m. by H. F. Baker, of Chehoygan, state consul, 110 delegates being present. Mr. Baker was re-elected state consul and J. C. Watt of Saranac, state secretary.

Resolutions were adopted recommending the re-election and appointment by the head camp of all head camp officers residing in Michigan.

Detroit, Alpena, Mt. Clemens, Saginaw, and Saulte Ste. Marie were all candidates for the next meeting in 1911, Sault Ste. Marie winning out.

LIQUOR BOND ACCEPTED

Bond of Five Saloonists Presented to Board of Aldermen.

Cemetery Board Tell Reason for Narrowing of Bryant Avenue—Other Business.

The board of aldermen met in extra session Thursday evening. The mayor and Alderman Ward were absent.

About the first business done was the acceptance of the liquor bonds of Frank Chatupka, Meyers & Nugent, L. P. Adams, Levi Payne, Ludwig Holmes and S. Quincy Williams.

A. F. Bridge was heard regarding making exit from the opera house easier in case of fire. Mr. Bridge suggested placing a four foot stairway on the north side of the building, commencing from a point about where the first window is located on the north side and leading down to the edge of the sidewalk at the front. Besides this he would make an entrance to the stage on both sides of the gallery, leading direct down onto the stage, thus relieving the jam at the gallery stairway. The matter was laid over one week for further investigation.

Robert Reid was given the job as street cleaner, compensation $1.75 per day.

The bond of Franklin Hines and Egbert Carpenter, druggists, was accepted, E. A. Jefferies and W. H. Miller as bondsmen.

Considerable time was spent in discussing the proposed sidewalk on May street from Hurlburt avenue to the Slover road. Henry Wood thought it would be imposing a hardship upon him to build a sidewalk the entire length of the land owned by him fronting on May street, and asked the council to have part of it built on one side of the street, then cross to the other, thereby letting part of the cost fall upon those who would be benefited. The matter was laid over for investigation.

Charles S. See and John Burns appeared for the cemetery board and stated that their reasons for narrowing Bryant avenue was to lessen the amount of work to be done by that board. It was the opinion of the council to find out the sentiment of the lot owners affected by the change before any further action was taken.

PROGRAM COMPLETED

Arrangements Made for the Summer Meeting at Bay View.

The new programs for the Bay View camp meeting to be held July 8 to the 19, 1908, have been issued by the committee. Rev. W. M. Ward, chairman; Rev. F. E. Day, secretary, and Rev. A. T. Ferguson and Prof. F. S. Goodrich. The services will be held in the different places as follows: At 8:00 o'clock services in Hitchcock Hall; all bible school sessions in Evelyn hall; all 2:00 o'clock lectures in the auditorium; all children's meetings in Epworth hall; all mission study class work in Hitchcock hall; evening services in auditorium; Sunday school in Epworth home. We notice in the program that Rev. Arba Marlin will deliver a lecture on Thursday, July 9, at 2:00 o'clock on the subject of "Through Europe on a Bicycle."

COW STABLES.

Objection to Cement Mausoleums—An Improvement.

A great deal of fault is found with cement stables for cows, or for pigs for that matter, because they are apt to be damp. They often are. Too many cases of pneumonia have occurred where cattle have been put in newly made cement stables not to make their resemblance to tombs suggestive. This won't do. A board sleve is preferable to a cement mausoleum. However successful we may be in turning our cows into milking machines, we can't teach them to thrive in a cellar.

The illustration is from a photograph of a cow stable to which this objection can't be taken. The foundations are of concrete. The frame is of 6 by 8 inch stuff, while the studs are 2 by 4 inches. The rafters are of 4 by 4 inch material. The roof is peaked, and the space between the ceiling and the peak is used as an air chamber. The construction of the ceiling is the same as the roof, except the angle is not so great. On the outside of the studs are nailed metal laths. Over them is a two inch coat of cement. On the inside of the studs is tacked heavy building paper, with generous laps; then two inch furring strips are nailed to the studs and the metal laths put on. This gives a double air space and assures dryness.

The ceiling construction consists of metal laths with one inch of cement. The mangers are built in the same manner as the walls and can be used for water as well as feed. The King system of ventilation is used. The eyebolts in the ceiling are for an overhead carrier system. There are two ventilators that go straight through to the peak.

The cost is less than if the stable were built all of wood. In the case of altering old barns the siding could be taken down, the metal laths put on, then the cement applied, and the result would meet all the requirements, concludes a writer in Country Gentleman.

COMMUNITY BREEDING.

A Straight Business Proposition. Buyers Pleased, Sellers Profited.

By J. H. GRISWOLD, Minnesota.

Co-operative breeding, or community breeding, gives promise of great achievements in the future. Our great dairy industry is carried on largely in the dark. Very few owners of dairy herds know with any certainty what their herds are doing, and whether they are kept at a profit or a loss few can tell.

Sires of no particular breed, immature and utterly worthless, are often used. If a community will form an association, study the breeds and carefully select the breed that they like best and is best suited to their conditions and that they will be willing to stand by ever after; then they have laid a sure foundation for future prosperity. The advantages are far reaching and promise great reward, greater, I believe, than we can conceive of.

This much we know—that when an association is formed interest is aroused and a desire for better things is inspired. Full blood sires are bought, and if a man feels too poor to buy a good animal alone two or three will go in together and buy. As good sires are bought, exchanges are made, so that a choice animal can be kept near the same locality during the entire period of his usefulness.

The secretary should be a live business man, be in touch with every member, he should know what stock each one has and what he desires to have. Through him exchanges are made and buyer and seller brought together. When they have stock to sell he carries advertising for the whole association, thus lessening the expense of advertising. He should have the registry books of the breed, so that a prospective animal can be traced and its worth determined.

When animals are for sale, they are reported to the secretary so that a buyer can find out by him just what can be bought and where it can be bought, and a buyer will go to such a place when he would not go from house to house in the uncertainty of finding what he wanted. In shipping there is also an advantage, as animals can be shipped much cheaper in car lots than singly.

Community breeding opens the way for cow testing associations, and they begin to weigh and test each cow and weed out the least profitable ones. They also begin to test for tuberculosis, and this work can be done cheaper when several are working together.

Lake Mills, Wis., is noted the world over for its cattle. Why? Because they have been working together raising one breed. A buyer has large numbers to pick from, he can buy in large lots, and he can get what he wants, and he is willing to pay the price.

Now, this is business—straight, honest, legitimate business. It will give an uplift to the farmer himself; it will bring comforts to his family and education to his children.

How It Works in Wisconsin.

An example of the value of the community working along one line is well illustrated at Lake Mills, Wis., where the farmers and breeders are devoting their energies to Holstein-Friesian cattle. Over $100,000 worth of grade Holsteins are shipped out of Lake Mills annually. Counting the value of the pure breed produced, the total income for stock in that community amounts in round numbers to $200,000 per year. When a scrub cow sells from $35 to $45 the grade is selling from $90 to $90. Twelve-month-old heifers are selling as high as $30 apiece. During a single year from forty to fifty carloads of grade Holstein cattle left this community for Mexico. One buyer is reported to have purchased during the last few years as high as 800 head.

In a similar manner Guernseys are being pushed at Wausau, Wis., where recently a carload of grade Guernseys sold for $75 per head and another carload for $72 per head.—Professor Otis, Wisconsin.

Corn and Hogs.

It is pointed out that upward of three-fourths of the corn of the 1907 crop now being marketed grades No. 4 or below and that this corn must sell at about 10 cents a bushel below quotations for No. 2, the standard of the market, so that hogs are paying for their corn after all. The statement as to quality and price is true, but it does not follow that the feeder is getting an adequate return for his corn marketed in the form of pork, remarks National Stockman. Inferior corn makes poorer returns to the feeder in proportion to its inferiority. Everywhere this year feeders assert that they are not getting the usual returns from the corn they feed, and no doubt they are correct. That feeding is the best way to use this corn is probable, but hogs at $4 or less do not pay high prices for it, or market prices either.

Supplementary Feed.

While tankage is a cheap and convenient carrier of protein in feeding hogs that follow cattle, it is believed that other feeds, such as linseed oil meal, soy beans, skimmilk, buttermilk or middlings, would greatly increase the efficiency of the "cattle-hog" in making economical gains. Hogs following cattle are often not supplied with the ration best suited for the production of the greatest gains.

Perhydrase Milk.

It is a very interesting statement of H. Strellinger, a German writer, that milk produced by the method of Mueller and Romer for the commercial production and distribution of perhydrase milk will keep for months and that it can then be freed of its hydrogen peroxide and will be so little changed that it tastes like fresh raw milk.

For Hard Milkers.

Get a teat bistoury and open the teats of the hard milking cows so that the milk will flow to suit you, is the advice of Hoard's Dairyman.

THE FEEDER.

Some molasses feeds have been found to contain large quantities of unground weed seeds.

These seeds pass through the animal undigested and are distributed over the field with the manure.

The farmer not only pays at the rate of $26 to $28 a ton for material having no feeding value, but he likewise is obliged to spend his money and energy in destroying the pests the following season.—J. B. Lindsay.

Water One-half the Live Weight.

Peas are especially good feed for lambs and are eaten with better appetite than any other grain, but the mixture with corn makes a better balanced ration. There is more digestible nutriment in this mixture than in any other combined grain foods. I have also found the pea straw to be a very much more agreeable feed for roughage than any other kind of fodder.

But there are several other things to be considered in feeding besides the feed alone. The lambs should be kept in comfort and in an airy and warm shed in which they may run out at will and have a supply of fresh pure water from a well always in reach. Water is not as often thought of in this connection as it should be. As it forms one-half the live weight of a lamb, it furnishes a considerable help in the feeding not only directly, but as an inducement to the lambs to eat heartily and digest and assimilate the food more completely. Plenty of water aids digestion and helps to increase the weight of flesh and fat made more than many persons think. All feeding animals, but especially sheep, should have an abundant supply of good water, and well water is preferable, as it does not injure the lambs by chilling, as ice cold water does.—H. S. in Country Gentleman.

Molasses For Pigs.

If molasses is used for nutrition of pigs it must be mixed with foods reasonably rich in protein. If skimmilk is not available a combination by weight of two parts bran, one part gluten feed, one part cornmeal and one part molasses or one part tankage, four parts cornmeal and one part molasses ought to prove satisfactory. The writer sees no particular advantage under ordinary conditions for the northern farmer to employ molasses for pig feeding other than as an appetizer.—J. B. Lindsay.

Hay in Finishing Steers.

The results of a single experiment in which but little more than half a full feed of corn was supplied two lots of fattening steers suggest the possibility of making a larger use of hay in finishing cattle for market than is ordinarily made and at less cost, especially where hay is relatively low and corn high in price.—H. R. Smith, Nebraska.

Professor Woolcomb is so absentminded that last night when he heard himself knocking the ashes out of his pipe he called out, "Come in."

"Come on, look for it!" crowed Phelan, fairly hopping up and down in rage and excitement. "Come a-runnin'! An' while you're huntin' my scalp don't overlook one bet. I'm after yours!"

"Mine, you little shrimp! Why"—

"Yes, yours,—Horrigan,—you cur. You're pretty chesty an' strong standin' on the top of the organization, but you're no bloomin' statue of Liberty. You can be torn down, and here's the man who's goin' to do the tearin'. Me—Alderman Jimmy Phelan of the Eighth'"

"Let it go at that for now. You'll wake up in the fall, when the election"—

"Let it go at that for keeps, I"—

"Mr. Wainwright," broke off Horrigan, "if this was the business you wanted to talk over with me here"—

"It isn't," assured the thoroughly uncomfortable financier

"Oh! Then we can get down to real business perhaps when this fellow's gone."

"That lets me out," observed Phelan cheerfully as he picked up his hat. "G'by, Mr. Wainwright. G'by, Mr. Gibbs. Horrigan, I'll"—

"But you'll stay to lunch, alderman, won't you?" urged Horrigan, with an effort at cordiality that deceived no one.

"No, thanks," replied Phelan. "When the curtain's down and the orchestra's gone home I don't need no usher to poke me in the ribs to tell me the show's out. As for stayin' to break bread with Dick Horrigan, I'd sooner have a jolly little grub fest with Wiley's poison squad. Goodby, all. Horrigan, as for you, some day I'll cross two sticks of dynamite under you and you'll scatter so wide that the inquest over your political remains will have to be held in fourteen counties."

"I am so sorry, Mr. Horrigan, that this should have happened in my house," said Wainwright as the irate alderman stalked out, leaving the boss staring after him in dumb fury. "I meant it for the best and"—

"Mr Wainwright," interrupted Horrigan, venting his pent-up wrath on his dismayed host, "this old world of ours is white with bones of failures, of fools, of deadbeats. In other words, of folks who 'meant it for the best.' Now let's get down to business."

"First let me introduce Mr Gibbs, He"—

"Glad to meet him, but he'll excuse me when I say I never talk business when there's a third party around. No offense, Mr. Gibbs. Just walk out and take a look at the view, like a good boy, won't you? Thanks."

Gibbs, at a warning look of appeal from Wainwright, checked the angry retort that sprang to his lips, turned on his heel and walked out. Horrigan, who had observed the glance exchanged between the two men, grudgingly attempted to soften the effect of his brusqueness.

"I didn't mean to snub your friend," said he, "but Phelan riled me, and I took it out on the next man I spoke to. What on earth set you to having Phelan here to meet me for, anyway?"

"Just as I said. I wanted to win him over to us. We will need every strong man we can get this fall. We"—

"You know a lot about finance, Mr. Wainwright. But you're a rank outsider in politics or you'd never have made such a break. I can't compromise with Phelan even if I wanted to. He's stood out against me, and I've got to smash him. If he could defy me and get away with it, other leaders would think they could do it, too, and in less than no time the organization would be split up into a dozen factions, and I'd be down and out. Understand? I've got to look out for discipline if I'm to hold the place I've won. When a man in the organization starts a fight against me, I must down him. There's no turning back. That's why I'm boss. Every man in the crowd knows he's got to obey me or fight me and that if it's fight it's a battle to the death. And he's the man who does the dying, not I. Now, you understand? So we can get to business. What"—

But business seemed this morning fated to many interruptions. The latest came in the form of Judge Newman, who, bustling into the room with all his customary pompous dignity, suddenly stopped in his tracks and wilted at sight of the boss.

"Good morning, Mr. Horrigan," said the judge ingratiatingly, wriggling under the boss' glower. "I hope I'm not here too early and that Mr. Wainwright has interceded for"—

"For your renomination?" queried Horrigan, speaking as though to a disgraced servant. "If that's what you're here for you might have spared yourself the trouble. What I told you before still goes."

"But, Mr. Horrigan, consider how long I've been on the bench, and"—

"And it's time you got your nose out of the feed bag and gave some one else a chance. You are"—

"I'm growing old, Mr. Horrigan!" pleaded the thoroughly cowed judge. "How can I go back to law practice and compete with younger men? Besides, Mrs. Newman declares"—

"I can't help that," returned Horrigan, quite unmoved. "You've had your share. We've got to look out for our own active workers—for the men we can count on to do the right thing."

"But, Mr. Horrigan," protested the judge, "I always try to do what is right."

"I said 'the right thing,'" corrected the boss. "See the difference?"

"Excuse me, judge," intervened Wainwright. "If you'll leave this matter in my hands, I will try to convince Mr. Horrigan of your fitness. Just leave it all to me."

"Oh, thank you so much, Charles!" cried the relieved judge. "I'm sure I can count on you. Mrs. Newman will be so grateful. Well, I won't detain you any longer. Goodby."

"Goodby, judge," answered Wainwright tolerantly.

"Goodby, Mr. Horrigan," went on Judge Newman, with effusion.

A grunt from Horrigan, who had turned his broad back on the visitor, was the only reply, and the judge departed to bear the message of hope to Mrs. Newman.

"Have you any special objections to Newman?" asked Wainwright.

"No," said Horrigan, "except I think perhaps there's men who can do better by us. You know how much it means sometimes to have the right judge handle your case."

"I think at a pinch we can manage Newman, and"—

"Oh, if it is a favor to you, all right. But it doesn't do those judiciary fellows any harm to keep them guessing awhile. It tames 'em and teaches 'em to mind—sort of keeps them in their places, you know. And now won't you tell that butler of yours not to let us be disturbed?"

Wainwright complied, and the two settled down to their deferred talk.

"How about the election this fall?" began the financier.

"We're already growing; but, just between you and me, it's going to be a hot fight. The people at large seem to be a little sore on the organization. A few deals lately have been a little raw, and some of the papers are kicking. Good Lord! If it wasn't for the newspapers what a cinch a toss would have in running a city! It'd be like taking pennies from a baby's bank. But"—

"Then you think there is some doubt about the election?"

"I wouldn't go so far as that. It'll be a tussle, but with plenty of cash and the right man for mayor—mark me, I say 'and the right man'—we ought to win."

"The woods are full of 'right men,'" replied Wainwright. "The money is the chief thing to consider. That is why I asked you here today. This is the point I'm getting at: As soon as election is safely over the Borough Street railway will apply for a franchise for a car line from Blank avenue to Dash street along the river front."

"I see!" nodded Horrigan. "And, as you own the City Surface line and as that is the Borough Street railway's worst rival, you want the Borough's franchise all killed when it comes before the board of aldermen."

"You're wrong. To paraphrase your own words, you know a lot about politics. I want the Borough Street railway's franchise granted, and I want the franchise to be perpetual."

"But I don't see what your driving at. If you intend to merge the Borough Street railway with your own City Surface line its charter will become void."

"I don't mean to merge them. I own both roads, and I run them separately."

"The —— you do!"

"That's a little surprise, eh? I haven't made any parade of it. I just went quietly to work, through Gibbs, and bought up a majority of the Borough stock. Now don't you see how the granting of the franchise and the news that I control the road will work when they are made known?"

"Sure! It'll send that stock sky high. You'll scoop in a million or two."

"A million or two!" echoed Wainwright scornfully. "Nearer"—

"Hold on!" interrupted Horrigan. "What's that noise?"

He had jumped to his feet with an alacrity that was surprising in so large a man and was listening intently.

"That clicking?" asked Wainwright. "Oh, that's only the private wire in my office."

"Private wire? Any operator?"

"Of course. Why?"

"Suppose he should happen to be listening to us?"

"Who? Thompson? Absurd!"

"I don't know. I'd rather"—

"Nonsense. It's Thompson, my private secretary, a man who's been with me nine years. I trust him as"—

"But I don't. I don't trust anybody. Send him into some other room."

"I can't. In his absence some important message might come, and if he wasn't there on the very moment to transmit it to me I might lose thousands. He's all right if ever a man was. I trust him implicitly."

"Oh, all right, then. Go on with what you were saying."

"I want the Borough Street railway franchise made perpetual. Catch my drift?"

"Sure. But the papers and the property holders will make a big kick."

Alwyn Bennett.

"Let them. They'll soon get hoarse and have to rest their throats. As long as we get the votes what do we care if"—

"Yes, yes!" agreed the boss impatiently. "That's all right, but what I want to know is, How does all this concern me?"

Horrigan threw himself back in his chair, uptilted cigar in one corner of his mouth, thumbs in waistcoat armholes and eyed his host quizzically. Wainwright did not even pretend not to understand. Still, instead of giving a direct answer he went on with seeming irrelevance:

"I am a public spirited citizen. I believe civic welfare would suffer by any change in municipal administration, so to keep the present party in power I am willing to donate to it $200,000 toward election expenses."

"That sounds pretty good as far as it goes, but maybe you didn't hear something I asked you a minute ago. What I want to know is, How does all this concern me?"

"I'm coming to that. As I said, I am a public spirited citizen. I'm also a good friend—such a good friend that I'm always glad to put my friends on to anything in the market that looks particularly promising. Suppose I carry for your account at the market price (that's 62 just now) 15,000 shares of Borough Street railway stock?"

"Well?"

"If this franchise is granted, Borough stock will go up at least 25 points within two days. That would clear up for you a profit of—let's see—about $375,000."

Horrigan had pulled a pencil from his pocket and was figuring on the back of an envelope.

"Yes," he said at last; "that's right, $375,000. That would be my profit, while yours would run into the millions. That's not warm enough friendship for me."

"Surely, that is a generous"—

"Generous, maybe, but I'd like something munificent—say 25,000 shares at 63. Then at the 25 point jump I'd make—I'd make"—consulting his figures on the envelope—"something over $600,000. That sounds better to me. Hey?"

UNEMPLOYED AND FOOD PRICES

Secretary of Agriculture Wilson predicts a bumper grain crop this year, provided climatic conditions continue good. He likewise predicts high prices for all agricultural products, even with bumper crops—with still higher prices, of course, should unfavorable weather conditions cut down the present optimistic crop estimates. The cause of the existing high prices for agricultural products, the secretary declares, is the more rapid development of the non-food producing than the food producing industries of the country—the greater increase of food consumers than of food producers. And in this connection he says:

"Just as soon as men looking for work go to the country districts for it instead of to the crowded cities, just so soon will prices find their normal level. But so long as all the unemployed rush to the cities and the farmer cannot get help to till and harvest and move his crops, just so long will the American workingman find the meat item on his bill of fare growing less frequent."

There is truth in the foregoing, but not the whole truth. The cost of food products in this country, as in the industrial world centers generally, has without doubt been permanently increased to a considerable extent, owing to the occupation of the larger proportion of free or cheap fertile agricultural and grazing lands. The diversion of unemployed labor to agricultural pursuits during industrial depressions will, of course, have a tendency to hold down food prices; but during periods of industrial activity the only way in which labor can be attracted to the farms is by the offering of such wages as will have a tendency to stiffen food prices rather than lessen them. An era of low food prices such as prevailed during the middle nineties will, in all probability, never again be seen in this country.—Grand Rapids Herald.

THE Michigan Republican Editorial Association, at its meeting at Lansing week before last pledged itself by an unanimous vote, to support and work for a straight-out primary election law, state wide for all parties and all candidates, down to coroners. It also pledged its support to the new constitution.

The subject of political advertising was thoroughly talked over and the following rules adopted.

All political advertising to be charged for at the regular commercial rates.

Paid matter appearing on editorial columns to be marked as advertisements.

Announcements of candidates to be published free, as news matter.

Any editor who holds up a candidate and charges above the regular rate or publishes paid matter in editorial columns without advertising marks to be expelled from association.

The next Republican state convention will be asked to put two members on the state committee chosen by the association.

With over sixty editors present, representing all sections of the state, agreeing perfectly on these subjects, unity of action is assured.

The old officers were all re-elected with the exception of treasurer, Mr. Willard having gone out of the business, W. E. Holt of Bellevue being chosen in his place.

MONROE county will present the name of William F. Knapp, of that county, to the republican state convention as a candidate for state treasurer. The strong claim made in Knapp's favor is that he is not connected in anyway with any bank or bankers, but is a farmer with a splendid record as a business man and public official.

To Our Farmer Friends.

The Charlevoix creamery has run two seasons the last twelve months continually. We have paid the best price ever paid for milk and cream for twelve consecutive months. We have done this at a loss, because the supply has not been sufficient to pay running expenses.

We need the milk or cream of every farmer within reach of our plant to make a success. It is to your interest to support us in every way possible. We cannot afford to gather your product until you have more. We ask you to arrange in each neighborhood to send in your cream. We will pay you Elgin price for your butter fat delivered to us. We will pay $1.00 per 100 lbs. milk and in July and August $1.25 per 100 pounds, for clean sweet milk. You cannot afford to peddle either milk, cream or butter and thus cripple the best market for all you can furnish at all times of year. Charlevoix has not been a good market, except in a small way for dairy products. The town will not grow or develop population to consume what you produce.

The creamery gives you an unlimited market at fair prices. Will you give it the support you should or will you continue to say "Oh yes, I want the creamery to run because I get a better price for my butter, but I want the other fellow to run it. Did it ever strike you that the other fellow might get tired and quit when your market will be poorer than ever because the country is producing more every year? Now is the time, not next year, to show your interest if you want this market to continue. Once it receives your united support it will benefit you in other ways, already planned but not put in effect, because you have not given the creamery the support it deserves. Think! Act! 1911

ANOTHER RECORD BROKEN

By Allie Moore in Chicago this Week at Riverview Park.

Chicago American of Monday Tells the Story of the Race—Time 2:32.

A big crowd attended the skating contests at Riverview Park last night, where Allie Moore won the semi-final in the one-mile championship race in 2:32, clipping two and four-fifths seconds off the record of William Robinson, made at the same rink. Robinson's record will stand, however, as an amateur performance, Moore being a professional. Questions as to the accuracy of the track have been set at rest by the course being measured and sanctioned by the Western Skating Association.

In the semi-final Allie Moore won but took matters too easily and went over the time limit of 2:40 that had been set for the one-mile contests. In the run off Moore won by twenty yards in 2:30 and finished well in hand. John Brereton, of this city, was second, while J. Beahan, also of this city was third. Joe Benson, of St. Louis fell in the third lap of the first heat.

BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS

Organize For the Year at Meeting Held Monday Night.

The Board of Public Works at their meeting held Monday night elected Capt. Campbell president of the board.

President Campbell appointed the following chairmen of committees.

Finance—Bridge
Water Works—Aekerl
Sewers—Holmes
Electric Lights—Webster

The petition for sewer on Petoskey avenue, from N. Bridge street to Lewis street, was discussed and clerk ordered to have city surveyor survey Petoskey avenue and estimate the cost.

A petition for placing new arc lights was presented, and referred to chairman of committee to investigate.

The superintendent and president of the board were instructed to formulate rules and regulations for the government of the water and electric lights, and present same at next meeting.

President Campbell set up the cigars in honor of his election and the board adjourned.

W. C. T. U. MEETING.

Will be Held at the Home of Mrs. F. H. Hubbard Friday Afternoon.

A business meeting of the W. C. T. U. will be held at the home of Mrs. F. H. Hubbard on Park avenue, Friday afternoon, May 8, at 3:00 o'clock.

The contest for new members will be closed and all new members are requested to be present and will be received in the initiatory form.

The following is the program:

Topic, "Prevention Mightier than Reform."
Violin solo, Mrs. Davidson.
Paper, Mrs. Campbell.
Recitation, Mrs. Powers.
Solo, Mrs. Conlter.
Story, Mrs. George Burns.

His Occupation.

Kind Old Gentleman—Well, here's a shilling for you, my poor man. You say the town council took away your occupation. I sympathize with you very much. That town council of ours have done so many stupid things. But how did they take away your occupation?

Tramp—Well, you see, sir, they went and pulled down the house I used to lean against.—London Mail.

The Hindoos consider their dead as sacred and do not allow them to be handled by alien hands, the nearest male relative—son, father or brother—preparing the body for burial, and if there be none of these relatives a son is adopted by the family for the purpose.

THE BRIDE'S TABLE.

How to Decorate It in a Charming Manner.

A pretty suggestion for a bride's table this year is a symbolic crown of happiness for the center of the table. The framework of the crown should consist of wire covered with white satin ribbon and maidenhair fern. Fill in the framework with white hyacinths and sturry white Japanese narcissus, and have the points of the crown tipped with tiny white lighted tapers. From the chandelier, sweeping low over the table center, poise a soft white dove, suspended by broad white satin ribbons. Crown the dove with tiny hyacinth flowers, and have streamers of narrow white ribbon fall gracefully from its beak to the places arranged for the guests. Have dainty white heart shaped bonbonnieres attached to the ribbon ends. Inclose a tiny white pencil and a bit of ribbon tied paper in each heart box, and bid each guest write some sweet message of love and happiness to the bride, which she may carry with her on her journey into the new life.

Another charming decorative scheme for a bride consists of four long, loose streamers of white satin ribbon, stretched diagonally across the room from each of the four corners of wall and ceiling. The ribbons lattice each other by crossing in the center of the room over the dining table, and from the ribbon latticework unequal lengths of white satin ribbon should fall toward the table center, each delicate streamer ending with a bit of smilax, a dainty bow and a single inverted Easter lily. The overturned flowers form exquisite natural wedding bells.

For the centerpiece use a large round table mirror, hedged about with natural and artificial lilies. The artificial flowers should be set in beds of smilax and should have tiny lighted yellow tapers fastened firmly in the hearts of the flowers. The effect of the table will be indescribably pure and bridelike, and a delicate touch may be added by having at every cover a single natural Easter lily. Remove the stamens of each flower, and fill the flower cup with a dash of whipped cream and orange ice.

How to Clean White Gloves.

There is no excuse for not wearing white gloves in the morning, because to keep them clean is so little trouble and absolutely no expense. In the afternoon or evening the gloves should be put to soak overnight in water that is only warm, but very soapy. Any good white laundry soap serves the purpose. In cases where the gloves are extremely dirty soap may be rubbed on them directly, but this sometimes stiffens the leather. After lying in the water until the next day the gloves should be put into a fresh soapy bath and squeezed, not rubbed, under water. The soaking will have loosened the dirt, and this one bath should be sufficiently cleansing. If it is not, put the gloves through another soapy water and then rinse in warm, not hot, water, always squeezing and never rubbing. When the last vestige of grime is removed, spread out the gloves on a soft towel, pulling them into shape. Every hour or so afterward they should be taken down and rubbed between the hands. In this lies the secret of their drying soft.

Alfalfa Meals.

An alfalfa meal is simply an alfalfa hay ground either in its entirety or in part. It is claimed for some of these products that the tops only are used, that the coarser stalks are rejected, etc.; for others that "selected" hay only is used, etc. The alfalfa feeds, as distinguished from the meals, are doubtless in the main ground alfalfa hay (meals), fortified by the admixture of concentrates.

Onion Seed.

E. H. Jenkins, Connecticut, finds that onion seed one year old usually has a much lower sprouting capacity than new seed, although seed from a good crop one year old sometimes germinates quite as well as new seed from an inferior crop.

"Higbee of Harvard" will be at the opera house on Friday evening, and the Electric Theater will not be open. A dandy program will be on for Saturday evening. 1911

They intend to deepen the channel of the river about 1,500 yards below the dam. After this work is completed they will make another attempt to raise the tug Wheeler in Pine Lake. Mr. Dennis will do the diving.

We understand that Geo. H. Van Pelt will be in Charlevoix next week and from his talk some time ago we judge that he contemplates renting a house and spending the summer here. If the COURIER can hold him here by helping to secure a house for his family, it will gladly bring to his notice any furnished homes which are open to tenants, if the owners will leave their names at this office.

George W. Milter was in town Sunday and Monday. He is closing out his business in Traverse City and will remove his family to California. He expects to act as traveling salesman in the future. His many friends in Charlevoix will be sorry to have him go so far away but will wish him success in any event. And then they all come back to northern Michigan sooner or later, you know.

Talk about alarm clocks! Colonel Hamilton has Fred Bettinger's 72c brand "beat a mile." He has rigged an electrical connection with an eight-day clock which will ring a bell and turn on a light in his bedroom and the beauty of it is that someone has to get up and turn the switch to stop that bell ringing. By an ingenious arrangement of switches he can use either the bell or light or both as may be necessary or desirable and the device can be set for any hour.

C. S. Dodge, the tailor, has recently installed new machinery at his place of business on Mason street for cleaning and dyeing, at which he makes a specialty. A new steam board has been put in, and a four horse-power boiler.

Orpha, the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Dishrow, has been lying at the point of death for over a week with tubercular meningitis. She is still living, but is not expected to survive the night. There is no hope of recovery. The sympathy of the entire community is with the little sufferer and her parents.

Those "merry widow" hats would make fine circular saws. In Charles City, Ia., one of 'em blew off the head of a careless young thing and rolling madly down the street, cut off a dog's tail, pared a slice from the handle of the town pump, and making a dash along the hitching pole south of the public square, cut the tie straps of 47 teams, liberating them for one of the maddest runaway mix-ups the place has ever experienced. The hat then fell over on the crown part and set spinning until it wore a large hole in the pavement and completely disappeared. The next morning an oil well spouted where the hat went down and the mayor sent to Chicago by telegraph for a dozen merry widow hats to be used in oil-well prospecting.

Mrs. Aggie Jarvis in song and musical specialties with Mrs. Dennio at the piano can be heard all next week at the Electric Theater. "Dickie," will be there also. 1tf

LEGAL NOTICES

Order for Publication—Probate of Will

State of Michigan, the Probate Court for the County of Charlevoix.

At a session of said court, held at the Probate Office in the city of Charlevoix, in said County, on the 13th day of April, A. D. 1908.

Present: Hon. John M. Harris, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of Thomas Haight, deceased.

William McNally having filed in said court his petition praying that a certain instrument in writing, purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased, now on file in said court be admitted to probate and that the administration of said estate be granted to himself or some other suitable person.

It is ordered, that the 11th day of May, A. D. 1908, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, at said probate office, be and is hereby appointed for hearing said petition.

It is further ordered, that public notice thereof be given by publication of a copy of this order, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing, in the Charlevoix Courier, a newspaper printed and circulated in said County. JOHN M. HARRIS,
A true copy. 16-18 Judge of Probate.

Order for Publication.

State of Michigan, The Probate Court for the County of Charlevoix.

At a session of said court, held at the probate office in the city of Charlevoix, in said county, on the 20th day of April A. D. 1908.

Present: Hon. John M. Harris, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of Mads Peterson, deceased.

Peter J. Peterson having filed in said court his petition praying that said court adjudicate and determine who were at the time of his death the legal heirs of said deceased and entitled to inherit the real estate of which said deceased died seized.

It is ordered, that the 15th day of May A. D. 1908, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, at said probate office, be and is hereby appointed for hearing said petition;

It is further ordered, that public notice thereof be given by publication of a copy of this order, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing, in the Charlevoix Courier, a newspaper printed and circulated in said county. JOHN M. HARRIS,
17-47 Judge of Probate.

Mortgage Foreclosure.

Whereas, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage dated the tenth day of April, 1903, executed by Adolph Strehmer and Mary A. Strehmer, his wife, to Citizens' State Bank of Whitewater, Wisconsin, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Charlevoix, Michigan, in liber thirty-seven of Mortgages on pages forty and forty-one, on the 27th day of April, 1903 at nine o'clock in the forenoon. And whereas, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of one thousand four hundred fifteen and sixty five one-hundredths (1,415.65) dollars, the principal, interest, taxes and insurance, and the further sum of fifty dollars as an attorney fee, stipulated for in said mortgage, and which is the whole amount claimed to be due on said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted either in law or equity to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises thereto described at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the east front door of the court house in said county of Charlevoix, on the twenty-third day of July next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon on that day; which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to-wit: The south half (s½) of the north-east quarter (ne¼) of section eighteen (18) town thirty-two (32) north, of range six (6) west; and the north west quarter (nw¼) of the south east quarter (se¼) of section eighteen (18) town thirty-two (32) north, of range six (6) west.

Neighborhood Notes

Tuesday evening, April 28, the Iron Company and chemical plant at Elk Rapids closed down, the last cast being made at 9:45. How long the plant will be closed is uncertain, but it is thought repairs will be commenced about the first of August, and as soon as completed operations will be again commenced. Probably no ore will be brought in before August. About 100 men were on the pay roll, and most of them are laid off, but four outside the watchman, we are told, will be retained at the furnace, and probably about the same number at the chemical plant.

William S. Anderson and the Misses Jennie, Angie and Margaret Anderson, of Traverse City, have received checks from the treasury department for money due Silas Yunker, a relative, who died in Andersonville prison. Yunker was a member of the fifty-first Ohio volunteers and when he was captured by the rebels, had a small amount coming to him. Yunker starved to death in southern prisons and no one put in a claim for the money for 45 years, the heirs taking it up some months ago. The government allowed the original sum, but no interest, and this is divided among nine heirs.

A well known Petoskey lady, who keeps a number of boarders, attended one of the revival meetings with one of her boarders. She settled comfortably into her seat, and refused to stand up when a nearby enthusiast motioned to her. "But, madam," he explained, "are you not a Christian?" "I don't know," she replied, "It's rather hard to be a Christian and keep a boarding house." The gentleman turned to her companions with the same query, upon which they said, "never mind us, it's too hard to be boarding with Mrs. —, and be Christians, too." (We vouch for the authenticity of this tale with much relish.)—Petoskey Record.

Elmer Campbell, aged 23 years, of Cadillac, was run down by a train on the G. R. & I. railroad at Cadillac last Wednesday and died in a few hours from the effect of his injuries. He was a married man and lived on his mother's farm a short way out of town.

Little Jack Welt, the three and one-half year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Welt, of Traverse City, was painfully injured last week by a wheelman while playing in the streets. The little fellow was running behind a bus and when he ran out from behind the vehicle, was struck by a wheelman, and was dragged several feet before the man could dismount. Physicians were at once summoned, when it was found that the end of the boy's nose was almost severed and his face badly bruised.

Mr. and Mrs. I. A. Rice, of Rapid River township, celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary at their home last week. About 46 guests were present. They were presented with numerous gifts.

Mrs. Christina Westland, a young lady whose former home was in Traverse City, died in Cincinnati last week, of typhoid fever. She was preparing her wedding trousseau when her death occurred and was buried in her wedding gown.

Burglars broke into the stores of Glenan and the Smith Hardware Co. at Kalkaska last week. In the Glenan store they kicked a hole through a large plate glass window in the effort to escape when discovered. At either store the loss was small, the robbers being discovered before they could get away with any plunder.

Mrs. James Verner, whose husband was killed in a wreck on the P. M. railroad at Mershon last fall, was given a draft last week by that company in settlement of her claim against the road.

World's Pure Food Show Gives Honest Awards.

Calumet Baking Powder received the highest awards at the World's Pure Food Exposition held in Chicago, November, 1907. This is quite a compliment, considering that it had to be better in Purity and Quality than any of the other brands.

The great progress that the Calumet Baking Powder Co. has made in the past twenty years is due to the fact that they are the only manufacturers in the world putting out a strictly high-grade baking powder at a moderate price. This, together with the fact that Calumet Baking Powder Co. is in no way affiliated with the Trust, has won for it millions of friends and patrons.

Wholesomeness and price are the two first essentials in a food product. The very fact that it received this highest award will settle forever in the minds of the public the purity question.

That it retails for 25c per pound, or about one-half the price of the Trust brands, is positive proof that that the price is right.

Calumet Baking Powder is chemically correct; therefore, the food prepared by it is absolutely free from any injurious substance. It gives the best and most uniform results. It never loses its strength, and the last teaspoonful is just as good as the first.

The Calumet Baking Powder Co. has demonstrated beyond a doubt that the best baking-powder that can be manufactured should retail for 25c per pound.

CALUMET is made under the most ideal conditions, being manufactured in a new, modern, well-lighted factory, which is perfectly ventilated, scrupulously clean and sanitary. It is equipped with all modern machinery and is one of the largest factories of its kind in the United States.

The materials used in making Calumet Baking Powder are the finest and purest that money can buy. They are selected with the greatest care, and submitted to a rigid analysis by expert chemists.

By the use of modern, scientific methods, these materials are so accurately proportioned and perfectly mixed that it assures the user of a Baking Powder that is pure in the can and pure in the food.

Every can of Calumet Baking Powder is put through a rigid test before it leaves the factory.

By receiving this award, CALUMET has established a standard by which all other baking powder will be judged, for it means that Calumet Baking Powder is positively the best in every respect that can be manufactured.

Literary Notes

From the Children's Point of View.

"In all the talk we have had for and against race suicide, I have noticed little consideration of the children's point of view," says Christine Terhune Herrick in the May Woman's Home Companion.

"In the first place, why do people want children? How many bring them into the world with the thought that for the sake of the country they should have offspring, and that patriotism demands a large family? I would also like to know how many bear children with the thought that their progeny will not only make the world a better place to live in, but will, on their own account, be so happy, so useful, so valuable to themselves that the parents could not feel justified in refusing them existence.

"If these questions were answered truthfully, I believe that in nine hundred and ninety-nine cases out of a thousand it would be shown that parents desired children for the sake of their own personal happiness (when they think of the matter at all)—for what the children would mean to them of joy and interest. Such feelings are entirely natural, but they can hardly be counted to the parents for righteousness. If a man and woman choose to have children because of the pleasure they will themselves receive from it, I do not think they should be looked upon as civic benefactors, only as ordinary human beings who have made wise investments on their own account, which turn out to be also an advantage to the community at large."

Expert Commissioners Give Awards.

It is of interest for the public to know that the Commissioners who gave the awards at the World's Pure Food Exposition in Chicago, November, 1907, were such well-known experts as Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, appointed by the President of the United States; Honorable Alfred H. Jolies, Illinois State Food Commissioner; Dr. Walter S. Haines, Professor of Chemistry, Rush Medical College; Dr. John Harper Long, Professor of Chemistry, Northwestern University Medical School and many others who are equally prominent.

Good for Everybody.

Mr. Norman R. Coulter, a prominent architect in the Delbert Building, San Francisco, says: "I fully endorse all that has been said of Electric Bitters as a tonic medicine. It is good for everybody. It corrects stomach, liver and kidney disorders in a prompt and efficient manner and builds up the system." Electric Bitters is the best spring medicine ever sold over a druggist's counter, as a blood purifier it is unequaled. 50c at F. G. Hipes & Co.'s drug store.

THE ROOT OF ALL EVIL.

Centralization of Wealth Threatens the Nation's Integrity.

The capitalist system of private ownership has resulted in practically abolishing the possibility of private ownership for the great majority of the people.

One-tenth of our population already owns nine-tenths of the wealth. The centralization of the control of property is increasing with a rapidity that threatens the integrity of the nation. The acreage of wages, the certainty of employment, the social privileges and independence of the wage earning and agricultural population, when compared with the increase of the wealth and social production, are steadily and rapidly decreasing.

With every increase of power and concentration of wealth the educated and professional class is forced more and more into dependence upon the capitalist. Our teachers, professors, speakers, newspaper editors and writers and all professional men are more and more at the mercy of the capitalistic system and brought into abject dependence. Thus the educated proletariat ever increases.

Money making is not a matter of education.

And wealth, usually expressed by money, is now god. It is by the distribution of part of this wealth that the rich man gets his dangerous powers. It is the monopoly of that which all want—some of which all must have—that makes his power so fearful.

The big grafter for his heir writes his check and he gets all the good or bad things his heart desires. He gets adulation, professional skill, wine and women, paragraphs in the newspapers and the disposal of political places.

Under such conditions it is only natural that money has become the root of all evil. Wealth being the greatest social power, it naturally is the worst of all social temptations. Our present economic system creates grafters, criminals, thieves and prostitutes.

A CLEARER LINEUP.

Near Future Will See Capitalism Arrayed Against Socialism.

Most people probably who have given the matter any thought expect that the political lineup in this country in the near future will be capitalism against Socialism. The late Senator Hanna predicted as much, and he was regarded as a wise political forecaster. But as to whether the Democratic party will succeed the Socialist party as the party of Socialism or not belongs to the realm of speculation, and each one is entitled to his guess. As for us, it is a matter of some indifference as to how Socialism is brought about, providing the way is the most direct that social evolution will permit of. But if it comes through the Democratic party, then all we can say is that the Socialists will have to clean up that party as they have cleaned up the organized labor movement.

The idea of two parties, one Socialistic and the other capitalistic, is abroad also in England. Only recently the Tory leader, Mr. Balfour, made an address in which he said: "The old patriotic liberalism of former days is vanishing. Only two parties will remain, the party of Unionism (this is the name of the party composed of Conservatives and former Liberals who broke away from their old party) and social reform and the party of social change."

Wealth For the Few.

A careful analysis of the census of 1900 shows that 250,251 persons possessed all that time $67,000,000,000 out of a total of $95,000,000,000, given as our then national wealth. Reduced to percentages, this would show three-tenths of 1 per cent of our population as possessing 71 per cent of the nation's wealth in 1900. The same causes which brought about this continued increase of wealth concentration have, moreover, been operating with ever increasing celocity during recent years, and it would be only fair to presume that the increase in wealth concentration since 1900 has been as great as during the ten years preceding, which would, then, give 1 per cent or less than 1 per cent of our population as now possessing 90 per cent of our entire national wealth of some $100,000,000,000. Henry Laurens, Call.

Equal Opportunity.

In regard to the political form Socialists demand the rule of the people—i. e., democracy. In regard to the economic sphere and the spirit which shall manifest itself in this form and give life to it they demand Socialism—that is, the collective ownership of the means of production and distribution.

Thus we shall have Social-Democracy—a democracy which is founded on economic independence, upon the political and industrial equality of opportunity for all.

Socialism.

Socialism implies that the individuals who make up society should in their collective capacity possess all the instruments of production and thus prevent the evils arising from the present industrial system. It requires that the process of production and distribution should be regulated not by competition, with self interest for the moving principle, but by society as a whole for the good of society.—Palgrave's "Dictionary of Political Economy."

A Hymn of Capitalism.

Of all my father's family
I love myself the best.
If Providence will care for me,
The devil may take the rest.

Over-Work Weakens Your Kidneys.

Unhealthy Kidneys Make Impure Blood.

All the blood in your body passes through your kidneys once every three minutes.

The kidneys are your blood purifiers, they filter out the waste or impurities in the blood.

If they are sick or out of order, they fail to do their work.

Pains, aches and rheumatism come from excess of uric acid in the blood, due to neglected kidney trouble.

Kidney trouble causes quick or unsteady heart beats, and makes one feel as though they had heart trouble, because the heart is over-working in pumping thick, kidney-poisoned blood through veins and arteries.

It used to be considered that only urinary troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all constitutional diseases have their beginning in kidney trouble.

If you are sick you can make no mistake by first doctoring your kidneys. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases and is sold on its merits by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also pamphlet telling you how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. Mention this paper when writing Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

The New Mayor

Based on G. H. Broadhurst's Successful Play

The Man of The Hour

By ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE.

Copyright, 1907, by George H. Broadhurst.

"But Mr. Horrigan"—

"You've got my terms. Take 'em or leave 'em."

"Oh, very well," conceded Wainwright, with jaune graciousness. "Anything to oblige an old friend."

"Good! So we get $200,000 for election expenses, and my personal account receives 25,000 shares at 93."

"Quite so. And now"—

"And now comes the question of the right man for mayor. We"—

Again Horrigan paused, rising to his feet stealthily, like some ponderous cat, his head bent slightly, as though catching a faint or distant sound.

"What's the matter?" asked Wainwright, looking up.

"Nothing," returned Horrigan. But he did not resume his seat. Instead as he talked he began to pace the room in apparent aimlessness, yet every turn chanced to bring him nearer and nearer to the door of the adjoining office.

"You see," he said, "we must have the right man. If we don't, we haven't a shadow of a show to win. We must be careful to choose the best man possible. In fact, Mr. Wainwright — In fact"—

Thompson stepped quietly over the threshold.

His wanderings had brought him to the office door. With the last word he suddenly jerked it open.

Thompson stepped quietly over the threshold into the library, walked over to his employer, handed him a dispatch and went out again under the battery of Horrigan's glare, closing the office door after him.

"That fellow was listening to every word we said!" shouted the boss as the door shut behind Thompson.

"How foolish you are!" protested Wainwright. "He was bringing me this message. I've tried and tempted and tested Thompson in a hundred ways, and he's always rung true. I trust him utterly."

"Well, I don't trust a man living," retorted Horrigan, reluctantly convinced. "I don't sign receipts or keep accounts or write letters or have witnesses when I talk. I always make it a question of veracity between me and the other man if there's an investigation. My word's as good as any one's, and they can't prove anything against me in case of a showdown. I advise you to try the same plan. It's a good one. And in the meantime if I were you I'd keep an eye on that secretary. He'll bear watching."

"Never mind about Thompson. He's all right. Let's get back to the election. Who have you in mind for mayor?"

"Well," considered Horrigan, "he's got to be some one who isn't mixed up in politics or corporations. Some one the public isn't on to. A man with no queer past."

"I advise you to consult the calendar of saints and pick out your candidate there," sneered Wainwright, who could not clearly follow his guest's reasoning.

"No. I think I can fling him on earth," laughed Horrigan. "He's got to be young, clever, educated, with a good name, a good family and social standing and plenty of cash. The cash is important, so the public will understand he isn't a graft hunter. They've got to be made to think he's in the game for purity of politics and high principles and love of civic duty and all that sort of thing. At the same time he's got to be some one we can handle to suit ourselves. That's the man who'll catch 'em coming and going. We've got to find him. Any suggestions?"

"Well, how about Gibbs?"

"Won't do. Broker and money juggler. The public wouldn't stand for him."

"Young Sawyer"—

"Sawyer was born foolish, and he's been getting steadily sillier every year since, and his face shows it."

"Ten Broeck, then."

"Ten Broeck is too fond of turning a cigarette into the connecting link between fire and a fool. And, besides, he wears a monocle. What'd happen if he was to flash that monocle in a Fourth ward meeting? There'd be a massacre."

"Well, who, then? Have you any one in mind?"

"Yes," assented Horrigan, "I have. Do you happen to know a young fellow who spends his summers near here—a chap named Bennett—Alwyn Bennett?"

"Certainly; I know him well. But"—

"Well, how does he strike you?"

"I'd never have thought of him in such a connection."

"Why wouldn't you? He pretty near fulfills all our qualifications. Besides, his father used to be a big man in the organization. Got some fat contracts from it in his time too."

"But young Bennett has never"—

"He's well off, well educated, clever, and all that. I ran across him last fall when he came over to help Lorimer in his fight in the Fourteenth. He made some rattling good speeches, and the boys all took a liking to him. A swell, but not a snob; good mixer, good fellow, popular, clear headed, no past—yes, he's our man. More I think it over the surer I am."

"I shouldn't wonder if you're right. How would you like to talk it over with him now?"

"Now?"

"Yes. He's still around the place somewhere, I think."

Wainwright rang a bell, and the butler appeared.

"Find Mr. Bennett," said the financier, "and ask him if he will step here for a moment."

"Yes," went on Horrigan reflectively, rubbing his huge plump hands together, "he's the man for us—that is," he added, with less assurance, "if we can handle him."

"I think we can," answered Wainwright, a fragment of his conversation with Gibbs flashing across his memory. "You see, I have fairly good reasons for believing he's in love with my niece, Miss Dallas Wainwright."

"So? That's"—

"And, as I control her fortune and her brother's until Perry is twenty-five"—

"Oh, it's a cinch!" chuckled Horrigan. "He"—

"Mr. Bennett is playing tennis," reported the butler, coming to the door. "He will be here at once."

"Now," resumed Horrigan, "the only thing that remains is to find out if he'll consent, and then"—

"You wanted me, Mr. Wainwright?" asked Bennett, stepping through the long window from the veranda. "Oh, good morning, Mr. Horrigan," he added on seeing the second occupant of the room.

The young man was coatless and collarless, his silk shirt being turned in at the neck. In one hand he swung a tennis racket. With the other he mopped his flushed face, for the day was hot and the game had been swift.

"Yes," answered Wainwright. "I'm sorry to interrupt your tennis set, but we want to see you on a rather important matter. We've been talking about you."

"Thanks!" said Bennett, with a puzzled smile from one to the other of the two older men. "What about?"

"Want to be mayor?" queried Horrigan abruptly.

"What's the answer?" countered the perplexed youth.

"It isn't a joke," intervened Wainwright. "Mr. Horrigan is in earnest."

"In earnest? I hope the heat hasn't gone to his head."

"You don't understand," put in Horrigan. "I control the party's nominations. The nomination for mayor is yours if you'll like it."

"Not—not really?" gasped Alwyn aghast.

"Yes, really. We"—

"But, with a whole organization full of good material, why do you come to me?"

"Because you're the man we want."

"As an answer that's excellent, but as an explanation it's mystifying."

"I'll tell you. We're looking forward to a risky fight and"—

"And since you see no chance of winning you pick me out as the victim instead of some organization man? Good idea as far as you're concerned, but I beg to decline, without thanks."

"No, no!" corrected Wainwright. "Mr. Horrigan thinks that you have a strong chance of winning."

"That's right," corroborated the boss. "It'll be a hard fight, but with the right man we'll win, and we believe you're the right man. Even if you lose, you'll show the world what you're made of. Folks admire a fighter. They haven't much use for an liar."

The coarsely spoken words brought back with a rush Dallas Wainwright's plea and his own yearning to do something to make her proud of him—to win her by great deeds—to prove his love worth her acceptance. Was this the chance—the chance he had so eagerly longed for? It seemed providential. His face alight with the joy of battle and the hope of his heart's reward, Bennett turned upon the waiting boss.

"I accept."

"Good!" yelled Horrigan, slapping him resoundingly on the back. "Good boy! Now, we'll"—

"But remember one thing, Mr. Horrigan," interrupted Bennett, and his careless boyhood seemed to have fallen away from him like a discarded garment, leaving the manhood and rugged strength stripped of all the follies and idleness that had hitherto masked it, "remember one thing. If I win this fight—if I am elected mayor—I shall never once swerve from my solemn oath of office. I"—

His careless boyhood seemed to have fallen away from him.

Wainwright, uneasy at the candidate's unwonted words and manner, started to speak, but Horrigan deftly interfered.

"Of course you'll keep your oath of office," he bellowed jovially. "Of course you will. That's understood."

Then in an undertone to Wainwright as Alwyn moved away the boss whispered:

"Don't butt in! Leave him to me! That silly reform talk don't mean anything. It's the way all youngsters in politics blow off steam. Leave him to me!"

An interesting situation has developed in Nashville, Tennessee, through the publication announcement of the Tennessean that it should cancel all its contracts for liquor advertising, in conformity with its editorial policy of advocating state prohibition. The American, a rival daily, met this announcement with the statement that it would pay $5.00 a column for all the liquor advertisements cancelled by any daily paper in Nashville. The Tennessean promptly accepted the challenge, named a committee of disinterested persons to inspect its books and determine the amount due on account of cancelled advertising, at the rate named by its contemporary, and announced that the money (over $500) should be paid to the county Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

At present writing the matter has not progressed further than an exchange of diplomatic courtesies, the Tennessean claiming the forfeit and the American seeming inclined to quibble on technicalities.

Lincoln a Temperance Pioneer.

Much newspaper space has been devoted, of late, to discussion of Lincoln's temperance principles, liquor press writers making frantic efforts to prove that the great emancipator was neither a prohibitionist nor a total abstainer, and both prohibitionists and personal friends of Lincoln joining in the refutation of these assertions. Interesting evidence in this connection is contained in a special despatch from Springfield, Illinois, to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, which says:

"J. S. Francis, residing at German Prairie, Illinois, has submitted conclusive evidence that Abraham Lincoln was a pioneer advocate of temperance in Illinois. Mr. Francis possess an old, tattered and worn book containing the constitution of the 'Sangamon County Temperance Society.' This constitution contains the names of nearly 300 pioneer citizens of Springfield and Sangamon county, among them Abraham Lincoln's signature, he being the tenth to sign the constitution. Lincoln was not content to merely affix his signature, but added the significant words: 'Pledges himself specially never to drink ardent spirits.' This signature bears date January 19, 1838."

Marion Center Grange No. 956.

Marion Center Grange No. 956 opened in usual form Wednesday, April 29. Officers all present except worthy master and chaplin. The usual form of business was transacted, after which several topics of interest were discussed and a very good program furnished by lecturer.

Grange was closed to meet again in two weeks, at which time there will be one candidate initiated in first and accond degrees. A good attendance desired.

Ironton Grange No. 707.

Ironton Grange No. 707 met in regular session April 28, 1908, with but fourteen members present and one visitor.

The lecturer's hour first consisted of quotations and readings and then we finished up our contest on which John Knudsen's side had 505 points and Will Walker's side only 430 points. The losing side will treat the opposite side at our next meeting which will be held May 12. There will also be three members initated in the first and second degrees at our next meeting.

Deer Lake Grange No. 1269.

Saturday, May 2, Deer Lake Grange was opened in regular form by Master H. C. Barber. Reading of minutes of last meeting. Discussing bills and accounts.

Plans were made to have our hall constructed as soon as possible.

Received $18. from poverty social held at hall April 25.

Lecturer's Hour was taken up on several good topics.

FEEDING SILAGE.

When It Imparts a Bad Odor or Flavor to the Milk.

The following observations on the effect of feeding silage to dairy cows have been published by W. J. Fraser of the Illinois experiment station, who said: The dairy herd was divided into two lots, one of which was fed forty pounds of corn silage per cow daily, while the other lot was fed only clover hay and grain. The milk from each lot was standardized to 4 per cent and otherwise cared for in exactly the same manner. Samples from each lot during the course of the experiments were submitted to 372 persons for an opinion as to any difference in the flavor of the two samples, anything objectionable about either and any preference. The results showed that 60 per cent preferred silage milk, 20 per cent non-silage milk, and 11 per cent had no choice. When the silage was fed at the time of milking, the percentage in favor of silage milk was much higher than when the silage was fed one hour before milking or after milking. Five samples of each lot were sent to milk experts in different cities, three of whom preferred silage milk, one non-silage, and one had no choice. No complaint was received from a hotel to which silage milk was delivered for a period of one month. On the whole, it was apparent that the greater number of people were able to distinguish between the two kinds of milk, but found nothing objectionable about either kind.

If of Good Quality.

This is strong evidence that if the silage is of good quality and used in reasonable amounts, in connection with other feed, it is one of the best feeds obtainable for dairy cows when pasture is not available. It must be remembered that in all of this work nothing but good silage was fed, and no spoiled silage was allowed to accumulate in or around the silo. When silage imparts a bad or disagreeable flavor to the milk produced from it, almost invariably the cause is that the silage has not been fed properly or that spoiled silage has been used.

It should not be understood from this discussion that the time of day a food is fed which may impart a bad flavor to the milk is of no consequence. All feeds of this nature should be fed after milking and not before to avoid the possibility of producing an unpleasant flavor in the milk.

Locating the Incubator.

As to location of the incubator, do not place it in a room where it will be between two windows where a draft is likely to blow across it. The machine should not be located where the sun can fall across it or strike the floor too close to it. The effect of the sun upon the machine is peculiar, and while the temperature in the room may not seem to rise the sun will cause the egg chamber to heat more rapidly than might be supposed, thereby interfering with the adjustment of the regulator. Do not locate the machine in a north or west room unless it is impossible to find another place. A south or east room is far more satisfactory, says a writer in Orange Judd Farmer.

The incubator should be where there is a fire all the time, or it should be in a room where there is no fire at all. If the machine is placed in a room where there is no fire, it should be borne in mind that the eggs cannot be cooled in a temperature lower than 60 degrees for any length of time without chilling the eggs. The eggs should be wrapped between the folds of a blanket and carried into an adjoining room where there is a fire.

The operator should use every possible care in keeping the lamp bowl and lamp burner scrupulously clean and free from oil or any other foreign settlings. If this is not done the heat of the burner will naturally generate some gas, and, if this be thrown off in the room, is sure to be gathered back into the incubator, and as it flows through the egg chamber to cause a great deal of damage.

The air in the room must be absolutely sweet and fresh. Be very careful to see that the incubator sits perfectly level, but do not attempt to level it by a water bottle, pan of water or by anything except a carpenter's spirit level. Be sure to set the machine true in the front and back and across each end, as this will insure a perfect circulation of air through the tanks as well as through the egg chamber, which will play a good part in producing strong, healthy chickens.

Apples In Storage.

It has been determined that well colored, hard ripe fruit will keep better in cold storage than fruit picked before it is mature or after it has gone beyond full ripeness. Many varieties of apples when stored immaturely develop a trouble in storage known as scald, the skin becoming brown in patches, especially on the green or poorly colored side of the apple, which detracts from the appearance and commercial value of the fruit.—S. A. Beach.

Buckwheat Profitably Grown.

In quantity produced buckwheat is the least important of our six principal grain crops, but it is nevertheless of value as a source of food and feeding stuffs and is very profitably grown for green manure as a catch crop and for the improvement of the mechanical condition of the soil.

"Say," said a small boy as he seated himself at the soda water counter of a drug store, "give me a glass of soda water and give me a box of rough on rats."

The clerk looked at him askance.

"What do you want the rough on rats for, for your mother?"

"No," said the boy distainfully, "I want it for the rats."—Columbus Dispatch.

GREEN MANURING.

Favorable Results to Crops Following Red Clover.

By C. V. PIPER.

Some exceedingly interesting results on red clover as a green manure, secured by the Central Experimental farm, Ottawa, have recently been published. In one of these experiments four plats were planned to spring grains with red clover and four to the same grains without red clover. After the grain crops were harvested the clover was allowed to grow on the four plats and, having attained a good growth, was plowed under in October. The remaining four plats without red clover were plowed at the same time.

The following spring all eight plats were seeded to oats. Those that had been in clover yielded an average of 49 9-10 bushels to the acre against 38 4-5 bushels for the plats that had no clover. All four of the plats that had been in clover showed an increase, the greatest being 19 2-5 bushels and the least 7 1-5 bushels. Without additional fertilizers the same plats were seeded the following year to barley. Those that had been in clover yielded an average of 37 3-5 bushels to the acre, while the others yielded but 29 bushels. This experiment furnishes a clear demonstration that the good effect of the clover lasts more than one season.

In another experiment oats were grown on four plats, following respectively brome grass, mixed grass without clover, mixed grass with clover and clover alone. The respective yields were 33 1-10, 36 3-10, 46 1-10 and 43½ bushels. The average of the two where no clover had been used was 34½ bushels, while that of the two where clover had been used averaged 44½ bushels.

The benefit derived from the red clover amounted to ten bushels per acre more than was derived from the grasses.

Other experiments conducted in this same series showed very marked favorable results both to crops of fodder corn and potatoes following clover. In the case of corn the increase amounted to 40 per cent and in the case of potatoes to 28 per cent.

Crimson clover is also much grown as a green manure and forage crop along the Atlantic seaboard from New Jersey southward and to a less extent in the gulf states. It has been grown to a slight extent in various other states, but owing to the frequency with which it winter kills it has not been established as an important crop.

In addition to its value as a green manure, crimson clover is also important as a cover crop, tending to prevent the leaching and washing of soils, especially on hilly land. As a cover crop it is much employed in orchards.

For the improvement of poor lands in the middle Atlantic region there is no better plan than to use crimson clover as a winter crop and cowpeas as a summer crop. One farmer who adopted this plan succeeded in raising thirty-five bushels of wheat per acre on land that had never before yielded more than sixteen bushels.

Commercial Fertilizers.

The most economical use of commercial fertilizers is only reached when they are applied in rotations in which the soil is maintained in good moisture condition by the use of barnyard manure or the vegetable matter from crops grown for the purpose.

Although the food elements in a commercial fertilizer form but one of the several conditions needed for the best development of the crop, it is important that these elements should be suited to the demands of the crop at every stage of its growth, else the product will not be as large as the other conditions would permit. It is the most common practice to use this class of fertilizers with the annual crops, and there are good reasons for such practice, as shown by fertilizer experiments.—W. H. Beal.

"Of course the man will truly say he is busy, over-worked, case-hardened, that he has the claims of wife and children upon him, that he is often irritable through sheer physical weariness and overstrain.

"His life has not been easy. Granted. But your mother's life has not been easy. Your father was a poor man and from the day she married him she has stood by his side, fighting the wolf from the door with her naked hands as a woman must fight. She worked not the eight or ten hours day of the union, but the twenty-four-hour day of the poor wife and mother. She cooked and cleaned and scrubbed and patched and nursed from dawn until bedtime, and in the night was up and down getting drinks for thirsty little lips, covering restless little sleepers, listening for croupy coughs. She had time to listen to your stories of boyish fun and frolic and triumph. She had time to speak the word that spurred your ambition on. She never forgot to cook the little dishes you liked. She went without the dress she needed that you might not be shamed by your clothes before your companions. Stop, man, and think what life would have been to you if she had treated you in your childhood as you are treating her in her old age.

"Suppose there had been no warm, caressing mother's love? Suppose there had been no soft breast on which you could weep out childish sorrows; no clinging arms to enfold you and comfort you when the trifles of your little world went wrong?

"Would it not take away from you the memory of all that is best and sweetest in life? Is there anything so pitiful on earth as a little child who is motherless; who is an alien in a strange home; that has no one to love it? Yes, there is just one other figure more forlorn and this is the old mother who is unloved by the children she reared and doomed to spend the last years of her life in an atmosphere of neglect. How devoting—her labor and sacrifices forgotten. Remember them now while she is still living, and pay back in love and tenderness some of the debt you owe her. Go home and put your arms around the shrunken old figure, kiss the drooping mouth with a real live warm kiss, instead of giving her a perfunctory peck on the cheek. Tell her she is the greatest mother a man ever had and that you are what she made you. It would cause her very soul to leap with joy and make the world a place of circling bliss providing she does not dropdead with surprise."

Inappropriate Songs.

"Our Sunday school superintendent once gave a lecture on inappropriate songs," says a musical director of an uptown church, "in which he told of visiting the primary room to find the infants lustily singing:

"My latest sun is sinking fast,
My race is nearly run.

"And our presiding elder used to tell, with great glee, of a bishop who at a general conference retired with his committee to the anteroom to finish an important report, a song service to fill the gap. As the returning clergymen filed down the main aisle, headed by the bishop, the chorus came out on:

"See the mighty hosts advancing,
Satan leading on.

"But the most amusing incident that really came under my own observation was while assisting in a revival service in a small western town. The evangelist seemed to find in a very successful doctor of that place a subject for special and unusual effort. One evening, while he was earnestly exhorting with the medical gentleman to come to the altar, an enthusiastic sister began singing

"The great physician now is near.

"A smile ran through the audience, the doctor's eyes twinkled, and the divine himself with difficulty maintained a straight face. It is needless to add that there was no conversion that night."—Buffalo Times.

WAS DISCOURAGED BY OVERWORK

Superintendent of Boyne Falls Schools Shot Himself.

HIS HOME WAS IN MT. PLEASANT

Was but Nineteen Years of Age and a Successful Educator.

Temporarily Deranged by the Overwork of His Position—Was a Very Popular Superintendent.

Temporarily deranged by overwork, Walter D. Slater, the youthful principal of the Boyne Falls schools shot himself twice through the heart with 32 calibre revolver in his room at the home of Dr. A. M. Howe, between the hours of 6:00 and 8:00 in the evening. Although the family was in the house at the time they did not hear the reports and it was not until a little daughter of Dr. Howe went to his room to call him that the tragedy was discovered.

The little girl receiving no answer to her knock, called her mother and they entered the room. They found the body lying across the bed, the covers disarranged and covered with blood. The doctor was called, but death had occurred an hour or more before.

Walter Slater was only 19 years of age, but despite his youth he had filled his position at the head of the village schools satisfactorily. Yesterday he attended school and conducted an examination and it was upon these examination papers that he had been working when he shot himself.

About 4:00 o'clock he returned to his room, and on the table in the room a neatly arranged pile of corrected examination papers showed that he had done considerable work just before killing himself. He left no note to explain the deed. The bullets were found an inch apart and both had entered the heart.

Coroner Daboll was called and impanneled a jury. The jury found that death was caused by a weapon held and discharged by himself.

Slater came to Boyne Falls last September, directly from his home in Mt. Pleasant, to assume his duties at the head of the village schools. He was always a studious young man and most of his time not taken up by the actual duties of the position was devoted to reading and studying. He was a graduate of the '07 life class at the Mt. Pleasant normal and had won distinction by his excellent scholastic abilities. He was popular with citizens and pupils alike and sincere sorrow was caused by his death.

THREE FIRES AT BOYNE

Wednesday of Last Week Fred Mitchell Loses House.

His Family Have a Very Narrow Escape Fire at the Chemical Works.

Boyne City had three alarms of fire inside of twenty-four hours last week. The first alarm came about 5:00 p. m. Wednesday and was caused by flames igniting from a gasoline stove at the home of Ald. Chas. D. Fry. While one man went to turn in an alarm the flames were extinguished. The company made a quick hitch to their new apparatus and had got outside the hose house when word came that the fire was out.

The next alarm was sounded about 11 p. m. and was caused by flames being discovered in the two story house of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Mitchell, living on Michigan avenue, in the first ward. The family of Mr. Mitchell were in bed and asleep and Mr. Mitchell was awakened by something falling. When he opened his eyes the whole house seemed to be in flames. The family were quickly aroused and made for the window in their night robes Mr. Mitchell not stopping to dress until he was outside the burning building. The family made their escape through the down stairs bed-room window and Mrs. Mitchell was severely burned about the hand and arm in her escape from the burning building. The alarm was quickly turned in and the fire department made a quick run, but when they arrived on the scene the building was already doomed, and the barn next door belonging to Perley, Heaton was on fire and efforts were directed to saving adjoining property. This barn fire was soon extinguished, but had it gotten a good start a whole row of buildings adjoining would undoubtedly have fallen prey to the flames. The loss on the house was complete, as was also the loss on the furniture, only one rocking chair being saved. The house was insured for $700 and the furniture for $800, which would only partially cover the loss.

The next alarm came in about 3:00 a. m. and was caused by flames being discovered in the shipping room of the Chemical plant. In this room was about 300 bushels or more of acetate lime and the fire was in this commodity and it was hard to fight. The employes of the company had worked diligently to subdue the flames before an alarm of fire was turned in, but the fire gradually gained on them and the fire department had to be called out. The flames were confined to this one room, but as fast as the flames were subdued in one place it broke out in another, on account of the combustible material it had to feed on. The damage was not very great, it being confined to holes being burned in the floor and sides of the building. The firemen removed about 200 bushels of lime. The loss will probably reach not more than $150, fully covered by insurance.

WAS A GREAT SUCCESS

In the Entertainment Given—Attendance Should Have Been Larger.

The Senior Play "Highee of Harvard" at Charlevoix Theater Friday Night.

The Senior play, "Highee of Harvard," at the Charlevoix Theater Friday night, fully met the high expectations of the audience. All the parts were well rendered, not a slip or miss occurring during the entire evening. Where the entire company were stars, all playing the parts assigned them equally well, the play being one where all have about an equal amount of work to do, no particular praise or criticism can be given any member of the cast, but the ability to arouse in the most difficult line of the art—comedy—demonstrated by Mae Felts and Cleland Mayne was a revelation to their friends. Sam Levinson was a typical westerner and Don Campbell a representative of the blue-bloods, Dorothy Iddings, Kathryne LaPeer and Dorris Kane played their parts in a natural manner and Henry Partridge and John Lyngklip were a pair of manly young fellows. The specialities and music were first-class and everybody left the theater with words of praise on their lips.

From Memorial Day Committee.

It having been claimed that at the memorial service last year several soldiers graves were overlooked in the distribution of flowers. If so it was a mistake perhaps occasioned by the obscure location or neglected condition of the graves. The committee would sincerely regret if from any cause a soldier's or sailor's grave should be overlooked. They would suggest that all graves should be so cleaned of bramble and marked that the committee that places the the marking flags will have no trouble to distinguish them.

HELD DEMOCRATIC COUNTY CONVENTION

At the Bank Hall in Charlevoix on Monday, May 11.

DELEGATES ARE PLEDGED TO BRYAN.

Dr. G. W. Crouter and W. J. Lewis Delegates to State Convention.

Delegates also Elected to Congressional Convention—The Usual Resolutions Adopted.

The democratic county convention held at the bank hall Monday was fairly well attended, representatives being present from different parts of the county.

The convention was called to order by W. J. Lewis, chairman of the county committee and organized by the election of Dr. J. H. Thielen, of Charlevoix, chairman and E. H. Shephard, of Boyne, secretary.

W. Herschell Miller, E. H. Shephard and F. N. Chapel were appointed a committee on resolutions.

Dr. G. W. Crouter, of Charlevoix, and W. J. Lewis, of Boyne, were elected delegates to the state convention, alternates Bert Wilhelm and Dr. J. A. Auld.

The following delegates were elected to the congressional convention when called: Dr. Boice, Boyne City; Charles Pierce, Marion; George W. Peck, Wilson; Dr. J. B. Thielen, Charlevoix; John Munroe, East Jordan; E. H. Shephard, Boyne City, and Thomas Bacot, Horton Bay.

The following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, We, the representatives of the democratic party of Charlevoix county in convention assembled do reaffirm our faith in that immortal proclamation of the declaration of independence, in regard to the inalienable rights of man, and our allegiance to the constitution framed in harmony therewith by the fathers of the republic; and

Whereas, we believe that private monopolies are indefensible and intolerable. In that they destroy competition, control the price of all material, and of the finished product, thus robbing both producer and consumer.

And we further denounce the trusts, because they lessen the employment of labor and arbitrarily fix the terms and conditions thereof, and deprive individual energy and small capital of their opportunity for betterment. They are the most efficient means yet devised for appropriating the fruits of industry to the benefit of the few at the expense of the many, and unless their insatiate greed is checked, all wealth will be aggregated in a few hands and the republic destroyed.

The dishonest tampering with the trust evil by the republican party in the state and national platforms is conclusive proof of the charge that trusts are the legitimate product of republican policies that they are fostered by republican laws, and that they are protected by the republican administration in return for campaign subscriptions and political support.

We favor the enactment of such laws upon the tariff as will put the the products of trusts upon the free list to prevent monopoly under the plea of protection.

The failure of the present republican administration with an absolute control over all the branches of the national government to enact any legislation designed to prevent or even curtail the absorbing power of the trusts, proves the utter insincerity of the high sounding promises of the republican party and stumps them unfit to longer continue in control of governmental affairs.

We favor the election of all the United States senators by a direct vote of the people and also all supreme court judges, and the adoption of the initiative and referendum as a means of empowering the people with the right to regulate all laws.

Recent developments of the manner in which our state's finances have been handled are a further evidence of the total inefficiency of the republican party in Michigan to longer be allowed the control over its affairs. For these and many more reasons that might be given, we invite all good citizens of whatever party affiliations to unite with us in an effort to remedy these glaring violations of the people's rights by the election to office a class of men who believe in the doctrine of equal rights to all, special privileges to none, a doctrine promulgated by such men as Washington, Jefferson and Jackson, later fostered by the immortal Lincoln, and lastly and fearlessly advocated and championed by that matchless orator and purest of statesmen, Wm. Jennings Bryan.

Therefore, resolved in order to accomplish all the above and more, we begin by pledging the delegates from Charlevoix county to the state convention at Lansing to use every honorable means to select such men to attend the national convention at Denver next July as are pronounced out and out Bryan supporters and instructed to vote first, last and all the time for that great commoner of the people for president of the United States.

TO PRODUCE CLEAN MILK

Rules as Recommended by the Experiment Station.

Of Interest to Producers of Milk in View of the Proposed Inspection.

The production of sanitary milk is receiving considerable attention in all cities at the present time. In this regard the following outline for milk management, promulgated by one of the state experiment stations, will be of interest:

1. The cow should be sound; no disease should exist in the animal.
2. The feed should be good and free from aromatic substances. If these aromatic foods are used they should be employed according to methods which will not cause odors or flavors to appear in the milk.
3. The cow should be groomed and hair about the udder preferably clipped.
4. The udder should be moistened during milking.
5. The milker should be a neat, tidy person.
6. The milk should be free from disease and should not come in contact with any communicable diseases.
7. The milkers' hand and clothes should be clean while milking.
8. The pail should be sterilized.
9. The stall should be as such as to reduce the amount of disturbance of dust and dirt.
10. There should be good light, good ventilation and good drainage in the stable.
11. The stable should always be kept clean.
12. Feeding and bedding, unless moist, should be done after milking.
13. Milk should not stand in the stable.
14. If milk is aerated it should be done before cooling and in pure air.
16. The sooner the milk is cooled after milking the better.
17. Keep the milk as cold as possible when once cooled.

Another station says that the greater the attention paid to scrupulous cleanliness in handling milk at all stages the shorter the time that elapses between the drawing, straining and cooling of milk, and the lower the temperature to which it is cooled the greater freedom from micro-organisms, the longer it will retain its normal condition, the more profitable its production will be and the more wholesome it will be for old and young.

HIGH SCHOOL DEBATING TEAM

Will be Chosen at the Debate to be Held Saturday Night.

The team to represent Charlevoix high school in the Harbor Springs-Charlevoix debate will be chosen Saturday night, May 16, in the high school assembly.

The question, "Resolved that labor unions promote the best interest of the working man," will be defended by the contestants, Marion Jones, Geo. Crouter, Leslie Crane and Cleland Mayne. The opposing team will be led by Judge Mayne.

All interested in debating should come out and encourage the young people.

The contest with Harbor Springs will occur at that place May 22.

The opening game on the new grounds at Boyne City will be played on that date between Boyne City and Kalkaska, both of which have fast teams.

FISHERMEN MEET

With State Game Warden and Deputies Thursday Night.

For the Purpose of Coming to an Understanding in Regard to the Size of Fish.

A well attended meeting of the Charlevoix Fishermen's Association was held May 7. Present were Mr. Pierce, state game warden, and several of his deputies, as well as representatives of the R. Bentel Co. and A. Booth & Co.

The purpose of this meeting was an endeavor to come to some understanding with the game warden in regard to the size of the fish and what disposition to make of the undersized fish.

As we all know, a legal sized whitefish is to weigh two pounds in the round. The game warden has declared that such fish shall weigh no less than 1¾ pounds each, dressed, but at this meeting concession was made by Mr. Pierce to reduce this weight to one pound and ten ounces.

It was further decided that any whitefish of a less size than one pound and ten ounces should be brought in and delivered to the dealers, who will ship said fish to some state institution as directed by Mr. Pierce. This would relieve the fishermen of any trouble in the matter, and if same is carried out they are not subject to fines. This, however, does not apply to pound net fish, which are considered live fish and which if under two pounds in the round must be turned back into the water.

FOR MILK INSPECTION

Action Taken By Meeting of the Board of Health.

Garbage Districts to Be Formed—Sewer Connections to Be Made.

The board of health and council committee on sanitary matters held a joint session Monday night and took important action in regard to the matters brought before the council by Health Officer Thielen.

The board was first organized by the election of E. E. Wood, president; Dr. J. A. Auld, vice president, and J. M. Saunders, secretary.

The matter of milk supply was taken up and it was decided to recommend to the council the passing of an ordinance providing for a city milk inspector, all milk dealers to be required to take out a license and furnish a list of the farms from whom they secure their milk supply.

Ordinances were also recommended for the licensing of garbage collectors, the forming of garbage districts and the enforcement of the rules of the board in regard to garbage collections. It was also decided to compel property owners on Bridge street and Park avenue in the vicinity of the water works, to connect with the sewers.

REDUCTION OF CITY SALARIES

Made by Common Council at Its Last Meeting, Thursday Night.

APPOINTMENTS MADE BY MAYOR

George Reinhart Chief of Police, A. L. Fitch City Attorney.

Sanitary Matters to be Investigated—Cemetery to be Left as Formerly—Other Business of Interest.

The last meeting of the council, held Thursday night, was a business session throughout. The chief interest was in the appointments and fixing of salaries.

Mayor Rose made the following appointments, all of which were confirmed by the council:

Chief of Police, George Reinhart.
Street Commissioner, Harrison Berdan.
City Attorney, A. L. Fitch.
Health Officer, J. B. Thielen.
Harbor Master, E. L. Johnson.
Member Cemetery Board, E. B. Hodge.
Dog Warden, George W. Cook.
Police, Henry Sherman, James Gaskin, Karl Wardrop, Charles Howard, E. L. Johnson, W. Herschel Miller, and Harrison Berdan.

Salaries were fixed as follows: Chief of police, $720 per year; street commissioner, $60 per month, when on duty; city attorney, $50 per year; health officer, $50 per year; harbor master, $25 per year; city assessor, $200 per year.

Health officer Thielen appeared before the council and brought to their attention several matters for the proper safeguarding of the health of the city, asking that all property owners on Bridge street and Park avenue in the vicinity of the city water works, be compelled to connect with the sewer; that an analysis of the city water be made and published; that provision be made for the proper collection and disposal of garbage in covered cans, and that the milk supply of the city be put under proper inspection. Referred to committee on sanitary matters with instructions to report next meeting.

The committee on streets reported in favor of the paving of Mason street. Protests were heard against the building of a sidewalk on May street, the speakers asking instead that a stone road be built on said street. The matter was laid over until next meeting. The committee was instructed to have the bridge painted.

The committee on the placing of proper fire escapes on public buildings reported that the management of the Charlevoix Theater would build a covered four-foot stairway on the north side of the building, placing a doorway, which would be used as a general exit to it midway, and extend the stairway to the rear window which would be arranged as an emergency exit. That an entrance would be made from the gallery to both sides of stage; that the balcony in front would be strengthened and the exit under the stage made more convenient. The committee recommended the acceptance of the changes and the report was adopted.

The druggists bonds of A. B. Fleischer and E. N. Chapel & Co. were presented and referred back for correction.

Mayor Rose advocated that proper bridges be secured for the members of the board, but no action was taken, and after passing on the bills the council adjourned for one week.

The special committee on cemetery reported that Bryant Avenue be restored to its former width. Report accepted. Both banks were designated as city depositaries.

How to Dry Wet Furs.

Few furs are spoiled by slight dampness, but none will be pretty or even serviceable after being thoroughly saturated with water unless properly dried, for much moisture stiffens the skin and causes it to crack. Chinchilla is usually quickly ruined if soaked with rain, while some other skins will be uninjured if hung in a dry, but not hot, room and shaken every two or three hours. If a wet fur garment is fastened to the wall or door, etc., so the grain of the skin is down, permitting the moisture to run off, the result when dry will be most satisfactory. When the first heavy wet is gone, it is well to use a light riding whip to beat the fur slightly, thus hastening the drying as well as preventing the hair from matting. If the fur is a soft one, such as chinchilla or sealskin, it should be rubbed with a velvet hat brush when quite dry. Hard furs, such as mink and lynx, require stiff bristles, lynx always being stroked the way of the grain.

How to Cut a Plaid Skirt.

It is a more difficult feat to cut a skirt from plaid or striped material than one would imagine, for it is hard to match the plaid or stripe without wasting a great deal of goods. Place the center of the front gore exactly over the middle of the plaid or stripe. This same thing should be done when cutting a circular skirt. Now place the edge of the cut gore on the width for a circular skirt to the uncut material and match the crosswise stripes, moving the gore up or down a block or stripe until it matches exactly. Then lay the cut edge of the second gore to the uncut material and match as before, continuing this until the skirt is all cut out.

How to Renovate Black Gloves.

Black kid gloves that have become worn and white at the finger ends may be made to look almost as good as new by using a few drops of sweet oil and black ink, equal parts, well mixed, and applied with a camel's hair brush.

The spring meeting of the Northern Michigan Press Club was held at Kalkaska May 1 and 2. About thirty members were in attendance and three very enjoyable and profitable sessions were held and it proved the most successful meeting in the club's history. The Kalkaska board of trade did the "host" act in entertaining the quill drivers and thus showed good business enterprise which will be returned several fold in the kindly notices given our sister village by the newspapers represented.

The topic of political advertising was the principle subject discussed and it was the concensus of opinion that papers should charge their highest advertising rate for such matter in advancing the interests of candidates before the primary election. Hon. A. E. Palmer, of Kalkaska, a member of the committee on reforestation, gave a very interesting address.

The election of officers resulted in the choice of C. E. Churchill, of the Petoskey Daily News for president, and J. N. Tinklepaugh, of the Kalkaska Leader, for secretary and treasurer.

The following citizens of Antrim county are reported republican aspirants for the offices preceding their names. There are probably others, but so far as the Independent has not been able to locate them. It is rather early, however, to be in grooming for the fall election:

Representatives—N. W. Burdick and T. E. Niles.

Judge of Probate—E. R. Harris, G. T. Bentley and Ralph Wiltse, of Banks; Dr. B. C. Sickles, of Bellaire, and N. C. Weter, of Mancelona.

Sheriff—W. H. Kittle, of Mancelona.

Treasurer—George E. Cabanis, of Forest Home, and W. B. Beam, of Mancelona.

Prosecuting Attorney—C. E. Densmore, of Bellaire, and T. E. Meggison, of Central Lake.

Register of Deeds—Dr. C. V. Hinman and C. S. Guile, of Bellaire.

For the offices of circuit court commissioner, surveyor and coroners candidates appear to be scarce.—Bellaire Independent.

On May 1st the doors of 251 Michigan saloons closed for good. Local option went into effect in ten counties. Two breweries were also hit by the spring election. The counties which will dry up and the number of saloons in each are as follows: Barry, 19; St. Joseph, 35; Wexford, 30; Missaukee, 9; Oceana, 7; Clinton, 30; Oakland, 33; Midland, 13; Gratiot, 21. The next few weeks will determine whether an effort to place Jackson county with this company will be made next spring.

W. C. Shelby, vice-president of the G. R. & I., while fishing on the Manistee river seven miles from Frederic last week was painfully injured by falling from a wagon. Reports are that he tried to keep his dog from under the wheels and lost his balance and fell out. The wagon passed over him, breaking two ribs and otherwise injuring him. He was removed to Grand Rapids by special train sent for him.

The Best Man.

During the old days of Swedea there were several best men, and the term was applied in its full literal sense. The duty of the best men in those times was to defend the groom and his prospective bride from a rival, who, accompanied by several retainers, was sure to appear while the wedding procession was on its way to church and make a stubborn fight for possession of the woman. The Scandinavian warrior considered it beneath his dignity to court a maiden's favor by gallantry and submission and, therefore, generally preferred to wait until she was on her way to be married to another man, when the attempt was made to carry her off by main strength. It was then that the best men—if they were the best men—came into good play; hence the custom is still preserved in "best" men of today.

ECZEMA

Cured in less than four weeks.

Those who have had experience with this stubborn disease can hardly believe at first that Wonderful Dream Salve can and does cure Eczema.

There is no doubt about the matter whatever. A great many letters are on file in our office from grateful patients, telling of the quick and easy way in which Wonderful Dream Salve has removed all traces of this torturing skin affliction.

"Mr. John T. Kealey, a well-known business man, located in the Stevens Bldg., Detroit, Mich., was recently cured of a bad case of Eczema of fourteen years' standing. After treating with many doctors and taking many remedies without relief, Mr. Kealey was induced to try Wonderful Dream Salve, and in four weeks was entirely cured. He says:

"I certainly consider this a remarkable cure, inasmuch as I have spent hundreds of dollars in the fourteen years of annoyance with this troublesome itching skin ailment. I have since the cure of my case heard of other cures, some of them even more remarkable than mine, which go toward demonstrating the value of Wonderful Dream Salve as a great skin healer."

If you have Eczema, why not try a box of Wonderful Dream Salve. If it fails, your druggist will refund your money. Isn't that fair enough? Keep it in your home for Chilblains, Chapped hands, Piles, Cuts, Burns, Frost-bites, Boils and Sores of any kind. You will never use anything else. 25c a box at your druggist or mailed prepaid direct.

CHAPTER IV.

THE next few months were a period of unprecedented toil and excitement for Alwyn Bennett. He sometimes wondered at his own eloquence. Speech after speech he made in every section of the city—in half built suburbs, in halls where nine-tenths of his hearers were in evening dress and where familiar faces dotted the place; in overcrowded, smoke reeking auditoriums, where not one man in three wore a collar and where a score of nationalities vied for precedence.

With a versatility that delighted Horrigan the candidate managed to adapt himself to every audience and, moreover, to impress his hearers with a sense of his absolute sincerity and honesty. In the crowded, polyglot meetings he hit on the plan of speaking to representatives of each race in their own language. In a single evening, so the papers recorded, he had made speeches in English, French, German, Italian and Spanish. At some meetings toughs had tried to confuse him by interrupting with questions, joking comment or insult. For each Alwyn, without breaking the thread of his discourse, found some quick reply so apt as to turn the laugh on his tormentor and turn the audience's sympathy to himself.

At last election day came and went. And Alwyn Bennett by a fair majority carried his entire ticket to victory. Even his severest critics in the organization were forced to admit that Bennett, and Bennett alone, had saved the party from severe defeat. Horrigan's judgment and choice of men for the thousandth time in the boss' crooked political career was vindicated, and Horrigan himself was overjoyed beyond measure. Nor did the fact that he had failed to oust Alderman Phelan in the primaries wholly cloud the boss' delight.

There was, however, a slight cloud on Alwyn's triumph, for Dallas Wainwright was not present to share that triumph. Within a few days after Horrigan's visit to the Wainwright place Dallas had gone with an aunt on an eight months' tour of Europe and the Mediterranean. But Perry who at her secret request had kept her posted on every detail of the stirring campaign, cabled her the result on election night, and the following day a reply message of congratulation crossed the Atlantic to gladden Alwyn's heart. In a letter that followed a week later Dallas asked the first political favor the future mayor was called upon to grant. She begged that in his office Bennett would try to find a place for Cynthia Garrison. In consequence of which when the young man made up his list of personal appointments Miss Garrison found herself listed as assistant private secretary at a decidedly comfortable salary.

It was while she was working in that capacity in the mayor's private room in the city hall during Bennett's lunch hour one day in midwinter that her solitude was broken by the entrance of a visitor.

Perry Wainwright, redolent of bandbox and soap as ever, found his way past the doorkeeper and burst into the sanctum.

"Hello!" was his greeting. "His honor isn't around?"

"No," answered Cynthia demurely, looking up from her work with the most businesslike air she could assume. "He's out at lunch."

"I knew he would be," grinned Perry. "I timed it fine, didn't I?"

"If you knew he was out, why did you come?" she asked severely. "You know I never receive callers during business hours. If you didn't come to see Mr. Bennett"—

"But I did. Honest-I did. I have a message for him. It's awfully important. He mustn't miss it."

"Perhaps you'll leave it with me? I can"—

"No; it's got an answer to it. I'll have to wait, I suppose."

He sat down, mulcted, with an air of mock resignation that was too much for Cynthia's gravity.

"Perry Wainwright," she exclaimed in exasperation, "how often am I to tell you you mustn't bother me here in office hours?"

"Now you've hurt my feelings," announced Perry in solemn conviction. "But," he added generously, "I'll forgive you, and to prove it I'll give you a peace offering. See? Your old Boston terriers Betty and Prince Charlie, and me holding them."

And he laid before her a photograph. She caught it up, with a little cry of pleasure.

"Oh, the beauties!" she exclaimed.

"We do look well in that pose," he admitted modestly.

"I was speaking of the dogs," she reproved him, with lofty scorn.

"But I'm in the picture, too," he explained. "I'm the one with the hat on. And"—

"Thank you so much for the picture. I shall keep it always. They're the nicest dogs I ever had."

"I'm nice too. And it isn't my fault I'm not a dog. I"—

"I told you once before not to give up hope. You'll grow. "I"—

"I told that to some fellows at the club, and we tried to figure it out, and we decided you were guying me."

"What clever men you must be at that club! Are you going to the administration ball next week?"

"Are you?" -

"Why?"

"Because that's the answer. I've never been to an administration ball, but if you're there I guess it"—

"Don't be silly.—The administration ball is a very great function indeed. I've been asking questions about it. Not only every one connected with the administration goes, but all sorts of capitalists and other people like that. I've heard that some of the biggest financial deals are arranged during that ball. Isn't it queer?"

"Not especially. There's a deal I'm thinking of putting through myself that night if I don't get a good chance earlier—a deal that means a lot to me."

"Then why wait till the ball? Why not"—

"I'd do it now, only Bennett might come in before"—

"What a worker Mr. Bennett is!" broke in Cynthia, turning very pink and hastening to change the subject.

"In the old days we thought he was the soul of laziness, but now he's working here night and day. He's not only the youngest mayor this city ever had, but I think he's the busiest too. He"—

The eulogy on the new mayor was cut short by that dignitary's appearance from the center room. As Alwyn paused to hang up his coat and hat and pull off his gloves Cynthia bent once more over her work, while Perry straightened up and strict to look as though he really had business of pressing importance with his honor.

The mouths had brought changes to Bennett. There were care lines on his face, and his eyes were tired. A few silver strands, too, had crept into the darker hair on his temples. There was little now about him to suggest the idler.

"Well, old man," he exclaimed on seeing Perry, "what's the excuse this time?"

"The what?" asked the youth uneasily.

"The excuse. You come here—when I'm likely to be out—about four times a week, and always with a perfectly new excuse for your intrusion. I tolerate you for the originality of those excuses. What is today's?"

"I have no need of an excuse," replied Perry, with an air of hurt dignity. "I am the bearer of a most important message to you."

"From whom?"

"From—from— Dallas is home; landed this morning."

A light came into the mayor's tired eyes at the news.

"And the message?" he asked eagerly.

"That's the message. She's home."

"She sent you to tell me that?"

"No; not exactly that," evaded Perry, wriggling uncomfortably.

"Well, what was her message then?"

"She—she didn't send any."

"Then who sent the message that she has come home?"

"Well, the fact is I sent it myself. That's why I brought it."

"Oh, you poor idiot!" laughed Bennett. "The same old excuse in a new shape! Well, now you're here, you can stay just five minutes. I'm too busy to play with little boys today."

"Little boys! I'll be twenty-two next spring. I"—

"Any messages while I was out, Miss Garrison?"

"Yes, one," answered Cynthia. "Your mother telephoned that she would be here at half past 2. She said she had a surprise for you."

"Say," remarked Perry, feeling he was being excluded from the talk, "I'd go easy on that surprise if I were you, Alwyn. I've had surprises over the telephone myself, and they're punk. Once a girl"—

"Alderman Phelan would like to speak to your honor," said Ingram, the old doorkeeper, popping his head in the anteroom.

"Show him in," answered Bennett. "Now, then, Perry"—

"Were you about to ask me to stay awhile longer?" asked the boy. "Because I'm sorry, but I can't. Goodby. Good afternoon, Miss Garrison. Glad you liked the photo. So long. Maybe I'll bring another message from Dallas tomorrow."

"What can Phelan want of me, I wonder," mused Bennett, half aloud. "He and I scarcely— Good afternoon, alderman? I think this is the first time you've honored me with a visit."

"Then be lenient with a first offense, your honor," suggested Phelan, shaking hands with the mayor and nodding pleasantly to Cynthia as she passed out to her own office.

"Something important, I suppose," hazarded Bennett.

"Maybe it is important, and maybe it isn't," returned Phelan. "It all depends on whether that was a true story in the Chronicle today about your vetoing the Borough Street railway bill. If you've really vetoed that bill all I'll have to do is to say, 'Sorry I can't stay longer,' and get out."

"No," said Bennett, "that announcement wasn't authorized. I haven't vetoed the Borough Street railway bill. In fact, I haven't made public any decision on it. Why?"

"I'm glad to hear it, and, that being the case, I'll invite myself to a seat and stay awhile. Say, your honor, on the level, that Borough bill was the rawest thing that ever came across. Gee, but they did their work with a meat ax!"

"Then you weren't one of the aldermen who voted for it?"

"Me? Nothin' doing. I don't belong to Dick Horrigan's 'solid thirteen.' He can't buy and sell me at his own terms like he does them thirteen geezers."

"And yet, alderman, from your reputation"

"From my reputation I'm a crook, hey? Well, there's crooks and crooks. And I'm one of the other kind, if I'm crooked at all, which I deny most enthusiastically. At least I follow no Horrigan whistle."

"Then why are you here in regard to the Borough bill?"

"Perhaps it's on the theory of 'set a thief to catch a thief.'"

"Well," laughed Bennett, amused in spite of himself by the alderman's frankness, "at least you call a spade a spade."

"I sure don't refer to it vague, but as a 'utensil.' You don't need any footnote explanations in one syllable when Jimmy Phelan's talking. Every move a picture. If I hadn't been through the game from shuttle to cash in, would I be wise to what the Horrigan crowd is framing up on you now? Say, I've done some raw work in my time, but this Borough business is the coarsest yet. They must think you're the original Mr. Good Thing."

"You speak as if I were to be made responsible for"—

"And ain't you?" cried Phelan. "Sure you are. When the people get wise to what they're up against and commence to do their scream will they remember that So-and-so framed the bill and that such and such aldermen voted for it? Not them. What the public will remember is that you signed it. It'll go screechin' down the corridors of time as 'the iniquitous Borough franchise bill that Bennett signed.' Catch the idea?"

"Yes," said Bennett grimly; "I understand. But what I don't see is why you should have taken the trouble to come here and warn me of this. You've never shown any special fondness for me hitherto."

"That's right. But I've shown bunches of unfondness for Chesty Dick Horrigan. And Horrigan's the man who's rushing the Borough bill through. Lord, what a bill! It's so crooked that if it was laid out like a street the man who tried to walk along it would meet himself coming back. Why, your honor, I"—

"Mr. Wainwright, your honor," said Ingram at the door; "says he won't detain you long."

"Let him in if you like," suggested Phelan. "I can wait. Shall I go into the other"—

"No. Wait here if you choose. His business isn't likely to be private."

"I'm sorry to break in on your rush hours," said Wainwright as he advanced to greet the mayor. "I won't keep you long. Good afternoon, alderman."

"Howdy," returned Phelan, walking over to the far end of the office, where, by falling into deep and admiring study of a particularly atrocious portrait of some earlier mayor, he decided that he was temporarily out of the conversation.

"I'll come to the point at once, Mr. Bennett," began Wainwright. "I called to see you about the Borough Street railway bill."

"That's an odd coincidence," answered Bennett. "I was going to call you up this afternoon and ask your opinion of it. What do you think of the measure?"

"What does he think of it?" muttered Phelan, addressing the portrait in an aside that was perfectly audible. "What does he think of it?—And him ownin' the rival road! Oh, easy! Ask him a real hard one!"

"You're mistaken, alderman," returned Wainwright blandly. "I am in-

A Prescription for Constipation.

Eminent medical authorities agree that ninety per cent of their patients suffer from ailments due to clogged bowel (Constipation.)

The bowels become clogged with impurities and body poisons, causing biliousness, colds, stomach trouble, headache, rheumatism, deranged liver and kidneys, etc.

A Tonic Laxative is prescribed in nearly every case. Those who need a laxative may use this prescription with the assurance that no harmful results will follow its use. It has been given to the Public in tablet form and is known as Iron-ox (Laxative Iron-ox Tablets) and are put up in aluminum pocket cases.

The formula is wrapped around the case. The action of each ingredient is explained, that you may understand why Laxative Iron-ox Tablets are the safest Laxative to use; they strengthen the bowels, aid digestion, and keep the liver and kidneys healthy and active. We have secured the selling agency for Laxative Iron-ox Tablets and recommend them to our Customers. F. N. Clinpel & Co.

Marlin

THE snow and rain, rushes and sand inseparable from duck and goose shooting never bother the hunter who is using a Marlin Model 1912 gauge repeating shotgun, the best all-around gun in the market.

The ejection is from the side (an exclusive Marlin feature) and the closed breech bolt covers the action keeping out all foreign matter which so often clogs repeating shotguns.

The Marlin automatic safety prevents the accidental opening of the action when firing, and holds the breech shut until after explosion in cases of hang-fire; the solid top of frame is always a protection between you head and the cartridge.

The man who loves a gun needs the 1907 Marlin Book. It is full of gun information, has the answer to every gun question, contains 176 pages of live matter. FREE, for 3 stamps postage.

THE movement by the board of health for the taking of proper sanitary measures for the preservation of the public health, is a move in the right direction, one which will do more good for the city than any other official move which could be made at the present time. The proper safe-guarding of the milk supply of our city is of prime importance to our summer residents, who if the ordinances are adopted, will be assured of a pure milk supply. Of equal importance are the proposed ordinances in regard to the collection of garbage and the compelling of property owners on our principal business street and near our water supply to connect with the sewers.

With the adoption of these progressive measures, the continuation of the work of paving which is now going on, and the fact that we have every business building occupied, the prospects of Charlevoix for the coming summer are looking especially bright.

THE COURIER has been asked why it did not print certain matters of news which have appeared in these columns regularly under display headings, but were evidently overlooked by some of our readers, no doubt through a habit of reading one or two pages of their paper and ignoring the rest. It should not be necessary to remind our subscribers that this paper is not a "patent" sheet, with only a fraction containing news of interest to local readers. There is good local news matter on nearly every page of each issue, and no person who has not read every page, advertisements included, has secured the full value of the matter presented for his benefit. We give each week as much of news and as much of advertising value as any two other papers in Charlevoix county combined, and it is rather humiliating to have a portion of this labor go for nought by reason of a rather heedless habit acquired by some of our readers.

DIED AT EARLY AGE

Orpha, Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Disbrow, Thursday, May 7.

Orpha, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Disbrow, died at her parent's home in this city, Thursday evening at 9:20, of tubercular meningitis, aged 10 years, 11 days, after an illness of three weeks, although her health had been failing for some time previous. She was a third grade pupil and will be sadly missed by her mates.

The funeral took place at the Congregational church, Saturday, Rev. H. A. Putnam officiating. Burial at Brookside cemetery.

Will be Home Thursday.

In a letter just received from Rev. F. H. Bayles, he informs us that Mrs. Bayles and himself will be home Thursday, much improved in health, and the usual services will be resumed at the Baptist church.

Mr. Bayles desires to thank the citizens of Charlevoix for the many kindnesses showo them, and expresses the desire that he may be able to do some good.

OLD RESIDENT DEAD

A. O. D. McCabe Dies Suddenly Monday Morning.

Had Resided in This Section for More Than Forty Years

A. O. D. McCabe, aged 91, one of the oldest settlers of this region died suddenly at his home, in this city, Monday forenoon, of a stroke of apoplexy.

Mr. McCabe was born on the island of St. Helena, his father being one of Napoleon's guards.

Mr. McCabe came to this region from Philadelphia, settling first at Northport, coming to this county in the early sixties, and taking up a homestead in Eveline township, moving to this city about twenty-five years ago.

He was twice married, and leaves a wife and three children, John, of Chicago, Mary Ann, of Philadelphia and Mrs. Maggie Glasgow, now staying with her mother.

The funeral took place at the house to day, Rev. Fr. Anastasia officiating.

Went on the Excursion.

The following members of the Chapter O. E. S. are in East Jordan today attending the meeting of the Maguza District Association:

Mesdames Henry Wood, Ira See, F. A. Butler, Cal Price, Campbell, Julia Crane, Bedford, Elsman, Young, Geiken, Weikel, Allcox, Benton, Price, Wardrop, Levinson, Collins, Cooper, Markham; Misses Clara Ainslee, Minnie Payton, Mary Goddin, Mae Williams, Anna Lombard and Messrs. H. C. Cooper, F. A. Butler, Charles See, Galo Hines, Karl Hines, Bert Beaudoin, John Harsha, John Cheney, Lee Smith, Milo Miller, Charlie Emery.

PROFIT IN ONIONS.

Satisfactory Returns In Growing the Yellow Globe Variety.

An instance of where Connecticut river valley farmers are making farming pay is afforded by the experience of Arthur Hobart of Franklin county, Mass., last fall. From two and a half acres of his land there was harvested 2,050 bushels of Yellow Globe Danvers onions. These sold at 50 cents a bushel or more at the time of harvest, and in the entire lot there was not more than ten bushels of small onions. Fertilizer was applied at the rate of one ton of high grade to the acre. This cost about $45. The field was taken on shares, and Mr. Hobart figures that the rent of the land for the year returned him $125.

It is quite a frequent practice in the onion growing belt for a man to supply the land, the fertilizer and half the seed and let a second party come in and do all the work, each taking half at the harvest. One good point urged for this practice is that it is mutually profitable to all interested. Polanders frequently lease land in this way and with the help of their families and immediate friends handle a large amount of work during the season. In fact, it is said they will handle more than twice as much as they would working as day laborers.

In the cut, from New England Homestead, are shown specimens of the onions that contributed toward such satisfactory results.

SPECIMEN ONIONS.

Captain Puts on His Red Necktie.

No matter how small the vessel or how impecunious may be the skipper, there is always a "boiled" shirt and a clean collar laid carefully away to be worn when the craft enters port. At sea the captain may be very rough in his attire, but the approach to land finds him combing his hair and cropping his whiskers, if he has any, and the collar is donned, also a red necktie, which usually is flamboyant red.

Even the poorest men who bring vessels to Boston to secure loads of lumber for South American ports dress as neatly as possible when the customs boarding officer is expected to come alongside to inspect the ship's papers.

And the mates slick up, too, when their floating home is nearing port, so that the "old man," as the captain is familiarly termed behind his back, may not carry off all the honors of the occasion.—Boston Herald.

Hog Pasture.

When sown with alfalfa, Bromus Inermis is said to make fine hog pasture. In large pastures for cattle or for cattle and hogs Professor Ten Eyck suggests the following mixture of seeds per acre: Bromus Inermis, ten pounds; orchard grass, six pounds; meadow fescue, eight pounds; red clover, one to two pounds. For wormout pastures he advises an early disking and sowing to Bromus Inermis, putting most seed on places where the pasture is most killed out.

RECORDS IN THE DAIRY.

The effort to interest dairymen in the returns from their individual cows continues, and many farmers seem to be awakening to the fact that the improvement of the whole herd demands the study of the unit—that is, a close acquaintance with the expenditure upon the individual cow and the returns therefrom.

This can be determined in no other way than by keeping an exact record of the daily milk yield. A record of the daily food consumption would also be of great use if it could be kept.

Many farmers who have been keeping such records for some time report very strongly in favor of this kind of work.

As soon as the farmer sets to work to know what his cows are doing by keeping a record he finds himself much more closely in touch with his business. He sees at once the effect of better care and better feeding. He notes the great difference in returns between the best and the worst cows in his herd and cannot help but desire to get rid of the poor ones and replace them with good ones.

Even the poor cows are improved because better feeding is almost certain to be tried, and quite certainly poor feeding is responsible for many of our unprofitable dairy cows and even for many unprofitable dairy herds.

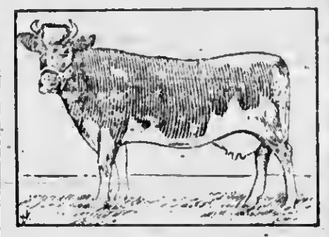
The profitable dairy cow must give over 5,000 pounds of milk each year. To know the value of a cow her total annual yield of milk must be known. The only way to know this is to keep a record of her daily milk yield.

Such records are being kept by hundreds of successful dairymen today.

For weighing the milk a simple spring balance may be secured.—J. H. Grisdale.

A Record Breaker.

This is the cow owned by W. W. Cheney, Manlius, N. Y., for which fame is claimed as having broken in



GENIE CLOTHILDE, HOLSTEIN-FRIESIAN COW.

December, 1907, the world's best official record of all breeds for one day's butter production.

One day test, 95.1 pounds of milk, 4.943 pounds of fat and 6,179 pounds of butter; seven day test, 6394 pounds of milk, 24.337 pounds of fat and 30.421 pounds of butter; thirty day test, 26812.5 pounds of milk, 93.439 pounds of fat and 116.797 pounds of butter.

Cows Have Off Years.

While records of dairy cows for a full year are valuable, records for a series of years are still better. Dairy cows have their off years, and this must be considered when cows having poor records are being dropped from the herd. If this fact is not borne in mind there is danger of selling the best cows. Attention is called to a cow, Sweet Briar, of the Minnesota experiment station that produced for ten years an average of 358.07 pounds of butter a year, while in 1898 she produced only 206.06 pounds of butter, in 1901 she made 306.53 pounds and in 1907 370.51 pounds.

If the merits of Sweet Briar had been wholly based on the work she did in 1898, she would possibly have been dropped from the herd. The great value of scales and the Babcock test lies in their continued use in the dairy herd. It sometimes happens that promising heifers do very poorly the first year. In such cases the heifer's individuality, together with her breeding, should be considered before disposing of her, and records for a series of years should be the final test. It may be stated that a good cow seldom has two off years in succession.—Clarence H. Lane.

The Labor Involved.

The question will be raised at once as to the immense amount of labor involved in keeping up records of this character. Of course those used by the experiment station are much more elaborate than would be needed on an ordinary farm. In discussing experimental results, however, the most careful and accurate dealing with a large number of individuals and covering long periods of time is absolutely necessary. The labor of maintaining accurate records of a large number of animals is simply enormous and cannot be appreciated except by those who have had practical experience. An adding machine of the type in use here will effect a saving in clerical labor that would amount to a great deal in the course of a year. The slide rule will also be found wonderfully helpful in this respect, and it can fortunately be purchased at a reasonable price.—Virginia Experiment Station.

Rotting of Potatoes.

The rotting of potatoes in storage is often a source of serious loss. The infection of the potatoes with the fungus occurs chiefly if not entirely in the field before digging. The infection is usually the result of diseased vines. The disease is transmitted in the majority of cases not directly through the vine, but indirectly through the soil. Potatoes may be infected directly in the field from spores introduced in the manure or from rotten potatoes spread upon or left in the land the preceding year.—C. D. Woods.

An exchange statistically remarks: "When he has his overcoat on, the average man has nineteen pockets." The average woman with her cloak on has two pockets. A man has five pockets in his trousers; five in his vest; four in his coat and five in his overcoat, and then he wonders why a woman carries a hand bag. And, by the way, though a woman has but one pocket in her dress, did our contemporary ever notice that she can go through all nineteen of a man's pockets while he is finding the location of her one?

DEATH OF AGED EDITOR

E. L. Sprague of Traverse City, Died Thursday, May 7.

Oldest Active Editor in Northern Michigan Was Busy to the End.

Elvin L. Sprague, the oldest active editor in northern Michigan, died at his home in Traverse City May 7. Death came very suddenly, and was due to congestion of the lungs. He had continued his duties as an editorial writer of the Daily Eagle up to the day preceding his death.

Mr. Sprague was born in Gill, Mass., December 22, 1830, and moved with his parents to Washtenaw county, Mich., in 1836. In 1853 he moved to the Grand Traverse region, locating at Elk Rapids, where in 1861 he founded the Elk Rapids Eagle, the second newspaper published in the lower peninsula north of Big Rapids and Manistee. Two years later the name of the paper was changed to the Traverse Bay Eagle, and in 1893 was moved to Traverse City and the Daily Eagle was founded.

Mr. Sprague had held many offices of trust, both in the city and township, and always helped materially in shaping affairs in Traverse City. He was a Mason and senior warden of the Grace Episcopal church. Besides his widow, one daughter, Miss Gertrude Sprague, managing editor of the Daily Eagle, survives.

EIGHTH GRADE EXAMINATIONS.

Held Last Week at Six Different Points—Improvement Over Former Years.

Reports so far show the following eighth graders to have written at the examinations last week:

Number of eighth graders in class in Boyne City, 37; Charlevoix, 41; East Jordan, 52; St. James, 9; Boyne Falls, 12; Clarion, 10. This includes the eighth grade classes of each of the village schools.

Very little is now done at grading the papers but what had been done indicates that the papers this year are very much better than those of former years have been.

We will aim to have all of the reports in the hands of the teachers in two weeks.

J. H. MILFORD, Commissioner.

Will Settle in Charlevoix.

Dr. Allan M. Wilkinson, of the Beaver Islands, having sold out his practice there to Dr. Graham, has located in Charlevoix and will begin practice here the twentieth of this month. The doctor has rented the Miller cottage and is already moving in. As he is well known here he undoubtedly will have a large practice.

COUNTY NORMAL NOTES.

A musical entertainment was given by Mr. and Mrs. Blanchard May 5, at their home on Park avenue, to which Miss Gale, Miss Himes, Miss Reed and the members of the normal class were invited. A most enjoyable evening was spent.

Mayme Scroggie substituted in the first and second grade room in the Washington school Thursday forenoon, May 7. Miss Jarvis was sick.

Our garden is progressing nicely. We have peas four inches high already and hope that we shall have no heavy frosts to kill them. We expect to finish most of our planting this week. The children from the training room take great interest in the work. Here is one of the stories they wrote about the garden:

OUR GARDEN

"We had some black soil brought for the garden. And then we had a fence built and a gate to go in. Then we raked it all out smooth and soft. Then we divided them into beds for the flowers and vegetables and all the things that we are going to plant in the garden. They made it larger then we had thought and I think we will have to get quite a few more seeds than what we have got now.

Benona Bartlett, second grade."

The normal class have finished their study in civics and have taken up the study of school law.

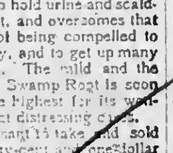
The Cause of Many Sudden Deaths

There is a disease prevailing in this country most dangerous because so deceptive. Many sudden deaths are caused by it—heart disease, pneumonia, heart failure or apoplexy are often the result of kidney disease. If kidney trouble is allowed to advance the kidney-poisoned blood will attack the vital organs or the kidneys themselves break down and waste away cell by cell.

Bladder troubles most always result from a derangement of the kidneys and a cure is obtained quickest by a proper treatment of the kidneys. If you are feeling badly you can make no mistake by taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and sold by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sized bottles. You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful new discovery and a book that tells all about it, both sent free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper.



Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

EFFECTS OF SPEEDING AUTOS

L. W. Page and Dr. Allerton S. Cushman Conduct Experiments

To Prove Theory That at High Speed They Strip Roads of Surface Binder.

A two-ton racing automobile moving at something in excess of a mile a minute, while an impenetrable cloud of fog-grey rock dust hung to the horizon and marked the speeding course of the big machine, was the sight witnessed by travelers on the famous coquitt road a dozen miles from Washington on Thursday, April 23.

The seemingly pronounced violation of the speed ordinances was countenanced by two of the nation's federal departments, agriculture and war; however the rushing motor car having been pressed into requisition by L. W. Page, director of the office of public roads, and Dr. Allerton S. Cushman, assistant director, in an effort to determine the effects of automobile traffic upon macadam highways, and the stretch of thoroughfare was placed at their disposal by war department officials.

While the racing car and others of various weights and types made many trips over the selected stretch of a mile and a half at varying rates of speed, from 5 to 65 miles an hour, a corps of skilled photographers, equipped with the most modern devices for photographing vehicles at very high speeds, made accurate records of the various tests.

It has long been known to highway engineers that automobiles were rapidly shortening the lives of the rock surface roads of the world, and many experiments have been made in the past six or seven years to determine the actual cause of the damage done. To understand how the soft broad tires of the modern motor car can work an injury to a surface that not only withstands, but improves under the constant passing and repassing of vehicles with iron tires, one must be apprised briefly of the theory which, first Tresanget of Limoges, and later MacAdam of Ayr, worked when giving such highways to the world. They reasoned that a road surfaced with bits of stone would improve under wagon traffic because the iron tires of the passing vehicles would constantly crush the stones and form rock dust particles; that those rock dust particles would not merely fill in all the interstices between the stones, but would also form a surface dust binder; the wettings and rollings tending to cement the dust into a shell-like surface and thus make the entire road one traffic-withstanding, water-shedding mass.

They reasoned well and wisely. The macadam roads lived up to the theories of their inventors and improves with the passing years until the advent of the automobile. It was but a short time after it came into vogue that highway engineers in all civilized lands learned that a new condition was confronting them and that established customs were being menaced. The trouble was quickly traced to the automobile and it was studied. It was soon noted that the soft rubber tire was the highway menace. It crushed no rock itself and therefore contributed no quota of the needful surface dust binder, which the tremendous tractive force of the rear wheels drew up the dust made by the iron tired wagons and sent it whirling away over adjacent lands.

Those who witnessed the experiments of Thursday near the national capital could not doubt for a moment that the various road experts all over the world are correct in the opinion that very rapidly driven automobiles are rapidly tearing up the surface of the macadam road, for not only were huge clouds of dust lifted into the air and blown off the road, but careful examination showed that the material under the wheel tracks of the machine was distinctly loosened and ravelled even during the short period of these tests.

No such effects were noticeable after the passing of iron tired vehicles, the series of tests beginning with the passing of a horse drawn vehicle. This was photographed as it moved along and also as the wagon tires passed a given mark. Then the automobiles were sent over the course. The first was a heavy weight touring car moving at five miles an hour. A series of pictures was made of that car on its many journeys at varying rates of speed until its maximum of 65 miles an hour was attained. Then the work was taken up by the huge racer, which tore down the road first at a speed of 50 miles an hour, then at 55, 60, and finally at 65. It fairly lifted the road surfacing material, as it sped along, regular ridges of rock dust rising in front of the rear wheels and floating away in blinding clouds. Other tests were made and other pictures taken of various types of heavy Limousine cars and runabouts. It was plainly noticeable and was commented on that the automobiles when moving at the slow rates of speed equal to the speed made by horse-drawn vehicles made very little dust, the theory that fast-speeding automobiles are responsible for road surface destruction being pretty thoroughly substantiated by these means.

The results of this interesting bit of road work will be carefully studied and put together in a paper or papers to be presented to the international road congress which will meet at Paris on October 11; for so far-reaching are the ravages of the automobile on the wonderful roads of France that that country has urged highway engineers of all lands to assemble at her gay metropolis in the fall to take up the problem and strive for a solution of it.

CAPITALISM AND WOMAN.

Deplorable Plight of Fair Sex Under Present System.

One of the saddest tragedies of life under the capitalist system concerns the women. To no small extent the milkmaid in the song spoke for her sex when she said "my face is my fortune." Well, what does capitalism, the system of society under which we are forced to live today, do for the comeliness of womankind? Of all things a woman is most sensitive of her good looks, and yet it is just here that capitalism strikes her its most cruel blow. Passing by the woman of luxury and indolent ease and the few of the upper middle class who may employ themselves just enough to keep in good health, what do we find to be the lot of the average woman who has assumed the responsibilities of the housewife and thus escaped the still more luckless fate of the spinster? Faded at twenty-five and a hag at forty, when she should be just in the prime of her womanliness!

Overworked, nerve racked, run down with unrelenting drudgery, broken in spirit, forlorn, womankind is indeed capitalism's saddest tragedy. In woman's plight natural laws are at work. Overtaxing invites nature's penalties, for nature renders no judgments with fixed juries or crooked judges. The overdriven, ill kept grocer's horse moves on day by day toward the bone-yard, while the carefully groomed, properly exercised carriage horse challenges our admiration by his glossy hide and proud, lusty, mettlesome bearing. With the human species it is the same eternally and always. You can draw your own picture of how different would be the fate of woman under the Socialist regime.

Jane Addams has called housework a "belated industry." Invention has saved very few of the housewife's steps. Under the Socialist impulse it would do many things in that direction. "While the bread earner of the family getting his socially due share of the products of his toil the pinch of poverty, the pall of economic anxiety, would be lifted from the myriads of little homes, joy would come with work that was not overwearisome, the home would be brighter, sunnier, happier, and woman would keep her looks and her robust, radiant health and her vivacity and womanly grandeur just as nature intended she should. Of all people women should be the most anxious for the abolition of the capitalist regime and the coming of the next higher phase of civilization—the Socialist commonwealth!—Heath.

SOCIALISTS SHOW THE WAY.

Escape From Present Torment Must Come Through Collectivism.

Like every new phase of civilization, Socialism thus far has received the attention only of the oppressed and the lowly. The opulent and the rich have no reason to wish for a change of the system. They do not, as a rule, want to hear anything about it.

Until of late, outside of the working class, only students of history, of political economy and a few advanced thinkers have given any attention to the principles of Socialism. Most other people have only a very vague idea even of its basis. Yet Socialism is in the foreground of discussion.

Socialism stands for a new civilization.

Of course with people who believe that whatever is will exist forever and that we have reached the acme of civilization it is entirely useless to argue.

But surely no educated man believes that the present conditions are the end of all things.

That we have not reached the end of our national development is clear. Every new invention and every new political question proves that to us. And it would be sad indeed if we had reached "the end." We then should soon be on a level with China.

And we need not explain that the Socialist movement is not to be traced to the irresponsible work of individual agitators or eccentric persons.

And we all deeply feel the disadvantages of the private ownership of the means of production and distribution on a large scale.

We observe how the railroads, street car companies and other public service corporations corrupt our legislatures. We notice how our life insurance savings are simply furnishing funds for high financiers. We witness how the largest factory owners combine into trusts which are financiered by banks and how the meat trust, the oil trust, the steel trust and all the other trusts are regulating prices and how, moreover, some of these trusts are ruining the health of the people.

Then we all must also comprehend that the owners of these sheets and strips of paper (which under our present system stand for "capital") virtually decide how much we shall pay for our coffee and our bread, how much for our kerosene and our coal and how much we are to spend for our houses, clothing, etc.

In other words, they decide how well or how poorly we are to live. They have "the say" as to how long or how short a time we are permitted to live.

Precisely for the same reason that the mechanic with his own shop and working on his own account has nearly disappeared in the struggle between hand work and machine work, for precisely the same reason the small manufacturers, with their little machinery, their small capital and their little stock of goods, are now being driven from the field.

And who are the successful men?

They are vulgar fellows, far from possessing eminent faculties or high attainments. They are men who have less knowledge or mental capacity than is required in many mechanical pursuits. They simply have a low animal devouring faculty, the faculty of the tiger or the crocodile—aye, of the swine—and have it well developed. It is these coarse, wolfish men who push to the wall many an intelligent and diligent manufacturer. They are the men who, by the employment and power of their capital, yearly ruin multitudes of hardworking small merchants and boast that they are selling more goods in one day than the whole "crowd" of other stores in a week!

Scores of such small merchants, driven to the wall by the proprietor of the mammoth store, have to be glad if the "prince" will make them his clerks and graciously allow them help swell his income. In short, the smaller fortunes invested in production or commercial enterprise are by this cut-throat competition attracted to the great capital like iron filings to a magnet.

The great capitalist triumphs; the small capitalist becomes a clerk, a politician, a traveling agent, a saloon keeper, a lawyer or a parasite of one kind or another—sometimes even, a wage earner; the middle class disappears little by little. In fact, our social order may fitly be compared to a ladder of which the middle rounds are torn away one by one.

These conditions are before our eyes. In spite of all that is said by the capitalist press and the capitalist politician.

And what remedy can the old political parties bring to the people?

Parties, like individuals, are from motives of self interest.

Now both of the old parties are owned by the capitalists. This is a fact not even denied by the more honest leaders of both Republican and Democratic parties.

And what can you do about it?

There is only one party in the field standing for the new idea. There is only one party representing in the political field the necessary outcome of the evolution in the economic field. That is the Socialist party.

In the first place, by reforms we can stop the increasing pauperization and consequently also the enervation of the masses of the people. If real reforms are seriously taken up and carried out with determination, they may even lift the masses to a considerable extent.

But the main reason for our favoring them is because such reforms if logically carried out offer the possibility of a peaceful, lawful and orderly transformation of society.

Our party wants to guard this nation from destruction.

We appeal to the best in every man, to the public spirit of the citizen, to his love of wife and children.

Evils of Competition.

Under the capitalist system the wage workers are by no means the only sufferers. The small employers, the small merchants, are also feeling the sting of an unequal competition, for every one of these men of business lives at war with all his brethren. The hand of the one is against the other, and no foe is more terrible to him than the one who is running a neck to neck race with him every day.

Therefore in the factory as well as in the store the profits must be cut constantly and the sales must be ever enlarged. The latest improvements, the best labor saving machinery, must be used and as little wages must be paid as possible. The race is for life or death, and "the devil gets the hindmost."

The fierce competition lessens the profit on each article, and this must be compensated for by a greater number of articles being produced and sold—that is, the cheaper the goods the more capital is required to carry on the business.

Dots and Dashes.

There are a thousand hacking at the branches of evil to one who is striking at the root.—Thoreau.

To admit that because things have long gone wrong it is impossible to make them go right is a most fatal doctrine.—Ruskin.

The New York Socialists will launch a daily paper May 1. It will be known as the Daily Call.

Now it is reported that there is still a possibility that August Bebel, the great German Social-Democratic leader, will pay this country a visit. He will speak in only ten or twelve places, however.

Dreams.

Many a capitalist dream of plunder has come true—more's the pity. But to dream of better life for humanity at large through a change in the economic system—ah, that's the unforgivable thing! The Socialist is that kind of a "dreamer," and a capitalist can put an awful amount of contempt in his voice when he dismisses Socialism and Socialists as "visionaries." So long as his selfish dreams come true he has contempt for all unselfish dreams.—Frederic Heath.

Would Enlarge Ownership.

Determined opponents of the present capitalistic system of industry, as the Socialists are, still they never think of calling the concentration of capital the cause of all evil.

Socialists do not try to smash the trusts as such. On the contrary, the Social-Democracy appreciates so fully the advantages of industrial production on a large scale that we wish its most perfect development, which is impossible under the capitalist system.

The New York Outlook says: "Provident institutions and savings banks are being drawn upon by a comparatively large class of people and, as much deposits' savings are gradually exhausted, a larger number is constantly drifting into the class of the unemployed and the homeless in need of work." No wonder the workingmen are beginning to see a thing or two.

clined to favor the passage of the Borough bill."

Phelan shot one keen glance of incredulity at the financier, then wheeled about and resumed his rapt study of the portrait.

"Yes," continued Walnwright, "I admit that my City Surface line is in a way the rival of the Borough Street railway, but in a big city like this there's surely room for both lines to carry on a prosperous business, so why should they try to injure each other?"

"Why, oh, why?" echoed Phelan, again addressing the portrait. "Can I be gettin' so old that I've begun hearin' queer things that's never said?"

Walnwright paid no heed to the interpolation, but went on:

"Of course the franchise will be a good thing for the Borough road, but it needn't hurt the City Surface line. Besides, the passing of the bill made Borough stock rise from 63 to 81. Then when that unauthorized announcement was made today that your honor would veto it the stock tumbled from 81 to 73. Just see what power rests with you, Mr. Bennett! If you should veto the bill, the Borough stock will slump to almost nothing. Think what that will mean to widows and orphans and all sorts of poor people who have invested all their savings in that stock!"

"I'll be hearin' harps twangin' next," said Phelan.

"I'll be hearin' harps twangin' next," groaned Phelan in wonder. "Has the poor, dear man got swellin' of the heart, or is he maybe the advance agent of the millennium? To think of old Tightwad Walnwright"—

Ingram forestalled any reply from the financier by entering with the tidings that Thompson was in the anteroom with an important message for Walnwright.

"May I see him in here?" asked the visitor. "It is my private secretary, and"—

"Certainly," asserted Bennett. "Show him in, Ingram."

"I'd like to see a private secretary of mine come bullin' in like this," confided Phelan to the picture. "I'd chase him so far he'd discover a new street, I'd"—

The alderman broke off short. His eye had fallen on Thompson as the latter entered. Phelan stood rigid, with mouth open and eyes bulging, taking in every detail of the quiet, pallid young man's appearance. The secretary meanwhile had gone up to Walnwright and begun to deliver his message.

"Mr. Horrigan called you up, sir," said he, "just a minute or so after you left the office. He wishes you to come and see him immediately if possible."

"All right," answered the financier. "I'll come at once. I'm sorry, your honor, that I am called away just now, for I'd like to discuss this Borough bill further with you. But what I wished to express can be said in a nutshell. If I, who own the rival road, am in favor of granting the Borough franchise, I can't see why any one else should object to it. Come on, Thompson. Good day, your honor. Good day, alderman."

The financier passed out. Thompson was following when Phelan, who had never once removed his eyes from the secretary, stepped in front of him.

"Well, young man!" said he.

"Well, sir!" said Thompson in mild surprise.

"You remember me?"

"I don't think so, sir."

"Huh! That's queer! I'm Alderman Phelan of the Eighth."

"I've read about you, of course, sir, but I"—

"But you don't know me? Never met me before?"

"I'm sorry, sir, but I can't recall it if I did. Good day, sir."

The secretary hurried out after his employer. Phelan, with a puzzled shake of the head, seemed trying to solve some elusive problem. But Bennett, who had not noted the brief scene between Thompson and the alderman, broke in on the latter's musings with the remark:

"You appeared to be amazed at Mr. Walnwright's attitude toward the Borough Street railway franchise."

"'Amazed' is a mild, gentle word for my feeling," declared the alderman. "To hear that old flint heart prattlin' about widows and orphans and fair play—why, say, your honor, I know Charles Walnwright from way back, and I tell you he has the same affection for the money of widows and orphans that a tomcat has for a canary. As for fair play, he wouldn't recognize it if he was to hear it through a megaphone. He's up to something! I don't know just what. But I'll"—

"Come, come!" remonstrated Bennett good humoredly. "I'm sure you do Walnwright an injustice. He"—

"He's a fine old bird! Do you chance to remember the Garrison case nine years back? President Garrison of the Israel Putnam Trust company"—

"Who shot himself after being ruined by a financier who was his dearest friend? Yes. What has that to do with"—

"With Walnwright? Oh, nothin' much. Only Walnwright happened to be the financier."

"No! You must be mistaken."

"Am I? I ought to know something about it. I was the chief of police at the time and handled the case. It was I who suppressed Walnwright's name. For a small consideration I"—

"Walnwright!" gasped Bennett. "Of all men! But"—

"So you see why I coppered the 'mercy' and 'fair play' cards when he dealt 'em just now," purred Phelan. "There's something big behind this talk of his in favor of the Borough bill. Wasn't it at his house last summer that Horrigan offered you the nomination?—That's the story, and"—

"Yes. On the 25th of July. He"—

"The 25th of July, hey? That was the day he had me out there. The day I met that fellow Gibbs. By the way, your honor, the papers say it's Gibbs' firm that's buyin' all that Borough stock. They've been buyin' it up on the quiet for months. I begin to see a lot of funny little lights that make this thing clearer. Gibbs is buyin' Borough stock. He's Walnwright's chum. Horrigan and Walnwright frame up your nomination; then the minute you come into power this Borough franchise bill is flashed on you by Horrigan, and Walnwright begs you to sign it. Take my tip—Walnwright owns the Borough road as well the City Surface, and Horrigan's gettin' a fat wad of stock for urruggin' the franchise. Oh, they've got your honor all tied up in ribbons, like you was a measly lookay. You and me ought to get together and fight this thing out side by side, and when once I get the Indian sign on Dick Horrigan"—

"But I've no personal quarrel with Horrigan. He"—

"You've got the same quarrel with him that the pigeon has with the muskrat. If you don't use your wings you'll be swallowed. Let me put you on to a few of the little jokers in that bill of his. You see"—

"I see more about that bill than you think," interposed Bennett. "I've worked over it night after night, with my lawyer. Don't you get the idea I've been asleep just because I haven't been making any premature disturbance."

He held out his hand, and Bennett gripped it cordially.

"I think," observed Phelan slowly, "I think I'm beginnin' to get a new line on you and understand you better. If it's any joy to you to know it, Jimmy Phelan says, 'You're all right!'"

He held out his hand, and Bennett gripped it cordially.

"I'm glad we had this talk, alderman," said he. "We are fighting from different points of view, but our main object is the same. I think we can pull together on this matter."

"We sure can," agreed Phelan. "An' as for Horrigan, when I'm done with him he'll be rolled up in a nice bundle, an' I'll prim on it in big letters, 'Use all the hooks you like.'"

"Mrs. Bennett, sir," said Ingram.

"I thought you was single!" exclaimed Phelan.

"It's my mother. Show her in."

From the musty antechamber came the rustle of feminine attire, and Mrs. Bennett came in. Devoted as he was to his mother, Alwyn now had no eyes for her, for over her shoulder he had caught a glimpse of another face.

Good for Everybody.

Mr. Norman R. Coulter, a prominent architect in the Delker Building, San Francisco, says: "I fully endorse all that has been said of Electric Bitters as a tonic medicine. It is good for everybody. It corrects stomach, liver and kidney disorders in a prompt and efficient manner and builds up the system." Electric Bitters is the best spring medicine ever sold over a druggist's counter; as a blood purifier it is unequaled. 50c at E. G. Hines & Co.'s drug store.

The Horrible and Grotesque.

Not a few of the scenes a clergyman is called upon to witness are both grotesque and terrible. An old man had been ill for months, but clung to life with that wonderful pertinacity which is so common with old people. He was of course a great burden to his two daughters, who had to nurse him and at the same time earn their own bread. One day, on being asked how the old man was, one of the daughters, even while she stood by the bed, announced: "E's just the same; 'e is such a time a-dyin'. I wish 'e'd 'urry up a bit. It's a' awk'ard for me and my sister, with our other work to do." It was terrible enough to see natural feeling all but destroyed by poverty, but there was something truly awful in the scene when the old man gasped over from his bed: "I am a-makin' 'aste, ain't I? I've got no call for to live."—Cornhill Magazine.

The Wings of Time.

"Mamma," said little Tommy as he closed the big book, "what are the 'wings of time?'"

"The wings of time, my son," replied his mother in loud tones, "are the faded wings I have been wearing on my hat for three seasons."

And then pa coughed uneasily and told Tommy if he did not stop asking foolish questions he would send him to bed.—Chicago News.

"And you say you are looking for work?" asked the kind old lady of Frazzled Franklyn.

"That's right, mum, but I can't find anything to do."

"How did you lose your position?"

"I was pardoned, mum."—Louisville Herald.

Nothing New to Teach.

The whiskey people are alarmed and announce they are about to enter upon a campaign of education. They want to educate the people to believe that drinking will make happy homes and joyous wives and children; that it will make men industrious and economical and healthful and moral; that it will advance religion and bless men for the present and for the everlasting life. All these things the devil has taught from the beginning. The whiskey men have nothing new to teach. The saloon has been their school house, and they have tried to keep it running twenty-four hours in the day and seven days in the week, so that they might teach their lessons. They have lured the children in that they might be taught in early life. The saloon is their school, and disease, disaster, debt, dishonor, drunkeness, debauchery and death are the realms into which they graduate their students.—Herald and Presbyter.

The Bugle Call, published by the unions of Kankakee county, Ill., prints on its first pages the following stirring petition: "We, the women of Kankakee county, petition you, the men, to keep the saloons out of this, our county, by your votes, on April 7, 1908. We petition something which we believe you owe to us, for it is in the home that the saloon brings its greatest sorrow and misery. We petition, not in humbleness, but in the knowledge that we have morality and righteousness to uphold our request. We petition as one citizen to another citizen. We petition as honest women to men who love their homes and respect their wives and daughters. We petition for the boys of Kankakee county. Will you deny us this petition? We merely ask for that which will elevate your homes, as well as our homes. And we women, petitioning you, ourselves agree to do all in our power to influence any voter to keep the saloon away from Kankakee county." The white ribboners are bearing their part in the local option campaign, here as elsewhere. The county union held its spring institute March 22-23, with Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, president of Kentucky W. C. T. U., as leading speaker.—Union Signal.

Courier Grange Column

Wilson Grange No. 719.

Wilson Grange No. 719 met Saturday, May 10. There was a very short business session, after which the first and second degrees were conferred on candidate Benjamin Hull. After the degrees in which all variations were used, the candidate was still "Hull."

For some time the question of more adequate means of help for victims of accident and sickness etc. of our members has been discussed pro and con. At this meeting it was decided by vote to establish a separate fund for that purpose and a per capita tax on all male members was levied as a starter.

Number members present 37, no visitors. Proceedings of Pomona reported by Willard Worden.

After an excellent program meeting was dismissed by master.

Barnard Grange No. 689.

Barnard Grange No. 689 met in regular session May 6 with eight members present. Officers were not all present. Masters filled the vacancies. The finance committee reported over $17 on hand. Letters read from state grange and laid over until next meeting.

The lecturer's hour was taken up by Bro. John Oldham giving the grange some select pieces on his phonograph.

Grange closed in due form to meet again in two weeks.

THE HOGS OF POULTRYDOM.

There are the Chesler White, Berkshire, Duroc-Jersey, Poland-China, razorback and the "end seat hogs," but we never dreamed those money king, duck Barneying, waddle fanciers would call their Pekin, Aylesbury, Rouen, Call, East India, Crested, Muscovy, India Runner and Blue Swedish ducks "the hogs of poultrydom."

A drop in admiration followed a rise in feed prices, and a fall in duck profits caused a rise in indignation.

Nearly a million ducks a year in New York and Pennsylvania!

When those myriad dappers swing into the feed trough with their scoop shovels there is something doing, and, though a duckling grows to six pounds in ten weeks, at the present price of wheat, corn and meat scrap he looks smaller than a hog then.

As the Chester Whites are the most popular of hogdom, so the Pekins are the Chester Whites of duckdom. This species was brought from China in 1874 and has been much improved, especially in appetite. Think of over 800,000 green or young Pekins raised in New York and Pennsylvania in 1907 and sold for 10 to 40 cents a pound!

Forty dollars a hundred for Pekin pork! The lifted hog has licked the quadruped pig. Do you false ducks? Congratulations!

For the Pekins breed to this description:

Creamy white; long well formed head; leaden blue eyes; medium sized orange scoop shovel; longer neck in drake and stiff curled tail feathers; back long, broad, with concave sweep to upturned tail; round, full, prominent breast; short wings; body long, deep keel; thighs short; short and reddish orange shanks; toes short and connected by web; drakes eight pounds, ducks seven pounds, young stock one pound less. But these are not the only biped swine.

FEATHERS AND EGGSHELLS.

The slump in special pigeon trade is caused by the squab trust. Sorry to see the lofts done and the enthusiasm dying down. Where are those trust busters?

Since the turkey is dropping back the goose is coming to the front. Many families had goose this year for Christmas who voted the new dish the best ever. May the tribe increase!

A pen of White Rocks was shipped to Japan from Bloomsburg, Pa., in January. The express was $50. The Rocks are no fighters. Games are the war birds. But perhaps they will banquet Bob Evans.

When you receive a big order, don't get giddy. Wait till the stock is in the hands of your customer and he sends you a blarney stone letter with the "rocks" before you go and make a marble statue of yourself in the newspaper.

Some fellows are not steady enough to run a decoy duck ranch. They change breeds so often that the monthly journal readers can't keep up to their ads. They are like changeable silk, only green is the most prominent color. Presto, change!

In feeding if your hens do not run for breakfast they are overfed or sick. If they show no signs of distress, look at the dropping board. If excrement has yellow tips it is indigestion. Put a pint of venetian red to two quarts of water for this trouble.

Do you buy a rooster simply for his pretty comb and tail? You may cut off a good rooster's comb and tail and still have a good live rooster left. But if you cut off a poor rooster's comb and tail you will be the only rooster left unless you are a poultry woman.

The frosty wall poultry house has been very numerous this winter. Causes moisture from fowl breath, damp litter, accumulated droppings, ground floors, matched cement, absence of ventilators and dead air space. All can be remedied. For fowl breath use the ventilator and cloves.

The annual garden digging is often accompanied by the annual chicken house cleanup. You can imagine the ugly dreams of a flock that must sleep over a rotting mass of hen manure all summer and a thawing or frozen cesspool all winter. The picture is sickening enough without making us feel crawly by mentioning the myriad life.

L. M. Barnitz.

A Strange Custom.

The Bayanzi, who live along the upper Kongo, have a strange custom which makes life a burden to the married women. Brass rods are welded into great rings round the necks of the wives. Many of these rings worn by the women whose husbands are well to do weigh as much as thirty pounds, and this burden must be carried by the wretched creatures as long as they live.

By the Short Cut

By MATIE BARNES.

Copyrighted, 1908, by M. M. Cunningham.

Sparville was grateful to Henry Griswold. Not since the engagement of McMahon's minstrels two months before had the town had so much to talk about.

Nine years ago Hank Griswold had gone to the city in his Sunday pepper and salt suit, with cowhide boots and cloth cap to complete his costume. Now he had returned Henry Griswold, and to the splendors of well tailored clothes he added the magnificence of a fur lined coat and shoes and hat equally glossy.

Sparville was accustomed to fur coats, but with the fur outside, while Henry showed only the cloth. Patent leather shoes, too, every day in the week were regarded with awe not unmixed with envy.

Even more interesting was the evident interest Griswold displayed in Nettie Morrison. They had been sweethearts in the old school days and had kept up a correspondence, a fact disseminated by the postmaster, but it was evident that Griswold had come home with the intention of cutting out Ben Pierce, who escorted Nell home from church Sunday evenings and otherwise gave evidence of ultimate serious intentions.

Public sentiment was largely in favor of Ben. Had Sparville been so frivolously minded as to indulge in betting the odds would have been about three to one in his favor, for Henry had seemed to lose interest in skating and coasting and other winter sports in which Sparville delighted.

He visited the pond and the coasting hill, but merely as a spectator, and at such times Nell, fully conscious that the exercise brought a stronger glow to her cheeks and an added sparkle to her eyes, was most inclined to heckle him.

Griswold ascribed her treatment to a desire to display her powers of co-

"WHO CATCHES MAY KEEP," HE QUOTED

quetry, but when, near the close of the second week, he made formal proposal of marriage and was refused he stared at her in dismay.

"It's this way," explained Nell judiciously, seeing his bewilderment. "I like you, Harry, but you are so different now. When you were a boy there was no one who could beat you in a skating race, and you used to go down Beeman's hill faster than any of the others. Now you're afraid to coast."

"I'm not afraid," denied Griswold. "I don't want to; that's all. I have found other amusements."

Nell stalled and changed the subject, and Griswold went home feeling miserable. He loved Nell, and this refusal was a blow to his heart and his pride.

It was Ben who tugged Nell's sled up Beeman's hill the following afternoon and found Griswold gloomily regarding the coasters. The hill swung in a rough half circle down the steep declivity. Usually the roadway was beaten into a glare of ice by the coasters, for it was the only good coasting place in the neighborhood.

From the brow of the hill the entire road could be observed. All summer Henry Beeman had been cutting the thick growth of pines which had covered the hillside, and now only a broad expanse of glistening snow crust dotted with the pine stumps remained.

It was a pretty spectacle, and Griswold enjoyed it in spite of the evident favor with which Nell regarded Ben, who accompanied her in her dashes downhill and the walk back again, with Nell walking by his side. Nominally Nell's sled was her sister's, and Ben's was supposed to be the property of his little cousin, but those two youngsters had little use of their possessions.

The sun was dipping toward the hills on the other side of the valley and most of the coasters had gone home when Nell settled herself for her last ride. Ben had stopped to tie his shoelaces, and Nell looked over her shoulder.

"Who catches may keep," she called as the sled gathered momentum. Ben sprang to his feet and ran for his sled, throwing himself upon it and starting off at a terrific pace.

Griswold gave one glance at the flying figure far ahead. He knew that Ben's sled was not as good as Nell's and that he would not catch her until she reached the bottom of the incline.

There was just one chance for himself, and, throwing off his coat, he caught up the pointer that Jimmie Sweeney had just brought up to the top of the hill.

At the foot of the field was a place where two lengths of the fence had fallen in, and there were two or three similar breaks where he stood. It was the work of an instant to step through one of these and throw himself face downward upon the sled.

Steering with both hands and feet, Griswold shot down the steep declivity. It was several years since he had been on a sled, but it all came back to him, and with a skill that was the talk of the hill for the remainder of the season he steered his flying sled in and out between the stumps, shaving the bark here and dodging a trunk there just as a fractured skull seemed imminent.

It took but a few seconds to accomplish the journey, but to Griswold it seemed years before he shot through the opening of the fence and with a last terrific effort swung himself into the road.

Just ahead were the stout gray jacket and sawy little hat that he was pursuing, and as he shot past he caught the runner of Nell's sled.

"Who catches may keep," he quoted as he steered the two sleds into the softer snow beside the road to permit Ben to pass them.

"How did you do it?" demanded Nell wonderingly.

"Did you think it would be Ben?" he countered. The girl shook her head.

"I wanted to see if you would make an effort," she explained shyly. "All the way down I heard Ben shouting, and I was afraid that he was ahead."

"He was," explained Griswold. "I came the short way."

Nell looked at the runner marks where Griswold had come through the break in the fence and then at the stump dotted hill.

"You came straight down?" she gasped.

"It was the only way," he said quietly. "Ben already had a lead on the road, and I knew that I should have to make the short cut in order to beat him."

Nell looked him over sternly. The thin leather of his shoes was cut and torn, and here and there was a rent in his clothing where he had struck a tree. The gloves hung in shreds from the scratched hands, and his necktie waved under his left ear.

"You go back and get your coat," she commanded, "and then we'll go home and tell mother and Harry. I'm awfully glad that you win," she added as he turned away to obey the command. "I didn't think you would, but I never dreamed you would come the short way. No one has dared before."

"No one else had you at the end of the slide," he explained, with a happy laugh, as she slipped her hand in his and they started up the hill after his coat.

Breaking It Gently.

A man who had literary aspirations, but lacked the literary instinct, once wrote a story and took it to the editor of a magazine. "I want you to read it over carefully," he said. "It's intended for a satire, and, if I do say it myself, I think it's pretty clever."

The editor took the manuscript and began to read it. A page or two sufficed to show him its utter hopelessness for purposes of publication, but he hesitated to crush a budding author and proceeded to temporize.

"Why, Mr.—er—Simmons," he said, "your story has some crudities, of course, and—er"—

"It's better as you get into it," interrupted the other complacently. "It's like some of Thackeray's stories."

"Ah, yes, Mr. Simmons; you do remind me somewhat of Thackeray."

"Do I?" inquired the caller.

"Yes," rejoined the editor, handing him the manuscript. "You have a nose just like his."—Youth's Companion.

Proper Form of Asseveration.

A teacher in the Garfield school was teaching a primary class the beginnings of arithmetic.

"Now, I have one pencil in my right hand and one in my left," she said. "How many pencils have I? Helen, you may answer."

"Two," piped a small voice.

"That one and one make two, do they?"

"Sure!"

The teacher frowned at the disrespectful answer.

"That's hardly what you should have said," she said. "Will some one in the class tell Helen what her answer should have been?".

There was a moment of hesitation. Then one brown hat shot confidently into the air.

"Ah, James, you may tell Helen what she should have said!"

"Sure, Mike!" shouted Jimmy in a tone of triumph.—Kansas City Star.

Blessings of the Blind.

The calamity of the blind is immense, irreparable. But it does not take away our share of the things that count—service, friendship, humor, imagination, wisdom. It is the secret inner will that controls one's fate. We are capable of willing to be good, of loving and being loved, of thinking to the end that we may be wiser. We possess these spirit born forces equally with all God's children. Therefore we, too, see the lightnings and hear the thunders of Sinai. We, too, march through the wilderness and the solitary place that shall be glad for us, and as we pass God maketh the desert to blossom like the rose. We, too, go in into the promised land to possess the treasures of the spirit, the unseen permanence of life and nature.—Helen Keller in Century.

FOR ASPARAGUS.

Suitable Fertilizer, With Formula For Home Mixing.

There are a great many acres of asparagus raised where a complete fertilizer is used, and many of them are commercial brands bought from dealers for that express purpose. A fertilizer that will analyze 4 per cent nitrogen, 8 phosphoric acid and 10 potash is as good an all around article as can be recommended for general use, writes a grower in Rural New Yorker. A formula for this mixture for asparagus only would be nitrate of soda, 300 pounds; sulphate of ammonia, 100 pounds; tankage, 200 pounds; acid phosphate, 1,000 pounds, and muriate of potash, 400 pounds. Bone may be substituted for tankage if more desirable. The main object of either tankage or bone is to get a mixture dry enough to drill. In discussing fertilizers for this crop I do not wish to be understood as advocating a complete fertilizer.

When Applied.

In my own practice I use acid phosphate and potash, three parts of the former to one of the latter. Mix thoroughly and apply broadcast very early in the spring or late winter and work in the soil with future cultivations. The farther down near the roots this is left when feeding time begins the better. The nitrogenous part of my fertilizer—usually nitrate of soda—I apply broadcast when cutting season is over. I fully indorse the mixing of fertilizers at home for this or many other crops in preference to paying a greater price for an unknown article, and further than that the grower who knows his soil and its requirements can feed more intelligently by applying that which is deficient in larger quantity and withholding that which is not needed.

Ranches In the West.

The great 10,000 and 50,000 acre ranches all over the west are disappearing under the invasion of the farmers who are satisfied with 160 or 200 acres of land and who are making these little patches remarkably productive, says Denver Field and Farm. The time is not very remote when ranches will be unknown and when the country now monopolized by them will be broken up into moderate sized farms. The rise in the value of farming land is steady, and in a few years land which for a decade or two has had only a nominal value will command from $20 to $100 an acre. In the irrigated sections of Colorado land adapted to fruit growing is selling from $500 to $2,000 an acre. Sugar beet lands near factories bring $100 to $300. Good potato lands are worth $200 and upward, and the best cantaloupe growing lands sell readily at $300. Experts make annually a net profit of from 10 to 25 per cent on this big priced land.

DIEKEMA IS AGAIN ELECTED CHAIRMAN

New Constitution and Roosevelt's Administration Indorsed

Editorial Association Given two Members of State Committee—Platform Adopted

The Republican state convention at Grand Rapids last week was marked by harmony, all the nomination being by acclamation, except the election of state chairman. After slight discussion and the introduction of the names of George Cook and Gerritt J. Diekema, of the first district, Diekema was elected, the choice afterward being made unanimous.

Resolutions were adopted, reading in part as follows:

"We most earnestly and enthusiastically endorse the administration of that great republican leader, Theodore Roosevelt, who in the conduct of the affairs of government knows no republican, no democrat, no poor and no rich, but who has fearlessly and honestly administered governmental affairs during his administration in the interest of all the people.

"We believe the best interests of the people of this nation will be subserved by a continuation of the policies advocated and carried into effect by President Roosevelt and in view of that fact we hereby unqualifiedly indorse the candidacy of William H. Taft, of Ohio, for president of the United States, and instruct our delegates from the state of Michigan to cast an undivided vote of the whole state in favor of his nomination.

"The constitutional convention has completed and presented to the people a revised instrument. It is replete with provisions based on the state's experience, retains all that is not obsolete and that is beneficial in the revision of 1850, meets the demands of the times, conserves the people's interests for the future and should be adopted.

"Recognizing the republican press of Michigan as the most active and potent agent for the dissemination of republican doctrins and realizing the fact that the Michigan Editorial association is an highly important factor in the party machinery of the state and, believing that the request of the state association for representation on the state central committee is just and reasonable.

"Resolved, That the membership of the republican state central committee be increased by the addition of two members, said members to be nominated by the Michigan Republican Editorial association and elected by the state convention and that the two members of the committee thereby provided for shall become members of the state central committee as soon as nominated by the association."

The delegates at large are:
John W. Blodgett, Grand Rapids.
E. D. Stair, Detroit.
Frank W. Gilchrist, Alpena.
James McNaughton, Calumet.

Following are the presidential electors as chosen at large:
Fred M. Alger, Detroit.
George Clapperton, Grand Rapids

The district electors are:
First—John N. Bagley, Wayne.
Second—Frank S. Neal, Wayne.
Third—Clifford C. Ward, Hillsdale
Fourth—Solomon Stern, Marcellus.
Fifth—F. A. Washburn, Belding.
Sixth—Edgar P. Gregory, Livingston.
Seventh—Charles Dodge, Romeo.
Eighth—A. M. Bentley, Shiawassee.
Ninth—Warren E. Carter, Ludington.
Tenth—H. B. Smith, Bay.
Eleventh—Arthur J. Doherty Clare.
Twelth—James R. Thompson, Gogebic.

The Eleventh district committee members—Members of state central committee, Thomas R. Welch, Osceola, and Orville Dennis, Missaukee.

Perry F. Powers of Cadillac, and Walter J. Hunsacker, of Saginaw, were given places on the state central committee as representatives of the editorial association.

METHODIST CONFERENCE

Big Gain in Membership—Recommendations of Bishops.

Child Labor and Divorce Laws Were Scored for Their Laxness.

Bishop Goodsell, of Boston, at the opening of the quadrennial general conference of the Methodist Episcopal church read the address of the bishops. It recommended that from paragraph 248 of church discipline certain words indicated, but not quoted in the address, be stricken out. The exact words are "dancing, playing at games of chance, circuses, dancing parties or patronizing dancing schools or taking," etc.

This recommendation was followed immediately by the declaration of the bishop that grave injustice will be done if their recommendation is interpreted as an abandonment of early opposition to worldly amusements, and that it is indeed, a return to the principles and and exact words of John Wesley.

The address showed a gain in the number of communicants during the last four years of 278,357, the greatest gain during any similar period for 16 years.

The gain in value of churches was $82,149,604, the gain in parsonages is $4,528,871. The total gain in church property for the four years was $32,678,431, while the total valuation of churches and parsonages is $186,624,024.

The increase since the last general conference averaged $8,200,000 each year.

The membership in the United States is now 3,036,000 while in the whole world the number is 3,308,227 at the close of 1907.

On the subject of divorces the address said:

"The consecutive polygamy permitted by the divorce laws of some of our states is a disgrace to our country. It continues to undermine family life and to break up into helpless worring factions that which God means shall be a unit. We greatly rejoice that the conscience of the nation is being quickened on this subject and that the demand for uniform divorce laws increases."

In the section devoted to child labor the address said: "In the name of Jesus Christ we protest against the sacrifice of childhood on the altar of mammon whether it be by the sloth of parents or the greed of proprietors."

MEET ON DIAMOND

Grafters and Stiffs Play Ball Game Thursday

Large Crowd at Boyne City Sunday—Results of Other Games

Thursday afternoon the "Stiffs" and "Grafters" met on the diamond, when the time for battle arrived the "Grafters" were not on deck so the "Stiffs" let them have the whole city to pick from and then gave them a struggle. No particular brilliant plays were made, although every man tried his skill as pitcher.

The score by innings follows:

Innings	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
Grafters	1	1	2	0	3	0	0	0	0
Stiffs	0	0	1	0	1	2	1	0	0

Sunday Boyne City and Kalkaska played the opening game on the new grounds at Boyne City before about nine hundred people, Boyne City winning by a score of 7 to 0.

Monday the C. H. S. and Charlevoix team played at Charlevoix, Charlevoix winning. Score 8 to 6.

Today Charlevoix and Norwood play at Norwood. Other games are being arranged and the prospects are that we will see some fast ball before the season ends.

FLOYD CARLISLE INSTANTLY KILLED

By a Stroke of Lightning During Storm Friday Night

LEAVES PARENTS, BROTHER AND SISTER

Would Have Been Twenty-One Next November—Will be Sadly Missed

Funeral Held Sunday—Was The Largest Ever Held in Atwood—Many Floral Tributes Received.

Floyd Carlisle, son of Ed Carlisle of Atwood, was instantly killed by lightning about six o'clock, Friday afternoon, May 15.

Floyd and his father were in the basement of the barn taking care of the stock. Floyd went to the doorway and stood there looking at the storm, he had not been there but a few seconds when lightning struck the roof of the barn, going direct to where he stood. Mr. Carlisle heard him fall and running to him, found him lying on his back. He asked him if he was hurt but received no answer, the shock having killed him instantly.

Floyd would have been 21 years old next November and was one of Atwood's finest young men, everybody being his friend. He will be sadly missed. He leaves to mourn his loss besides his father and mother, one sister, Edna Archer and one brother, Albert Carlisle, of East Jordan.

The funeral was held Sunday at the Methodist church, of which he was a member, Rev. R. E. Yost officiating. It was perhaps the largest funeral ever held in Atwood, over five hundred people being present and one hundred seven teams. Many beautiful floral tributes were received.

Burial took place in the Atwood cemetery.

MERELY ROUTINE BUSINESS

At Meeting of Common Council Thursday Night

Forrest Kane Exhibits an Electrical Fire Alarm—Mayor Makes Some Appointments.

The Common Council met in regular session Thursday night, Alderman Wilbur being absent, having been excused by the Mayor.

A protest was heard from Cal Price against the opening of Lake street. It was decided not to open said street until the Township of Charlevoix gives space for a regular street, it being now only 31 feet wide.

A side walk was ordered built on the west side of May street, from south side of Hulbert to north side of Robertson street and on the east side from Robertson street to Stover avenue.

The name of Bridge street from north side of bridge to city limits was changed to Michigan aveane.

Forrest Kane appeared before the council and gave a demonstration of his electrical fire alarm. The matter was referred to committee on water and electric lights for further investigation.

The druggist bond of F. N. Chapel was accepted, Harry Widdifield and Karl Wardrop as sureties.

Alderman Wilbur was elected chairman pro tem. The Mayor made the following appointments: Members of police force, E. J. Tuttle, Robert Madill. Special assessors, John Burns, H. M. Enos.

An invitation was received from the Memorial day committee, post and corps asking the council to appear in the Memorial day parade. Invitation accepted.

THE FARM WOODLOT

Government Forester Gives Suggestions in Regard to It.

A Valuable Asset to the Farm—A Protection to Buildings and Fruit.

The woodlot is a very large factor in the production of the raw material which supports the fourth greatest industry of the country. Although the area of a single woodlot is small, the cuttings are more frequent than from the large timber tract and it is probable that the total amount of timber produced by woodlots is greater than that produced by timber tracts.

Not only this: a farm without a good woodlot is incomplete. Usually, not less than one-eighth of the acreage of every farm should be devoted exclusively to timber growing. If properly managed the woodlot will supply the farmer with posts, fuel and building material, as suits his convenience best. It may even furnish some timber for market.

Again, the farm house should be protected from winds. For the live-stock grower, shielding the barnyard and feedlots will reduce the quantity of grain necessary to fatten stock, since less food will be required to keep up the animal heat in winter. A belt of forest trees will greatly reduce the danger of late frosts to the fruit blossoms of an orchard.

The woodlot should occupy the waste land not suitable for farm crops. Steep hillsides, ravines, swamps, sand dunes, creek banks, rocky slopes, and corners cut off by ditches, creeks, or railroads will sustain a good growth of timber and become an important source of revenue. Forest growth on steep slopes and river banks protects them from erosion by heavy rains and freshets.

The woodlot affords one of the best opportunities for the practice of forestry. It is accessible enough to allow of moderate cuttings at frequent intervals; its protection from trespass, grazing, and fire does not require an elaborate scheme of defense; and taxation is not so great a burden because the revenue in farm supplies more than meets this item every year.

In Circular 138, recently issued by the Forest Service and which can be had free of the Forester at Washington, the model woodlot and the present condition of the woodlots of the Ohio Valley region are discussed. Suggestions are given as to uses of the woodlot and its protection from grazing, fire, and wind and from injury during cutting, and for the improvement of typical woodlots of dense first growths, of mature open stand, of dense young stand, and sapling thicket.

MRS. JANE MADDOCK

Death of Another Old Charlevoix Pioneer at East Jordan.

The Body Brought Here on the Steamer Hum Friday Afternoon for Burial.

Mrs. Jane Maddock, wife of Joseph Maddock, of State street, East Jordan, died at their residence May 12, after a somewhat lingering illness. She was a native of Ontario, Canada, where she was born December 25, 1833. She was married there to Wm. Alexander in 1860 and six years later came with him to Charlevoix county, where he died in 1872. They were at that time on their farm near Charlevoix and she continued to live there until her marriage to Joseph Maddock, of East Jordan, in 1876. Since then she has been a resident of that place.

She was the mother of six children by Mr. Alexander, William, Maria, Charles, Edward, Jennie and Belle, and three children by Mr. Maddock, Joseph, Roland and Homer. Her husband and children all survive her except the oldest, William, who died about three years ago.

Mrs. Maddock was for many years a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and was a worker in the W. C. T. U. The funeral was held at the residence Friday at 11:00 o'clock, her pastor, Rev. W. W. Lamport conducting the service.

Traverse City Enthusiasts Are Planning On Making Trip.

A number of automobile enthusiasts, of Traverse City, are planning a trip to Charlevoix as soon as the roads get into good condition. It is planned that all who can do so, join in the trip, the start being made in relays so as to get away from the dust, the lighter machines starting first.

It is thought that such a trip would be a very popular outing and would bring out a large number of machines. Mayor Germaine, of Traverse City, is one of the prime movers, the idea originating with him.

TWO MEN WERE FOUND DEAD

Beaver Island Fishermen at Green Island Saturday.

WERE OVERCOME BY GAS THE CAUSE

Both Were Well Known Residents of the Islands.

Raymond McDonald and Cornelius Johnson—Funeral Was Held at St. James Tuesday.

Saturday night the dead bodies of Raymond McDonald and Cornelius Johnson, two of the best known men on the Beaver Islands, were found in their boat, which was beached on Green Island, near St. Ignace.

When John Easton, a fisherman of St. Helena Island went to attend his nets shortly after 5 o'clock Saturday afternoon, he saw the craft and upon approaching it found the dead bodies of its crew. Easton notified Coroner Frank Walker, who secured a gasoline launch and went to Green Island Saturday where he found the bodies. That of McDonald was lying face downward over a fish box and Johnson was on his back in the bottom of the boat. The craft's engine had run at full speed until there was no fuel left as was evident by the blades of the propeller having been broken. Coroner Walker empaneled a jury which viewed the bodies after they had been brought to St. Ignace late Saturday night.

When the news reached Beaver Island a large party of men went to St. Ignace on the tug Margaret McCann and from them it was learned that McDonald and Johnson left the Beavers Monday to take a load of fish to Cheboygan.

Wednesday they telegraphed that they would start home from Cheboygan that night, and nothing further was known of them until their bodies were found. They had about $20 in money left upon them.

No marks of violence appeared on their bodies nor was there any indications of drowning.

Investigation showed that the gasket had blown out and the men had been overcome by gas.

Raymond McDonald was clerk of St. James township and about 33 years old and leaves a wife and seven daughters, the oldest ten years old and the youngest born since Monday. He was a member of the Maccabees, Ancient Order of Hibernins and National Protective Legion and was insured in the New York Life.

Cornelius Johnson was 23 years old, a farmer and fisherman and the only support of an aged mother his father having died last year.

The bodies were taken to St. James Sunday night, where the funeral was held Wednesday, business being generally suspended, burial taking place at the Holy Cross cemetery.

MOORE WINS AGAIN

Captures Three-Mile Event in an Exciting Race at Chicago.

Allie Moore added another title to his credit Sunday afternoon by winning the three-mile final heat of the international roller events held in Chicago, which ended Sunday. Moore lowered the three-mile record by four minutes and two-fifths seconds, his time for the distance being 7:55 2-5.

By winning the final in the three-mile event, and also winner of the two-mile, he is the real American-Canadian champion, for which he will receive the Western Skating Association championship medal

Moore holds two world's records made at the roller meet—the one mile in 2:32 and the three mile 7:55 2-5.

Rodney Peters won the Harmon challenge cup, beating Moore by one foot in a hard fighting finish. Peters jumped out four laps from the finish and set a pace that was too hot for all but Moore, who made him skate the race of his life to win.

RESOLUTIONS

On Death of E. L. Sprague by Committee of Northern Michigan Press Association.

The following resolutions on the death of E. L. Sprague have been sent out by the Northern Michigan Press Association, which met at Kalkaska May 1 and 2:

Whereas, death, not as a grim destroyer, but as an angelic visitor, bringing peace and rest to the weary and travel-worn, has gently whispered to our beloved brother fellow-worker, Elvin L. Sprague, and he sleeps the sleep that knows no earthly awakening, and

Whereas, while we fully realized that our departed brother had long since passed the scriptural three score years and ten alloted to man and was like the well-filled sheaf, fully ripened for the reaper, yet the busy brain and well-stored mind were so alert and vigorous, and the splendid mentality so undimmed and unimpaired by age, that we failed to note that the feeble casket that contained them was rapidly succumbing to the ravages of time and the unceasing activities of a busy and well spent life, and were wholly unprepared for the summons that so suddenly called our brother to come up higher. Therefore be it

Resolved, that while we bow in humble submission to the mandate which has called him from our midst, and deprived us of the wisdom of his counsels and the charm of his personality, we sincerely mourn his loss and fully realize that in his death the editorial fraternity of northern Michigan has suffered irreparably and mourns the departure of a brother tried and true, a wise and considerate friend, a writer of unquestioned ability, a pioneer publisher and business man who has helped to change the Grand Traverse region from a trackless wilderness to one of the fairest and most fruitful portions of Michigan, whose influence for good has been widely felt for half a century. And further

Resolved, that we tender to the family of our late brother and co-worker our most heartfelt sympathies in their sudden and great bereavement and in the foregoing preamble and the accompanying resolutions convey to them an expression of the love and esteem in which the departed brother, Elvin L. Sprague was held by the members of the Northern Michigan Press Association of which he was an honored and valued member, and,

Resolved, that as a further expression of our love and esteem, that we embody these resolutions in the secretary's report of the meeting of said association held May 1 and 2 at Kalkaska and in which the deceased brother was an active participant; that a copy be sent to the family of our late brother, also to the Michigan Bulletin, the Western Publisher, the American Press Association and to each of the papers of the Northern Michigan Press Association with a request that the same be published.

Signed, C. E. CITCHELL, Pres.
J. N. TINKLEPAUGH, Secy.

The sudden death of Brother Elvin L. Sprague making it seem fitting that some action be taken thereon in the name of the Association of which he was an honored and valued member, the president and secretary have taken upon themselves the responsibility of preparing the above testimonial and request that the same be published by the papers in the territory covered by the said association.

FROM BARNARD.

Alcohol has no mission for life; in medical annals it is specialty a preservative in the museums of dead subjects. The element of energy evoked in its use is paralyzing in the reaction. For this reason it has no mission for cure: it prevents the blood from taking up the oxygen, and stagnation and decay are the final outcome.

Let us begin at the beginning and note the indictment against alcohol in its use and abuse as related to alcoholic disease, technically speaking, inebricty, or hereditary disease.

To state the question from a scientific, literary, or almost any conceivable standpoint, is to prove it. No candid person can admit that there is another side. The rare "committees," "university presidents," "social settlers," who throw a halo of "ecstasy" around the indulgence in wine, beer, whiskey, illustrate in their very paucity of statement a lost or very weak cause.

"I have been a fool in writing to the contrary," says Rudyard Kipling in recanting his expressed sentiments on the liquor-drinking habit.

The armies, British and American, have been tried and tested, and alcohol found wanting as a panacea in the hardships and exposure incident to army life. From the German and Swiss standpoint the best wisdom of the highest authorities is opposed to its use. See "The Alcohol Problem," a compilation of evidence translated by Mary G. Stuckenberg.

"Tippling continues an almighty idol among us Germans," said Martin Luther. The tippler is the "moderate" drinker who will not forego his liberty for the common good. "I am never dizzy," he says, "it is fun for me to keep my balance on the edge of a precipice. Suppose one man in every nine does fall down and dash out his brains—what's that to me!"

At the risk of an effort to popularize this general subject, heredity, some definitions must be given. They are clearly stated by Dr. James Stewart, an English surgeon:

1. Inebriety is a disease, alcoholic, inherited. Drunkenness is a vice, an acquired vice.

2. The disease, inebriety, once established, may be transmitted in the form of alcoholic diathesis, epilepsy, chorea, insanity, tendency to crime.

3. The child of an inebriate is sure to inherit some nervous predisposition or effection.

4. Life-long total abstinence is the only security against it.

5. Even this does not render perfectly safe, or prevent transmission to offspring.

6. To prevent the development of the disease great care should be taken as to emotional excitement.

7. In prophylaxis of inebriety the principle to be acted upon is training, accentuate the good, attenuate the evil.

Perhaps five in one hundred inebriates are reformed permanently.

FROM HAYES CENTER.

Platt Webster bought a horse last week.

Hartwells drove a well for Loren Hamlin the past week.

Floyd F. Webster is visiting his parents in Charlevoix this week.

PECULIAR ACCIDENTS.

The "Irony of Life" Illustrated In Stories of Falls.

The "irony of life" was strikingly illustrated recently in the news of a rustic who slipped from a six barred gate and broke his neck and of an Italian aeronaut who fell 1,000 feet with his collapsed balloon with no worse result than a sprained ankle.

A Frenchwoman, Mme. Morel, and her daughter, while climbing in the Alps, near Zermatt, fell a distance of 1,200 feet, not much less than a quarter of a mile, and, although the mother was killed on the spot, her daughter escaped with a few bruises. Mr. Whymper, the famous mountaineer, had a similarly miraculous deliverance from what seemed to be certain death when scaling the Matterhorn. Losing his footing, he fell from rock to rock to the bottom of a precipitous gully, 100 yards in depth, only to recover his feet with no worse damage than a badly cut head. And M. Parville, a French writer, tells the story of an East Indian flying in the island of Oghin who fell over a precipice 1,000 feet deep with no more serious consequence than a good shaking, his fall being broken by the dense vegetation which grew at the foot of the cliff.

While climbing a waterworks tower 240 feet high in Chicago a steeplejack dislodged a loose stone and was precipitated to the ground from a height of 175 feet, fortunately striking telegraph wires forty feet above the street and thus breaking his fall. The spectators gasped with horror as they saw the man drop swiftly to destruction. A rush was made to pick up his shattered remains only to discover that he was practically unharmed. Not a bone was broken, and a week later he was walking about as if nothing had happened.

More remarkable and indeed almost incredible was the experience of Charles Woolcot when he was making a parachute descent in Venezuela. At a height of 3,000 feet Woolcot flung himself off his balloon into space, when, to the horror of the thousands of onlookers, the parachute failed to open. The man dropped like a stone with terrible speed until, when about 200 feet from the earth, the parachute flew open and at once collapsed. He was dashed to the ground, his right thigh and hip were broken, both ankles and knees were badly crushed, and his spinal column was dislocated, and yet, after a year spent in hospital, Woolcot was restored to soundness of limb after surely the most terrible adventure of which any man has lived to tell the story.

But it is to the history of ballooning that one encounters the most remarkable cases of sensational drops from the clouds. When Mr. Wise, a famous aeronaut of the early nineteenth century, was once making an ascent his balloon exploded at an altitude of 13,000 feet and began to drop swiftly to the earth, more than a couple of miles below. "The descent at first was rapid," Mr. Wise writes, "and accompanied by a fearful moaning noise caused by air rushing through the network and the gas escaping from above. In another moment I felt a slight shock, and, looking up to see what caused it, I discovered that the balloon was canting over, being nicely doubled in, the lower half into the upper."

The balloon had, in fact, formed itself into a parachute and, oscillating wildly, continued its descent until it struck the earth violently, throwing the aeronaut ten yards out of the car. "The car had turned bottom upward, and there I stood," says Mr. Wise, "congratulating myself and the perspiration rolling down my forehead in profusion."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Just Satisfied Herself.

People of all sorts weigh themselves on the penny in the slot machines found widely distributed in public places, but never before had this man, anyway, seen anybody weigh on one of them anything but himself or herself as this weigher, a woman, did in a subway station.

She came in carrying in one hand a muff and in the other a box of polished oak that was narrow and proportionately high and maybe a foot in length. That the box was heavy was shown by the fact that the leather handle had been stretched somewhat by its weight.

And apparently the present carrier had found it heavy and was curious about its weight, for now she set the box on the platform of one of those weighing machines and dropped a penny in the slot. It weighed ten pounds, certainly a heavy box to carry. That was all she wanted to know—didn't weigh herself. She just picked the box up again, this time with a smile, and went aboard the train.—New York Sun.

Hunting the Ram.

Eton college had an ancient celebration which was gradually discontinued. The college had a time honored right to demand that its butcher should provide a healthy ram on election Sunday, in August, to be hunted by the pupils. On one occasion the ram actually jumped into the Thames and swam across, then galloped into Windsor market place before it was caught, to be killed and eaten at the feast. More through pity for the boys than the ram, the hunt was discontinued, and instead the poor beast was crippled to keep him still while the speech was being delivered, after which the boys were free to whack the ram's head with cudgels till it was dead or they were tired.—New York Tribune.

Until about 1850 writing was taught in the schools of the United States from copies that were written by the teacher, who also made from goose quills the pens which the pupils used. A penknife with a keen blade was an essential part of the teacher's equipment.

CHAPTER V.

"DALLAS!" cried Bennett, oblivious of his surroundings—of everything except that the girl he had so long missed and who had inspired him to all he had achieved—that she was standing before him.

It was Dallas herself who brought him to a sense of the other's presence, for as he sprang forward to meet her and eagerly grasped both her outstretched hands the girl bowed in mock reverence and answered his ardent greeting with a demure:

"Good afternoon, your honor!"

"Don't!" he begged half in jest. "It's so good to see you again that I"—

"I sent word that I had a surprise for you, Alwyn," interrupted his mother. "I knew it would please you. But," with a glance at the alderman, "you're busy? Perhaps we"—

"Not at all, mother. May I present Alderman Phelan? Miss Wainwright, this is"—

"Alderman Phelan of the Eighth," amended the politician, thoroughly ill at ease in the presence of the visitors. "I must be goin' now, your honor, I"—

But Dallas had come forward with a smile that melted the speaker's embarrassment in an instant.

"The Alderman Phelan who gives turkeys to all those poor people at Christmas?" she asked in genuine interest. "I've often read about"—

"The same, ma'am, at your service," asserted the delighted Phelan. "I fill 'em with turkey an' coal in winter an' I take their wives an' kids on outings in summer. Ever been to one of the James Q. Phelan outings, miss?"

"No," replied Dallas, with a perfectly grave face. "I'm sorry to say I haven't. Tell me about them, won't you?"

"They've got to be seen to be understood. A thousand poor tired wives an' white faced, spindly kids turned out into the country for the only glimpse of green grass an' shady trees they ever get all year. A thousand mothers an' children out in a cool grove with nothing to do but roll around the soft grass an' play an' eat all the fancy grub they can hold. Maybe, miss, it wouldn't mean a lot to you, but if you'd been workin' an' livin' 'an' sleepin' an' starvin' for twelve months in a stuffy, dark, smelly back tenement room, tollin' like a slave to keep food an' clothes between the kids an' starvation, an' was barely able to keep body an' soul together—well, maybe then you'd understand what them outings an' turkey feats an' loads of coal means to the poor. And they won't turn down Jimmy Phelan at Horrigan's orders."

"I had a surprise for you, Alwyn," interrupted his mother.

"I do understand," cried Dallas, her big eyes bright with tears. "I understand, and, in behalf of all women and children, I thank you with my whole heart!"

"You're all right, miss," muttered the delighted, embarrassed Phelan, at once at a loss for words. "You're—you're all right! I'll leave it to his honor if"—

"Indeed she is!" broke in a suave voice at whose sound the little spell of sentiment was broken and which caused Phelan and Bennett to turn in annoyance toward the door.

Scott Gibbs, bland, well groomed, quite ignoring the other men's lack of welcome, stood bowing on the threshold.

"Oh, I forgot to tell you, Alwyn," whispered Mrs. Bennett in a hurried aside to her son as the latter summoned up sufficient civility to greet the newcomer. "I forgot to tell you. Mr. Gibbs was calling on Dallas when I stopped for her, and he asked leave to come along. I'm sorry, but"—

"How are you, Bennett?" Gibbs was saying. "And—Mr. Phelan, too, isn't it? Alderman, I'm glad to see you again. You remember me? Scott Gibbs? I met"—

"Yes," said Phelan, "I remember you, all right. You was up to Wainwright's last summer—that day me an' Horrigan sent the dove of peace screechin' up a tree. I didn't know you visited the city hall too."

"I don't, as a rule," answered Gibbs. "I came here with Mrs. Bennett and Miss Wainwright. I wanted a glimpse of the man who can make one pen stroke that will send Borough Street railway stock up to 100 or down to 10."

"Do you mean," broke in Dallas, "that Mr. Bennett can really have such an effect on the stock market?"

"That and more," Gibbs assured her. "Why, the mere rumor that he meant to veto the Borough's franchise bill has sent the stock tumbling eight points since the market opened today."

"What power for one man!" exclaimed the girl, turning to Bennett in surprise. "And are you going to veto it?"

"Office secrets," reproved Alwyn jestingly. "Hands off!"

"Veto it?" echoed Gibbs, with a laugh. "Of course he isn't. It would be too hard upon his friends—unfair and unkind, to say the least."

"But why?" queried Dallas, forestalling Alwyn, who was about to speak.

"Because," cut in Gibbs before Bennett could interfere, "the men who are backing the Borough bill are the men who made him mayor. It wouldn't be square for him to turn his new power against the very men who gave him that power. Now, would it?"

"By the men who are backing the bill' whom do you mean?" asked Bennett.

"Oh, I just spoke in generalities. As a matter of fact, the break in the price today was lucky for those who wanted to buy."

"An' your firm's doin' most of the buyin', I'm told," interpolated Phelan.

"We have a great deal of the stock, I admit," said Gibbs; "so you see, Bennett, you can make me or break me. I place myself in your hands."

"I see you are taking a most unfair advantage of me, Mr. Gibbs," retorted Alwyn; with some heat. "You have no right to thrust this information on me and to appeal"—

"But I was only"—

"You were trying to influence my action toward the Borough bill. You cannot do it."

"Why, I didn't think you'd be angry at"—

"I'm not. Let's drop the subject, please."

"I only answered Miss Wainwright's questions. I"—

"We'll leave Miss Wainwright's name out of the matter, please," replied Bennett.

"Certainly, if you like," assented Gibbs, with a shrug of his broad shoulders. "I am afraid my time is up. Good day, Bennett. I'm sorry you misconstrued"—

"I didn't. Good day."

"I'll be on my way, too," announced Phelan, breaking the awkward pause that followed Gibbs' exit. "Ladies, I'm proud to have met you. If either of you knows a poor woman needin' a turkey or a family wantin' an outing, just drop me a line, an' I'll see they get it. An' they needn't come from my ward neither."

"That's bad politics, alderman!" laughed Bennett.

"It's good humanity, though. There's two things I love to do—first, to down the man who's me enemy, an', second, to give good times to folks who's strangers to fun. Goodby, your honor. I'll be in ag'in now I've found my way, ladies."

"Alwyn," said Mrs. Bennett as the aldermen bowed himself out with many flourishes, "I went to see Cynthia. Can I go into her office now, or is she too busy? I'll be back in a few minutes, Belles, and bring her with me. I know how anxious she is to see you again."

"I wonder what Phelan would think of that for 'raw' work," thought Alwyn as the old lady bustled into the inner room, leaving Dallas and himself alone. Perhaps Dallas, too, understood, for her manner was less assured than usual as her eyes met his.

"It is so good—so good to see you again!" he said. "It seems years instead of months since you went away."

"But how splendidly you've filled the time! And what a magnificent fight you made! I was so proud of you, Alwyn!"

"Really? I remember you once said I was a mere idler—a rich man's son—and that you weren't at all proud of me."

"That is past. We must forget it. You are awake now."

"Forget it? Not for worlds. I owe all my success to you, Dallas. It was your face that strengthened me when there seemed no hope. It was the memory of your words that kept me brave and made me resolve to win against all odds. You were my inspiration, the light in my darkness. At each step I thought 'Dallas would be glad' or 'Dallas would not approve of this.' And I steered my course accordingly to victory."

"No, no!" murmured the girl. "It was your own courage, your strength"—

"Not mine. It was your faith in me. Do you know, I think no man ever accomplishes anything by himself. There is always a woman, I think, behind every great achievement. The world at large does not see her—does not know of her existence—but she's in the heart of the man who is making the fight. He battles in her name as did the knights of old, and the triumph is hers, not his. Whether his reward is the crown of love or the crown of thorns, she is the inspiration."

"Then if I had a share in your success I am very happy, Alwyn, for your name is in every mouth. You are the man of the hour, even as you were in the olden days on the football field. Oh, I am proud of you—very, very proud! There is a glorious future before you."

"That all rests in your dear hands," cried Alwyn.

"Future or present, Dallas, it's all the same. If only you"—

"Say, Bennett," roared a deep voice as the door from the outer office was hanged open and Horrigan, red faced and angry, burst in, "I understand that you've— Oh, I didn't know you had a lady calling on you," he broke off.

"Don't keep me waiting long," said Horrigan.

"Well, I have," retorted Bennett, furious at the untimely intrusion. "Inspiju should have told you that at the door."

"I don't stop to bear what folks tell me at doors. I'll wait outside till you're alone."

"Don't trouble to wait. Goodby."

"You can bet I'll trouble to wait," snarled Horrigan. "There's something you and I have got to settle today. Understand? I'll be outside. Don't keep me waiting long!"

CHAPTER VI.

"WHAT a strange man!" exclaimed Dallas Wainwright in wonder, as the anteroom door slammed behind the boss. "And what utterly abominable manners! Who is he, Alwyn?"

"Horrigan."

"Richard Horrigan, the"—

"The boss. Yes. He has a pleasing way of stamping into this office unasked, as if he owned it and as if I were his clerk. But today's behavior was the worst yet. It's got to stop!"

"But don't do or say anything reckless, Alwyn. Promise me. Remember how strong he is!"

"There's no danger of his letting me forget his power," said Bennett, with a bitter smile. "He"—

"But you'll be careful, won't you? Please do, for my sake. And you mustn't keep him waiting. If there's a way out through Cynthia's office we'll go by that. Goodby. I'll explain to your mother. No; you must let us go now. Office business must come first. Won't you call this evening? I'll be home and alone."

Despite Bennett's remonstrances she was firm, and it was in no pleasant frame of mind that the mayor threw himself into a seat when he was left alone in the room. That the talk with Dallas, which had promised so much for him, should be thus rudely interrupted. That— Horrigan flung open the door and stamped in. The boss' anger had by no means subsided in the few moments of delay, but had, rather, grown until it vibrated in his every word and gesture. He wasted no time in formalities, but came to the point with all the tender grace and tact of a pile driver.

"Look here, Bennett," he rumbled, menace underlying tone and look, "I'm told Phelan's been here this afternoon. What did he want?"

"To see me," answered Bennett calmly, the effort at self control visible only in the whitening of the knuckles that gripped the desk edge.

"What did he want to see you about?"

"A business matter."

"What business matter?"

"Mine."

"Yours, eh?" sneered Horrigan. "Well, young man, I want you to understand here and now that no one can be chummy with Jim Phelan and

A Prescription for Constipation.

Eminent medical authorities agree that ninety per cent of their patients suffer from ailments due to clogged bowel (Constipation.)

The bowels become clogged with impurities and body poisons, causing biliousness, colds, stomach trouble, headache, rheumatism, deranged liver and kidneys, etc.

A Tonic Laxative is prescribed in nearly every case. Those who need a laxative may use this prescription with the assurance that no harmful results will follow its use. It has been given to the Public in tablet form and is known as Iron-ox (Laxative Iron-ox Tablets) and are put up in aluminum pocket cases.

The formula is wrapped around the case. The action of each ingredient is explained, that you may understand why Laxative Iron-ox Tablets are the safest Laxative to use; they strengthen the bowels, aid digestion, and keep the liver and kidneys healthy and active. We have secured the selling agency for Laxative Iron-ox Tablets and recommend them to our Customers. F. N. Chapel & Co.

Marlin
THE snow and rain, rushes and sand inseparable from duck and goose shooting never bother the hunter who is using a Marlin Model 19 12 gauge repeating shotgun, the best all-around gun in the market.
The ejection is from the side (an exclusive Marlin feature) and the closed breech bolt covers the action keeping out all foreign matter which so often clogs repeating shotguns.
The Marlin automatic safety prevents the accidental opening of the action when firing, and holds the breech shut until after explosion in cases of hang-fire; the solid top of frame is always a protection between your head and the cartridge.
The man who loves a gun needs the 1907 Marlin Book. It is full of gun information, has the answer to every gun question, contains 196 pages of live matter. FREE for 3 stamps postage.

AMONG those called to the Washington conference relative to the conservation of our national resources is James J. Hill, the railroad president. Mr. Hill has given a great deal of attention to this subject and there is no one better qualified to either inform or advise the distinguished gathering at the White House.

One of the most informing articles which has recently appeared is "The Future of American Agriculture," an address issued a short time ago by Mr. Hill. It deals with the wasteful and unscientific methods of the American farmer. He regards them as a serious menace to the future prosperity of the country, and he sets forth his views with a force and logic which command agreement. The maintenance of soil fertility, he maintains, is the rightful heritage of posterity, and every generation should hand it down in as good a condition as it is received. "All the life that exists upon this planet," he says, "all the development of man from his lowest to his highest qualities, rest as firmly and as unreservedly upon the capacities of the soil as do his feet upon the ground beneath him." All industry, whatever its nature, must stop when the products of the soil are not forthcoming to furnish money for the pay rolls. The soil "is the one unfailing national resource, the sole asset that does not perish, because it contains within itself, if not abused, the possibility of infinite renewal." The fertility of the soil, however, may be rapidly deteriorated under slip shod and selfish methods.

The figures which Hill quotes to show the inadequacy of our present rate of production in the face of a fast increasing population are startling. At the present rate of growth the country will twenty years hence number 130,000,000. In less than twenty years our wheat crop under present conditions will not suffice for home consumption and seed, if not a single bushel is exported.

From these premises Mr. Hill argues that the national and state governments should unite to do all in their power to promote more scientific and productive agricultural methods. The subject is of vast importance to future generations if not to the present and action along the lines he suggests seems to be needed.—Grand Rapids Press.

CHARLEVOIX now has a base ball team organized and from the tryouts it has had, the boys are capable of playing fast ball if given the encouragement of our citizens.

No other recreation is equal to base ball or so holds the affection of the American people. It is clean, healthy and the most splendid kind of exercise, besides with a good team to uphold the honor of our city, we cause everybody to work together not only for the team, but for the city generally.

Bnyne City has already demonstrated how a ball game will bring people to town who will leave money there, let us do the same. Don't forget that one dollar invested toward the support of a good team means ten brought into town. Let us all become ball fiends.

THE contest for the Congressional nomination in this district has now narrowed down to Covell and Dodds, and while the Dodds men are still keeping their claim burning busy, Covells chances are improving every day. Last week, King of Alma, one of the delegates to the National Convention, declared for him which means a great gain in the southern part of the district.

Now if the northern counties will show proper loyalty, to their candidate the fight is won. Everybody get out to the primary.

SWIRLS AND SPOTS.

Their Effect on the Market Value of the Packers' Hog.

By H. E. SINGLETON before Texas Swine Breeders' association.

In referring the subject of the effects of swirls and spots on the market values of the packers' hog to a couple of our most extensive feeders they without hesitation said give us the growthy, mellow, easy feeder. I care not whether he be black, white, red or spotted. Neither do I care if he has a swirl extending from ears to tail and on each side. He is good enough for me, and I will make money out of him. But with you breeders it is different. You must have the proper marking for your breed. The coat must be fine, smooth and silky, according to your standard, or you cannot produce your show animals.

We hesitated and meditated. Is this the mission of the breeders here on earth—to produce show animals? The more we considered the more we became convinced our feeder friend was, in part at least, correct—that is, in so far as producing show animals is concerned, for the breeder should be able to produce animals good enough at our great fairs and stock shows to make their presence felt. While doing this he is producing a type of hog that will go into our markets and command the very top price. This is a fact that we should not lose sight of—that the best show type is the best selling type.

The breeders' ideal is the feeders' money maker and the hog sought by the curers.

Uniformity In a Load of Hogs.

But coming back to the subject of spots and swirls. What effect on the market value of a load of hogs would spots have? None whatever, if it were a load of spotted hogs and they were all uniformly spotted. But if a load of solid color hogs had a mixture of spotted ones among them it would to a certain extent detract from their selling value. Only a critical buyer would admit this, but nevertheless it is a fact. This applies to all live stock uniform in size, type and color and has an effect that no buyer can resist nor any one misunderstand.

What Is a Swirl?

What is a swirl? The swirl is an accompaniment of a wiry coat, which is an outward indication of a coarse texture of flesh. Fine, soft, silky hair to be found with a clean, flinty bone is an indication of a close, fine grained texture of flesh, and this again is the animal that dresses out the best, that is in demand by the packers and that commands the best price in the markets.

Plenty Makes Us Poor.

The civilized stage turns every vice which barbarism practices in a simple way into a complex, ambiguous, equivocal and hypocritical form. It moves in a vicious circle in the contradictions which it eternally reproduces without being able to remove them, so that it ever accomplishes the very reverse of that which it really does or pretends to aim at—for instance, that in civilization poverty is born of plenty.—Fourier.

The Humming Bird.

The humming bird in Australia, no less than man, protects its habitation with a lightning rod. The lightning bird before a devastating thunderstorm bursts prudently covers the outside of its little nest with cobweb. Silk is a nonconductor of electricity, and since cobweb is silk the humming bird's nest is thereby rendered lightning proof.—Exchange.

PROTECTING THE EARS.

How to Clean Them and Avoid Many Painful Ailments.

Ear troubles are frequent in cold weather. They develop largely through the action of cold upon wax in the auditory canal, and the proper cure of this becomes a matter of importance. To remove too much of the wax means to run danger of injuring the hearing. To let too much remain is neither cleanly nor wise, says the Washington Star. The safe manner of cleaning should be understood by every person, for the ear is one of the most delicate organs we have, and the risk of doing permanent damage is ever present.

According to one of the best known aurists in New York, the safest method of daily cleaning is to put a bit of old thin linen, such as a handkerchief, over the tip of the little finger and insert this into the orifice. The cloth should not go deeper than the finger tips can reach. In this way there will be no chance of hurting the hearing.

While this is undoubtedly a safe, scientific way, the average woman will find a hairpin more to her liking. Under no circumstances should a stick or other pointed implement be used, but the loop at the end of a hairpin prevents its doing harm unless it is thrust in so hard as to cause pain. One is not likely to do this.

To wash the interior wet a bit of linen and rub on some soap; then wrap this with one thickness only about the pin loop and put it gently into the ear. The cloth may be turned slowly and then at once removed and a fresh part taken to repeat the operation. Rinse by wetting the cloth another time in warm water.

Cold water should never be used in cleaning the ears. It will tend to harden the wax, and once this happens deafness, though only temporary, will usually ensue.

Warm glycerin is the greatest aid when there is trouble caused by accumulated hard wax. In using this put a few drops into the ear at night and rest the head so that the lotion will not run out. In the morning a careful cleaning with hot water may be sufficient to remove the obstruction, but if it is not one should go immediately to a physician to have the canal cleaned.

Violent blowing of the nose is a source of danger to the ears and not infrequently causes temporary deafness by closing the auditory canal. On the other hand, sometimes the ears may be cleared when temporarily stopped by holding the nostrils closed with the fingers and then making an effort to blow. The air, making its escape, finds no outlet through the nose and so rushes to the ears, thus often clearing the passage.

If one effort in this direction, however, accomplishes nothing, it should not be tried again, for the risk of doing harm to the eardrum becomes great.

How to Pack China and Glass.

Glass and china should be packed in barrels. Pictures and mirrors should be boxed. Each piece of glass and china must be wrapped separately in paper; then a layer of excelsior should be placed in the bottom of the barrel. Lay in each article, packing the excelsior into every crack and crevice between, then more china and excelsior until the barrel is almost full. Excelsior is pressed in at the top when the lid is secured. Properly packed the dishes will be so firm they cannot move. For the pictures it will be necessary to get a carpenter to make a rough case. This done, a layer of excelsior should cover the bottom before the first picture is laid in. Each frame may be wrapped in any thick, old, soft material, such as curtains, portieres, comfortables, etc. If these are not forthcoming, then plenty of paper will be a substitute. Place layers of excelsior between the pictures and to fill up any spaces. Place excelsior on the top and when the box appears to be quite full nail on the cover. Mirrors are packed in the same way.

How to Cook Flounders.

Flounders are good fried in the ordinary way in crumbs or in flour and especially nice if melted butter seasoned with lemon juice and chopped parsley is passed with them. But here is quite a new way of cooking them, says Harper's Bazar: Wash the flounder and wipe it dry. Lay it in a roasting pan on top of two tablespoonfuls of minced onion, and sprinkle it with salt and pepper and a tablespoonful of chopped parsley. Put it into a very hot oven and baste with half a cup of boiling water mixed with a tablespoonful of melted butter. When brown, put the fish on a hot platter and put a teaspoonful of flour and a small half cup of hot water into the pan, and stir and scrape over the fire till there is a nice brown gravy, adding a little kitchen bouquet to darken and season it. Strain and pour this over the fish and serve at once.

How to Clean Woolen With Potato.

Dresses, carpets and rugs and all sorts of woolen fabrics may be cleaned with potato water without injury to their color. Put a pint of water in a basin and into it grate two raw potatoes. Then strain this through a sieve, allowing the liquid to run into another bowl containing another pint of cold water. Let this settle, then pour off the clear part into a bottle for future use. Dip a sponge into the potato water; with it rub the soiled garment carefully and then wash it with clear water.

How to Mend Worn Shoe Linings.

Take a piece of velvet skirt binding just long enough to fit inside the heel section, cover the wrong side with a strong glue and paste it smoothly inside the heel, covering the worn place. This keeps a shoe from slipping up and down and saves the stockings from wearing out.

Had Showed Him the Right 'Way.

The colored boy was up in the children's court for the fifth time on charges of chicken stealing. This time the magistrate decided to appeal to the boy's father.

"Now, see here, Abe," said he to the old darky, "this boy of yours has been up in court so many times for stealing chickens that I'm sick of seeing him here."

"Ah don' blame you, sah," returned the father. "Ah's sick ob seein' 'im hyah too."

"Then why don't you teach him how to act? Show him the right way, and he won't be coming here."

"Ah has showed 'im de right way, sah," declared the old man earnestly. "Ah has smtenly showed 'im de right way, but he somehow keep gittin' caught comin' 'way wid dose chickens."—Woman's Home Companion.

Transvaal Terminations.

In perusing the names of South African towns in the daily newspapers many must have noted the word "fontein," which appears so often. This word is the English fountain, and towns with this termination have been named after Dutch farms, which are always built beside fountains of spring water. Thus Bloemfontein means "flowery fountain;" Modderfontein, "muddy fountain;" Klenfontein, "small fountain," and Elandsfontein, "deer fountain." Another town termination which English readers must have noticed is that of "laagte," which is pronounced "laughty." It means "shelter for animals," and hence when we talk of the battle of Elandslaagte we may know that it was fought on a spot frequented by deer.—London Globe.

Sugar Beets For Horses.

R. W. Clark of the Utah station states that sixteen to twenty pounds of well fermented solid sugar beet pulp was fed to horses experimentally for six or eight weeks, and no irregularity in the health of the animals was noted which could be attributed to the pulp.

How to Get Rid of Ants.

Ants may be got rid of by covering a plate with lard and leaving it overnight where they abound. By morning the plate will be entirely covered, and it is easy to kill the ants by immersing in hot water.

Face cloths and sponges are often responsible for bad complexions. They are not in themselves harmful, but they are seldom kept perfectly clean. A face cloth should be used only once or twice and should then be carefully washed and thoroughly boiled before it is used again. A soiled wash cloth causes many cases of blackheads and pimples.

FROM MARION.

James Whitley and wife, of Boyne City, visited at William Dougherty's and Frank Smith's last week.

Ella Meggison visited at James Meggison's Saturday and Sunday.

Iris Dodd entertained a number of her friends at her home Saturday evening.

A very pleasant time is reported at the party at Frank Smith's Thursday evening.

Rev. G. A. Weaver of Petoskey, preached at the town hall last Tuesday evening. After the service the following Sunday school officers were elected: Superintendent, Mrs. George Meggison; secretary, Walter Black; treasurer, Mrs. William Withers; librarian, Mrs. James Meggison; organist, Mrs. Emma Rogers; janitor, Nat Burns. The hour for Sunday school was changed from 2 p. m. to 10:30 a. m.

The Amoeba.

The amoeba (Greek "change"), the supposed pioneer in the line of living forms, is a naked mass of living matter, or protoplasm, flowing out in all directions in "blunt processes," and the endlessly varying form has earned for the simple animal the popular name of "amoeba" (Proteus animalcilae). They are all minute, but some are distinctly visible to the unaided eye. The jelly-like creature flows along the surface of stone or plant by the slow protrusion of its ever changing processes and in this way gets around its food. It is all stomach, any part of it taking hold of and digesting the food that happens to come in contact with it. On attaining its maximum size the amoeba draws itself out and breaks into two daughter amoebas, each of which contains half of the mother nucleus. This simple organism seems to exhibit in small compass the usual animal functions. It feeds, secretes, grows and reproduces itself.

An Oversight.

A doctor was called in haste to an old lady who was suddenly taken very ill. When he arrived he asked her several questions as to how she felt before he ordered her medicine of any kind. Among other things, he asked her how she felt when seized with her complaint.

"I had a terrible shivering," said the lady.

"Did your teeth all clatter when the chill came on you?"

"I do not know, I'm sure, doctor," she replied; "they were lying on the table at the time, and I didn't notice."

Kidney Trouble Makes You Miserable

Almost everybody who reads the newspapers is sure to know of the wonderful cures made by Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It is the great medical triumph of the nineteenth century; discovered after years of scientific research by Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, and is wonderfully successful in promptly curing lame back, kidney, bladder, uric acid troubles and Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is not recommended for everything but if you have kidney, liver or bladder trouble it will be found just the remedy you need. It has been tested in so many ways, in hospital work, in private practice, among the helpless too poor to purchase relief and has proved so successful in every case that a special arrangement has been made by which all readers of this paper who have not already tried it, may have a sample bottle sent free by mail, also a book telling more about Swamp-Root and how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. The regular fifty cent and dollar sizes are sold by all good druggists.

Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

LEGAL NOTICES

Mortgage Foreclosure.

Whereas, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage dated the tenth day of April, 1903, executed by Adolph Kirchner and Mary A. Kirchner, his wife to Citizens' State Bank of Whitewater, Wisconsin, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Charlevoix, Michigan, in liber thirty-seven of Mortgages on pages forty and forty-one, on the 27th day of April, 1903 at nine o'clock in the forenoon. And whereas, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of one thousand four hundred thirteen and sixty-five one-hundredths (1,413.65) dollars, the principal, interest, taxes and insurance, and the further sum of fifty dollars as an attorney fee, stipulated for in said mortgage, and which is the whole amount claimed to be due on said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted either in law or equity, to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is thereby given, that by virtue of the said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the east front door of the court house in said county of Charlevoix, on the twenty-third day of July next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon on that day; which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to-wit: The south half (s½) of the north-east quarter (ne¼) of section eighteen (18) town thirty-two (32) north, of range six (6) west; and the north-west quarter (nw¼) of the south-east quarter (se¼) of section eighteen (18) town thirty-two (32) north, of range six (6) west.

Grand Treasurer Fred Culter, Jr., of the grand lodge of Odd Fellows received a check from California for $1,200 or 25 per cent of the amount contributed last year to the earthquake sufferers in the order. The money was not all used and will be returned to the lodges throughout the state which donated it.

The Grand Rapids Press recently contained a photograph of the largest maple tree everemt in Wexford county. It was six feet two inches in diameter, and it made six 16-foot logs. Otto Larson cut down the tree near Hoxieville recently. The Wexford county lumber camps have contained many large maple trees, but this one appears to have been the largest yet reported.

W. F. Raven, of Brooklyn, Mich., is abroad in the state organizing associations for the improvement of live stock. He is working under the state board of agriculture and is paid through an appropriation of the legislature for that purpose. The efforts of the board of Agriculture and the Michigan Agricultural College are for the improvement of horses, cattle, sheep and swine. The State Live Stock Breeders' Association is also lending much valuable assistance in this work.

"With the opening of navigation arrangements will be made by prominent members of the Knights of Pythias to make necessary repairs to the old school house at Eagle Habor. It was in this building that Justus H. Rathbone the founder of this order, taught school and the idea on which the fraternity was based was formulated in his mind while he was at Eagle Harbor. Samuel G. Carlton, grand chancellor of the order, will make a visit to the school house and arrange for whatever repairs will be made this year. He will be accompanied by Ira E. Randall, of Houghton, who was instrumental in starting an association which had for its object the care and preservation of this historic old building. The association passed out of existence last year when the grand lodge of the order appropriated $200 for immediate repairs and while this amount will not be sufficient to cover the entire expense of placing the building in good condition, it will be sufficient to resist the process of destruction and disintegration.

Manton had a scare May 11. At 9:30 the dam on Lake Billings broke letting a flood of water down Cedar Creek which it was feared at the moment would do considerable damage to several homes and some manufacturing institutions. As it was, only one concern was damaged. The lake was but an acre and a half in extent and no more than fifteen feet deep in the deepest part. That volume of water was not so extensive but that Cedar Creek was able to take most of it. McAfee's stave mill was badly flooded and the flats about it were covered. The electric light plant was in some danger for a few minutes, but was not damaged. The ruin caused about the mill will exceed $2,000.

Frank Inman was fishing on the dam and left it but a moment before the break came, to which fact he probably owes his life. The dam was built of cement and it was not known that there were any breaks in it, and how it happened to break just now is a puzzle to everybody. The dam cost several hundred dollars and was built merely to give the city a play spot. A small park was fixed up around the little lake and did much towards making that part of Manton attractive. Just what will be done towards replacing the dam is yet unknown.

The price which two Buckley saloon men paid for a place to erect a saloon building was $3,000.

Buckley is located in Wexford county, one half mile south of the Grand Traverse county line. Wexford, Buckley's strongest competitor, being located on the county line, one-half mile west of Buckley. Since May 1, Buckley has been dry, very dry, while Wexford has had two saloons running.

The land which the two Buckley men bought is an 80-acre farm, worth about $3,000, and which runs for half a mile along the south county line of Grand Traverse county. By building a saloon on the corner of this farm, which is one-half mile north of Buckley, the business men of that place plan to stop a large German farmer class going to Wexford. G. R. Brigham, the founder of Buckley, furnished the capital for the deal and Homrich & Beaugnot will be the proprietors of the new saloon.

President—Guy W. Rouse, Grand Rapids.

Vice President—Fred J. Fox, Saginaw.

Second Vice President—Hadley V. Taylor, Detroit.

Secretary and Treasurer—Herbert U. Biggar, Grand Rapids.

Executive Committee—M. D. Elgin, Grand Rapids, chairman. The others are George Hume, Muskegon; George S. Danser, Petoskey; A. F. Gregory, Grand Rapids, and James R. Tunner, Bay City.

The purpose of the organization is to accomplish work along educational lines and to better the moral conditions of the trade.

By a special act of the legislature Gaylord is permitted to exact a license fee of $500 for the saloons, in addition to the state license. This year the saloons refuse, upon advice of counsel, to pay it on the ground that the ordinance is void because it imposes a penalty not provided for in the act itself. A legal fight will now be the next thing and meanwhile a very strong sentiment against the saloon keepers is growing in Gaylord.

A bold dash for liberty was made last Thursday by George Reed, Steve Miller and Patrick O'Neil who are awaiting trial in the Otsego county jail. The trio had been busy several days digging a hole through the stone wall and Thursday night got it completed. Sheriff Cook left them about 9:00 o'clock apparently in good shape. They completed the job about 3:00 a. m. and decamped. The alarm was given by another prisoner who had been silenced under the threats of murder.

Antrim county blood hounds were put on their trail and the trio rounded up in a lumber camp fifteen miles from town. The desperadoes say they intended to murder Sheriff Cook had he discovered their work.

A QUEER VISION.

But It Was Only a Dream, and Dreams "Go by Contraries."

Methought I had a wonderful vision. Throughout the beautiful land there was a dreadful plague. The mills and factories were stopped, banking conditions were strained, and men were thrown out of work.

And as I looked I saw gathered about the public treasury hundreds of thousands of men from all walks of life, capitalists and laborers alike, holding up their hands in supplication to the government for aid.

"Give us money," said the capitalists, "for our reserve is impaired and we are worth only half of what we had before."

"Give us public work to do and pay us from the public treasury," said the workmen, "for we have no jobs and our families are starving."

I watched anxiously while the government pondered for a considerable time and then, with thumbs down toward the capitalists and with thumbs up toward the laborers, the government spoke thus:

"O ye capitalists! Avaunt! Ye would still have enough had ye much less. Ye have said that ye have raised yourself by your superior brains and skill. Go ye and repeat.

"O ye laborers! Ye have nothing but your jobs. When your jobs are gone you have nothing left. Besides, ye do not ask for money, but ye seek to do service by which ye may earn money. It is a fair request and shall be granted."

Then I awoke, rubbed my eyes and wondered in what strange country I could possibly be.—Ellis O. Jones in Puck.

OVERPRODUCTION.

Toilers Always Create More Than They Are Able to Buy.

The workingmen under present conditions cannot employ themselves, but are dependent on the will and convenience of some employer who has the necessary capital. And not for love or for Christian charity does the employer give the workingmen employment. He does so to invest capital and to make a profit.

And since the working people of the country do not receive the full value of their products, can they be expected to buy back these products? Their numerical strength makes them the chief consumers of the country and those on whom production mainly depends.

In this way (by the laboring people not being able to consume enought and by the planless way in which production is carried on in general the so called overproduction is created—that is, no matter how much or how little the toilers of a nation create they always create more than they are able to buy with their wages. And in this way the so called industrial crises originate. They have come upon us about every fifteen years, roughly speaking, since capitalist production began its sway. At such times the trade and the manufacturing of a nation come to a standstill because "there is too much on hand!"

And the working people have to stop work and go ragged and hungry because there is too much on hand.

"The Dead Line."

All about us today are the vast products of the toil of the workers, yet, thanks to capitalism, the workers groan under an artificial famine. Capitalism stands between them and their product and levels the gun of high prices at them when they reach out to get some of the abundance they have themselves made.

Just like the "dead line" at Andersonville prison.

The famished prisoner who stretched his hand across the line there to clutch at a root or a scrap that might slightly appease his terrible hunger got a bullet of death in his brain from a watchful sentry.

The prisoners at Andersonville would not of their free accord have voted those sentries and the powers behind them into governmental office.

But the prisoners of capitalism, the working class, have not avoided making such a terrible mistake in the past, and none will do it over again!—Social-Democratic Herald.

Socialism.

Socialism is a word having two distinct but related meanings. Primarily it is used as the name of a certain philosophy of history and method of interpreting and analyzing social phenomena. In the second place, since this philosophy and method have as one of their principal conclusions that society is evolving toward a co-operative social stage, the word is used to designate a co-operative social organization where the means for the production and distribution of wealth are the collective property of the workers, while the goods which are to be consumed become the private property of the individual.—Encyclopedia Americana.

WASTE—A SARCASM.

Collective Public Ownership Would Eliminate Useless Labor.

Between South Bend and Niles, a distance of twelve miles, there run side by side a steam road and a trolley road, with two sets of bridges, fences, grades, cuts, steel tracks, depots, operating forces, rolling stock and other equipment, where one set is amply sufficient for all the traffic. This condition is duplicated quite generally throughout the east and middle west.

Again, between the same towns, running side by side, are five pole lines—Western Union line, Bell Telephone line, Citizens' Telephone line, a trolley line and a power transmission line. Poles for the latter cost from $7 to $15 each. One pole line would be entirely adequate under a rational economic system.

Last summer I saw in the Cripple Creek district a small hill, some 3,000 feet in diameter, which contains the celebrated Independence gold mine and 272 others. Just think of it! Two hundred and seventy-three shaft houses, shafts, hoisting and pumping equipments crowded together on one little hill! And the fool people there boast about the number as one of the attractions of the district! An ant digs one hole in the ground, but man, the wise bug, must have 273 to accomplish the same result!

Man, the noble, superior animal, builds two railroads where only one is needed and struts around and swells up with importance over his stupid achievement! Man, the skyscraper, who boasts of a monopoly on reason, erects five pole lines where one would suffice and then wonders what the dickens his grandchildren will do for toothpicks! Man, the intellectual geezer, digs 273 holes in the ground where but one is needed and is ass enough to brag about it!

At this point some long eared critter usually wakes up and brays, "Heehaw! Why, this makes lots of work for the laboring people! What would they do without it? Heehaw!" Under collective public ownership, which would eliminate all such useless labor, they could do useful work, hours of labor could be reduced for all and— But why waste explanations on an animal long on kicks and short on comprehension! Did some one squawk?

The foregoing is a true picture of our present economic system. Candidly, now, gentle reader, do you really think it deserves to be perpetuated? More than 3,000,000 men in Germany alone do not think so, and their number is increasing by leaps and bounds in this country. Honestly, now, do you truly think it an indication of a superior intellectual acumen to play the role of an apologist for such a stupid, wasteful system—a system which even the lowly ant would be ashamed to advocate? If one did it would be promptly kicked out of the colony as a hopeless imbecile.

Yes, man is a wise bug! Great is man and the works thereof! All hail to the illustrious king of chumps!—R. L. Green.

An Important Difference.

Socialist programmes and party platforms on both sides of the Atlantic emphasize the fact that the Socialist demand is for the socialization, not for property as such, but of property become capital—that is, property employed in production under certain circumstances. The term "capital" is confined by Karl Marx himself to such land and machinery or other instruments and material of production as may be employed in supplying social needs. Not only the individual home—which not one family in five now owns in America—garden, furnishings, clothing, books, pictures, boats, horses, carriages, etc., proper to individual and family use and enjoyment, but also the tools, instruments and materials of artist and craftsman, builder and farmer, when used in production for individual and family use and enjoyment are excluded by the Marxian definition from the category of things that Socialism would bring under collective ownership and administration.

Socialism's Day.

Instead of paying the worker simply the cost of producing the commodity, labor, in the lowest market, Socialism would make the social value of the product the basis of wages. More than any other one thing or than all other things combined this is the thing which marks the line most distinctly between mere reformers and Socialists.

The Perfection of Industry.

The control of production by the people as a whole means the highest possible perfection of industry on a large scale.

True Freedom.

Men, whose boast it is that ye
Come of fathers brave and free,
If there breathe on earth a slave,
Are ye truly free and brave?
If ye do not feel the chain
When it works a brother's pain,
Are ye not base slaves indeed,
Slaves unworthy to be freed?

Women, who shall one day bear
Sons to breathe New England air,
If ye hear without a blush
Deeds to make the roused blood rush
Like red lava through your veins
For your sisters now in chains,
Answer, are ye fit to be
Mothers of the brave and free?

Is true freedom but to break
Fetters for their own dear sake
And with brothern hearts forget
That we owe mankind a debt?
No! True freedom is to share
All the chains our brothers wear
And with heart and hand to be
Earnest to make others free!

They are slaves who dare not speak
For the fallen and the weak.
Hatred, scoffing and abuse,
They are slaves who dare not choose
Rather than in silence shrink
From the truth they needs must think.
They are slaves who dare not be
In the right with two or three.
—Lowell.

Tell your middle class friend who is willing to do a little reading to get "The Spirit of American Government," a new book by Professor J. Allen Smith, professor of political science, University of Washington. It is an eye opening book, written by a non-Socialist, but a man who is not afraid of facts and especially the facts of American history that have been covered up by capitalistic Fourth of July orators these many years.

At Each Other's Throat.

Civilization is commercialism.
Commercialism is competition.
Competition is war.
War's hell, and we are right in it!

be my man at the same time. Got that through your head?"

"Yes," assented Bennett; "I think I have. And while we're speaking plainly I want you to understand here and now that no one can bully me, either here or elsewhere, and that I'm no man's man. Have you got that through your head?"

Horrigan stared in savage amazement. He doubted if his ears had not played him false. Bennett had always treated the boss with uniform courtesy, and Horrigan belonged to the too numerous class who do not understand until too late the difference between gentle breeding and weak cowardice. That a man should speak to him courteously and not interlard his talk with oaths, obscenity or roughness seemed to Horrigan, as it does to many another boss, an evidence of timidity and lack of virility. A Damascene blade is a far more harmless looking weapon than a dudgeon, yet it is capable when the necessity arises of far deadlier work.

It is only the man whose gentleness has not granite strength as its foundation who deserves the newly popular term of "mollycoddle."

Had Horrigan's large experience with men been extended to embrace this fact he would probably never have picked out Alwyn Bennett in the first place as candidate for mayor nor deemed the younger man a fit tool for the organization's crooked work. The French nobles of the old regime, whose polish of manner was the envy of the world, fought like devils on occasion and went to death on the scaffold with a smile and a jest on their lips, while many a brutal demagogue in the same circumstances broke down and screamed for mercy. However, Horrigan chanced to be more familiar with the history of the organization than with that of France; hence, deeming Bennett's reply a mere sporadic flash of defiance from a properly cowed spirit, he resolved to crush the rebellion at a blow.

"Don't give me any insolence!" he roared. "I won't stand for it, and"—

"Moreover," quietly continued Bennett, as though the boss had not spoken, "I shall be very much obliged if in future you will knock at my door instead of bursting in on me. This is my private office, not yours."

"Do you mean to"—

"I've explained as clearly as I can just what I mean. If you don't understand me I can't supply you with intelligence."

"Bennett," said the boss, his burning rage steadied down to a white heat, far more dangerous, but less incoherent, "you and me are talking too much and saying too little. We've got to come to a showdown. You're a clever boy and you made a rattling good fight, and you're on the right side of the public and of the press too. You're the best material we've got, and if you try and do the right thing there's no limit to what you can rise to—but only if you do the right thing."

"The right thing," echoed Bennett. "What do you mean by the right thing?"

"I mean you've got to do the right thing by the men who put you where you are today."

"That's fair. But who put me where I am today?"

"I did—I, Dick Horrigan. Who ever heard of you till I took you up? Nobody. If I didn't make you mayor, who did, I'd like to know?"

"The voters. The people of this city."

"The voters," scoffed Horrigan. "The deuce they did! Who had you nominated?"

"You did. But it was the public who elected me, and I'm going to obey your orders in one thing. I'm going to 'do the right thing by the men who put me where I am today.' I'm going to pay the voters for their trust in me by giving them a fair and square administration. In the case of this Borough Street railway franchise bill, for instance," tapping the document lying before him on his desk, "before I sign that bill I intend to make sure it's for the good of the people, that it is for the good of the city, not merely for the good of Richard Horrigan and a clique of his friends and heelers. No, don't swear. It'll do you no good. I'm firm on this matter. If you're discontented with me it's your own fault. I warned you months ago that if I was elected I should keep my oath of office. As for this Borough bill"—

"As for this Borough bill," broke in Horrigan savagely, "you'll sign it. If you don't"—

"Well?" queried Bennett, as the boss paused, choked by his own fury. "If I don't sign it—what then?"

"If you don't, your political career is ended from this time on. See? It's ended! Smashed flat. You think of yourself as a fine, promising young man who's on the road to the governorship and maybe to the White House. Well, you aren't. You're what Dick Horrigan made you, and your future will be what Dick Horrigan chooses to make it. I lifted you up, and I can tear you down just as easy. And, what's more, by ——, I'll do it if you don't sign the Borough bill. I'm a man of my word, and before even you were nominated I pledged my word to have that bill put through. The bill paid your election expenses. It"—

"I paid my own election expenses. You know that."

"Your personal expenses, perhaps. But who paid for parades, halls, banners, fireworks, speakers, advertisements, workers and watchers and all the other million things that elected you? The men behind that Borough bill paid them. And they did it on the understanding you'd sign the bill."

"In other words," remarked Bennett, "you made a bargain for me. Well, I can't keep it."

"Oh, I'll keep it all right. You'll sign that bill or you'll"—

"Mr. Horrigan," exclaimed Bennett, controlling his temper with more and more difficulty, "you said something just now about our coming to a showdown. This is the time for it. I want you to remember henceforth that I wear no man's collar—yours or any one else's—and that you can't deliver any goods you've bargained for in my name. If I sign that bill it won't be under your orders, but because I think it right."

"Oh," laughed Horrigan, who thought he began to see the drift of the other's mind, "I don't hold out for that. I don't care why you sign it as long as you do sign it."

"What do you think about the bill yourself?" inquired Alwyn. "Do you consider it honest?"

"What do I care? It's got to be signed, and"—

"I care. And I think the bill is fraudulent."

"Getting tender in the conscience, aren't you? Well"—

"If you put it that way, yes. I think this Borough bill is crooked from first to last. But"—

"What's the matter with it? Ain't"—

"Let me explain," pursued Alwyn. "This bill gives the Borough Street Railway company the right to use whatever motive power they choose to. It gives them the right to charge five cent fares without any transfers. In one paragraph there's a clause permitting them to build a subway if they want one. By another paragraph's concessions they can build a conduit and lease it out for telephone or telegraph wires. By another they can do an express business. But all these provisions are as nothing compared to the fact that the bill gives the streets above and below ground to the Borough company forever and ever—not for a term of years, but until the end of the world. It delivers that route to the company not only for our time, but for always, and binds us and our descendants to its terms. That is the chief outrage of the whole thing. To think that the"—

"Oh, we've got a howling reformer in the mayor's seat, have we?" scoffed Horrigan. "If I'd known that"—

"The people have got a man who is trying to protect their rights and property. Here's a letter I received today. You'll recognize the name of the capitalist who wrote it. You know he is honest as well as wise. This is his proposition: He will pay $2,000,000 for that same franchise, give the city 10 per cent of the gross receipts and turn over the whole plant to it at the end of fifty years. What do you think of that?"

"It's a fake."

"It is a long ride offer. He volunteers to deposit $1,000,000 to bind the bargain. Now, what I want to ask you, Mr. Horrigan, is this: If the franchise is worth $2,000,000, why are you and your faction in the board of aldermen so anxious to give it away for nothing?"

"Look here!" blustered the boss. "I"—

"I am looking," returned Bennett. "I've been looking deeper into it than you realize. I asked you a question just now. I'll answer it myself in one word—'Graft!' That is why you want to give away a franchise that is worth $2,000,000."

"Graft!" snorted Horrigan contemptuously. "The same old reformer howl! What's your idea of graft anyway?"

Good for Everybody.

Mr. Norman R. Conlter, a prominent architect in the Delbert Building, San Francisco, says: "I fully endorse all that has been said of Electric Bitters as a tonic medicine. It is good for everybody. It corrects stomach, liver and kidney disorders in a prompt and efficient manner and builds up the system." Electric Bitters is the best spring medicine ever sold over a druggist's counter; as a blood purifier it is unequaled. 50c at F. G. Hines & Co.'s drug store.

The American Abroad.

On one of my visits to England I spent much time in studying and admiring York cathedral. On one of my visits to the grand old structure a fellow countryman came in with a rush twenty minutes before service and tackled the verger, a sedate and dignified specimen, with "Can I see the cathedral at once, please?" The verger explained slowly and courteously that the service would begin in twenty minutes; that it took three times as long as that to show anybody round the cathedral; that no one could be shown around during service and that after service the cathedral would be closed for the day as far as sightseeing went. "Oh, but I don't want to spend an hour or even half an hour in going around. I just want to hurry through," said the visitor. "Ten minutes is quite enough. My train leaves for London in twenty-seven minutes," consulting his watch nervously, "and I must see the cathedral and go. So please show me over in ten minutes and be done with it."

The verger looked at him with a calm British amazement not to be forgotten. "Sir," he said, "running is not allowed in this cathedral."—Outlook.

MEGUZEE ASSOCIATION

Order Eastern Star Met at East Jordan Last Week.

Ninety Delegates Present—Next Meeting at Central Lake—Officers Elect.

The annual meeting of Meguzee Association of the O. E. S. was held with Mark Chapter of East Jordan Wednesday and Thursday of last week. Meguzee Association is composed of eleven chapters, located in Emmet, Charlevoix, Antrim, Kalkaska and Grand Traverse counties and delegates from each one of the eleven chapters were present at this meeting, about ninety in all.

The sessions were held in the Masonic hall, which had been tastefully decorated with flowers and the colors of the order for this occasion.

Worthy Grand Matron, Mrs. Graham of Lansing, was present and gave a most interesting address.

The degree work of the order was exemplified by a team picked from among the delegates present, and the floral work was exemplified by Charlevoix Chapter.

Dinner and supper were served to the delegates in the Maccabee hall Wednesday, the Presbyterian Ladies' Aid Society being in charge of this very necessary part of the entertainment of guests.

Sessions were held Wednesday afternoon and evening and the following were elected as officers of association for the ensuing year:

President—Mrs. Alice Palmer, of East Jordan.

1st Vice President—Mrs. J. M. Harris, Boyne City.

2d Vice President—Mrs. Reed, Petoskey.

Secretary—Miss Anna Soule, Traverse City.

Treasurer—Mrs. Young, Charlevoix.

Central Lake was chosen as the place of holding the next annual meeting of the association.

The meeting just closed will long be remembered as one of the most successful in the association's history.

Deer Lake Grange No. 1269.

Deer Lake Grange, No. 1269 met in regular session May 16, and was opened in due form by Worthy Master H. C. Barber.

One application for membership was received.

Bro. Wesley Sudman took charge of our outer gate as gate keeper for the rest of the year.

Several discussed the hall which is being constructed on the west shore of Deer Lake, and will be ready for grange to use by June 1, 1908.

Literary program:

Recitation by Sister Minnie McGeorge.

Song by Sister Sidney Lumley.

Reading by Sister Hattie Green.

Selections on the phonograph by Sister Grace Hunt.

Song by Sister Rosa McGeorge.

Twenty-nine members present.

Receipts $1.70.

Grange closed in ample form.

Marion Center Grange No. 956.

Marion Center Grange No. 956, met in regular session May 13.

Opened in usual form, officers all present except gate keeper.

Minutes of last meeting read and approved.

Grange was closed in fourth degree and opened in first degree for the purpose of initiating candidates. One candidate was initiated in first and second degrees, afterward a short recess was taken for congratulation.

The regular order of business was resumed and the lecturer furnished a program.

Grange closed in form to meet again in two weeks, when the third and fourth degrees will be given to two candidates.

South Arm Grange No. 815.

South Arm Grange met May 16th with a good attendance. The program consisted of a song by Mrs. Olney, a song by Nina Robinson, instrumental music by Gertrude Stanke, and a very interesting debate by the brothers.

The debate was, "Resolved that contract crops do not pay." After a very warm and spirited discussion they decided that they did not pay.

The grange will give a dance Friday evening, May 23, and serve ice cream.

Our program next meeting is to be a memorial program.

The question of organizing the ladies' auxiliary was discussed by the sisters.

Ironton Grange No. 707.

Ironton grange met May 16, with a good attendance, one visitor was present from Rock Elm grange.

After regular meeting the grange was turned over to the lecturer; first, he had a roll call then a discussion on lightning rods, then the debate. Resolved that Washington was a better president than Lincoln, the negative side won. The lecturer's hour closed with a song by the grange.

For the good of the order the losing side of the contest decided to treat the opposite side with coffee and cake at the next meeting.

The grange was closed in regular form by the worthy master. Our next meeting will be held May 26.

Maple Grove Grange No. 1255.

Maple Grove grange met in regular session May 13. Worthy Master Arthur Wooden in the chair. Officers all present but lecturer.

Four applications for membership were received and the first and second degrees conferred on one candidate.

Lecturer's hour was taken up by songs, recitations and readings.

It was decided to have a dance June 5, proceeds to be used to build sheds. E. E. Stroud and F. J. Bartholomew were appointed managers.

Number of members present twenty-nine. Visitors, one from Marion Center Grange. Receipts $1.80.

Next meeting June 2, when lightning rods will be discussed.

A GRAIN OF CORN.

The Kernel a Thing of Life, Fitted For Reproduction.

Although the stalk and leaves of corn are important cattle feeds, only the kernels are ordinarily used for human food. They grow in double rows along a woody cob, from which they are easily shelled when ripe. The color of the skin may be white, yellow, red, purplish blue or a combination of these, according to variety. They are all either white or yellow inside and differ little on an average save in color. The kernel or seed, it must be remembered, is not inert, but a living thing, which under favorable conditions will develop into a new plant, and each part of it is made up of cells especially fitted for a particular role in this process of reproduction.

SECTION OF A GRAIN OF CORN.
[A, skin; B, germ; C, endosperm.]

Roughly speaking, the seed consists of three main divisions—the skin, the germ and the endosperm. The skin, which makes about 6 per cent of the weight of the seed, holds the whole together and protects the delicate interior parts. It is made up principally of tough cellulose or crude fiber, with some mineral matters imbedded in it. The germ is larger in corn than in most cereals and forms in average corn about 10 per cent by weight of the grain, whereas in wheat it is only 6 or 7 per cent. It contains the embryo from which the new plant will develop under favorable conditions. The endosperm constitutes about 84 per cent by weight of the grain and represents the food which the parent plant has stored for the early growth of the new plant. In the germ and endosperm the cellulose walls of the cells are very much thinner than in the skin and surround a network of nitrogenous material called protoplasm in which the life of each cell seems to reside. The food materials which the plant has stored for future use lie in the meshes of this protoplasmic network, together with some moisture. In the germ much of the stored material is fat and mineral matters. In the outer layers of the endosperm there are stored grains of a protein substance known as aleurone, and in the inner portions are found quantities of tiny starch grains with small amounts of protein and mineral matter.

It may be calculated that 51 per cent of the cellulose of the grain is found in the skin, 65 per cent of protein in the germ, 90 per cent of the starch and 84 per cent of the protein in the endosperm.

The food value of corn and its products as compared with each other and with other food materials of course depends mainly on the amount of nutritive materials or nutrients which the digestive organs can extract for the use of the body. Besides the water found in all food materials, even those which are apparently perfectly dry, the actual nutrients are grouped in four classes—first, protein or nitrogenous material; second, fat; third, carbohydrates, including starches, sugars and the very indigestible constituents known as crude fiber or cellulose, and, fourth, mineral matters or ash.

Protein, fats and carbohydrates alike can yield energy, but since only protein can serve for the necessary tissue building this is usually considered its main function, and the fats and carbohydrates are relied on to furnish most of the energy.

Corn is rich in fat and carbohydrates and so is a fattening food, as its extended use in the feeding of farm animals abundantly demonstrates.—Dr. Charles D. Woods, Maine Experiment Station.

Poultry Items.

The drinking vessels should be emptied each evening or there will be a solid cake of ice in them the next morning.

Gather the eggs three or four times a day or they will chill. Eggs should be kept in a temperature not below 50 degrees if intended for hatching.

See that the fowls are comfortable. This can be done by not overcrowding and by having litter strewn on the floor, among which grain is scattered. The point is to keep the hens busy. A busy hen is a happy, contented one.—Farm Journal.

THE STEALER STOLE.

A chicken thief stole to a roost
To steal a juicy hen,
A builder, with a steely gaze,
Stole round the pen just then.

The thief who stole to steal the hen
Was stole in jaws of steel.
The steel it stole into his leg
And stole his pants, oh, than!

THE FARMER FEEDER.

Finis to the Big Feed Lots—Mutton Now Made on Farms.

The finish of the big mutton finishers and the closing up of the great sheep feeding stations around the large live stock market centers of the country seem to be in sight if the anticipations of some of the experienced live stock people materialize. The farmer is rapidly extinguishing them. Empty and half filled feed lots were the portion of the extensive operators the past winter. One reason for this in northern Illinois, as explained by the Breeder's Gazette, Chicago, is that soil depletion has caused the owners to invoke the aid of the golden hoofed sheep. The farmers want the manure and are not averse to cleaning up a little coin on the sheep at the same time.

The Gazette, in which the accompanying cuts occur, says: The corn belt farmers now finishing mutton feel with the idea of accumulating a manure pile uppermost on their minds. Incidental to this is the conversion of roughage and grain, the product of the farm, into a concentrated and easily transported marketable product. Even when the stock is marketed at what appears to be a loss the farmer knows that the deficit can be charged to the land without danger of high financing.

But mutton finishing is not a task calculated to yield unqualified satisfaction to the amateur. In this respect the big feed lot operator had one advantage over the farmer. He had feeding reduced to a science, the result of long experience. His product came to market standard in quality and elicited high bids. The average farmer feeder, on the other hand, especially if a tyro, fails to get his stock started right and usually markets in a condition not calculated to yield the highest percentage of meat and entailing a serious discount from maximum prices.

Conspicuous among the errors of farmer feeders are overfeeding at the outset or not providing a sufficiently generous diet. Many a promising band of western lambs goes to the country to return with indications of having been half starved. A disappointed farmer feeder not long since asked a successful operator his secret. "Feeding them," was the terse response. "It takes corn to make fat." Equally disastrous is the common practice of crowding lambs when first put on feed. Probably the best feeders in the United States are those of Colorado, where the process has been reduced to an exact science.

Another common error of the farmer feeder and a costly one is failure to provide shelter. For winter feeding this is imperative if loss is to be avoided. Sheep thrive neither with wet feet nor soggy fleeces. They are comfort lovers, and a condition insuring luxury on the dry ranges of the west involves hardship to the low level country east of the Missouri river.

Obviously the lamb is the favorite with the farmer breeder. Yearlings come next and sheep last in the scale of popularity. The lamb makes superior gains during the feeding period if handled intelligently. It is this gain that determines the feeder's profit.

Lamb is the popular dish with American mutton eaters and always will be. In a series of years nearly all the feeders' profit will be found in the pocket of the man who makes a practice of handling lambs. He has the advantage of the superior gain and also of a broader outlet.

The Thin Cows.

A great many farmers' cows are so thin in the spring that it takes them half of the summer to recover from the bad effects of the winter. There is another reason, and a very important one, that cows should be fed well during the winter time when they are dry. It has been demonstrated that the effect of poor feeding upon the progeny is very marked, and one of the reasons why so many cows are unprofitable milkers is because they were not properly fed when they should have been.—Professor H. H. Dean, Ontario.

The Angel Makers.

Robert Smith, brother of Sydney Smith and an ex-advocate general, on one occasion engaged in an argument with a physician over the relative merits of their respective professions. "I don't say that all lawyers are crooks," said the doctor, "but you'll have to admit that your profession doesn't make angels of men." "No," retorted Smith, "You doctors certainly have the best of us there."—St. James' Gazette.

THE HORSEMAN.

Should horses drink when they eat? The average keeper and veterinarian says no, just as the average writer on hygiene says that human beings should not. Yet they invariably do, and they certainly "wash it down." Now, this is the Norwegian practice with horses, and, according to one veterinarian, "you never see a broken winded horse in Norway." He attributes this to the water furnished with their meals, and, while that may be somewhat extravagant, the custom is worth considering. Every one who has taken care of a horse has noticed that water before meals is not relished, while if it is given in large quantities directly afterward it tends to wash the grain too rapidly through the digestive tract. In Norway every horse has a bucket of water beside his manger, and as he eats he also drinks. It is interesting to see how the Norwegian horses relish their water with their meals. Now they sip a little from the bucket, now they eat a mouthful, then another sip, then another mouthful, just like rational human beings.—Country Gentleman.

Mistaken Kindness.

It often happens that some business on the farm necessitates a long drive or some other hard day's work, and the owner will give, probably twice as much oats for breakfast as the horse has been in the habit of getting in order to brace him up for a hard day's work. The horse if soft for want of regular exercise will naturally become weary on his journey, and the stomach will become weary, too, in sympathy with the muscular system, when it too often refuses to perform its functions. The process of digestion ceases when fermentation of the undigested mass in the stomach takes place. Gases are formed which cause the animal to bloat. He will show symptoms of pain, and a case of indigestion is the result. Now, if the horse had received only his ordinary grain rations the chances are that before he had become weary on his journey the stomach would have completed its work and would have been completely empty, in which case a very acute attack of indigestion would have been impossible. It is a good rule never to give a horse an extra big meal to stiffen him up for a hard day's work.—H. G. Reed, V. S.

Crushed Oats.

The French investigator Grandeau states on the basis of experiment and observation that crushing oats increases their digestibility and that crushed oats have been fed with satisfactory results for some years by a cab company in Paris and have effected a decided saving.

The Pig That Pays.

Which of your brood sows farrowed the largest litter? Yes, certainly. She is the same one that farrowed a large litter last spring. She always has a big litter.

She is an old standby. She is the kind that makes the pig business certain. She is the kind that pays her board.—Farm Journal.

The Year and the Calendar.

After Julius Caesar corrected the calendar the year was still 11 minutes 14 seconds too long, amounting to one day in 128 years. As the centuries passed the interval between the commencement of the year and the spring equinox grew less. It was not, however, until 1582 that anything was done about it. Then Pope Gregory XIII. set out to remedy the difficulty. This he did by directing the suppression of ten days outright. In order to provide for the future he ordered that all century years (1700, 1800, etc.) which would ordinarily be leap years should be common years unless they were multiples of 400. This arrangement, which still holds good, leaves only one day too much in 3,400 years. A French scientist has proposed dropping an additional day in the year 3,200 and repeating the process every 3,200 years. This would leave us short one day every 30,000 years, which may be considered correct enough for all practical purposes. At any rate, the matter is not pressing.—New York Post.

The Spring Contests at the University of Michigan.

FRESHMEN SCORE COMPLETE VICTORY

Tug of War, Bag Fight, Relay Race and Push Ball Contests Theirs.

All the Contests Are Good Natured Ones But Are Full of Hard Work—Made up For Last Fall's Fun.

The spring contests between the freshmen and sophmores give the freshmen a chance to retaliate for the treatment received at the hands of the sophmores in the fall. The contests are as follows: Tug of war, bag fight, relay race and push-ball contest, coming in the order named.

The tug of war is very spectacular and amusing to the many hundreds who gather to witness it. There is one spot where the Huron river flows through town that the banks are both low and level for some distance from the river. It is at this place that the event is pulled off. A rope three hundred feet long is stretched across the river. Sixty of the heaviest men from each class are chosen and, after a flag has been placed on the rope in the middle of the river, a pistol is fired for the signal to start, and all is excitement. This year the sixty freshmen averaged just about one hundred and ninety pounds. It was given out that the sophmore team averaged more, but it is very doubtful. We, the freshmen, were lined up some time to start and improved every moment by digging treaches with our shoes and getting our hands well rosined so they would not slip on the rope. At the signal from our captain every man took a firm position and threw his weight onto the rope at the crack of the pistol. A two-inch rope was used, yet it stretched enough to force us to step backwards quite a distance. Both teams were straining with all their strength. We added to our pull by giving an additional heave all together which resulted in our gaining about six inches. Another heave gained us six more, and this method was steadily repeated until we had part of the sophmores in the river. We had backed up until we were in a low swampy spot where the footing was poor which caused a few seconds of uneasiness for the rope remained stationary. All together we heaved and some more sophs went into the river. From that time on it was easier and when the signal was given that all was over the sixty sophmores were all in the water. It is an unwritten law that the members of the losing team will remain in their places until all have been pulled into the river.

Next came the bag fight which is a new thing at Michigan. Fifteen bags are made for each class differing only in color. These bags are about three feet long, a foot in diameter and stuffed with some soft light material. The freshmen were lined up on one side of Sleepy Hollow and the sophmores on the other. The bags of each class were placed about four rods from their respective owners and the object was for each class to take care of their own bags and to get as many of the others as possible. Each bag counted one point for the class owning and keeping it, but an opponent's bag counted two points. The freshmen formed two lines across the field. At the signal to start both lines charged forward, the first running right over their bags and on after those of the sophmores but the second line gathered their bags into one pile back of the line and guarded them against the attacks of the sophs. Of course it was rough and tumble but good natured scraps all over the field. Thousands watched the hundreds of struggling classmen. The field was wet and muddy, which made things worse than ever. Dozens of fellows had their shirts pulled completely off and all were covered with mud from head to foot. At the end of twenty minutes the battle was over and the judges counted the points. The freshmen won twenty-nine points to the sophmores eight. Then came a great snake dance down State street and a good deal of tree climbing by the sophmores to even up for last fall.

The relay race was run by forty-eight men in three seperate races, sixteen men running in each race. About four thousand people witnessed this event and the push-ball contest. The race was held on Ferry field and each man ran 220 yards carrying a flag, which was about four feet long and each man also had to go through one barrel and over one fence while running his 220 yards. The freshmen won two of the the three races, which of course gave them one more victory.

Then came the last event. All the freshmen were lined upon one side of the field and the sophmores on the other. The push-ball, which is made the same as a basket-ball, but is six and one-half feet in diameter, is placed in the middle of the field. At a given signal both classes rush for it and from that on it is simply a great mass of struggling students. Charge after charge was made by the reserves of the freshmen but it was only by superior numbers that this contest went as it did. Three goals were made by the freshmen, breaking all prevous records for never before has even one goal been made. It was nothing to see a student climb upon the ball and have his shirt pulled off in pieces by those trying to get him off. All was good nature, rough and hard work, yet at the end every one declared it was great.

After parading down State street and having their pictures taken the students quietly returned to their respective homes. The freshmen satisfied that they had won a complete victory and the sophmores consoling themselves by bringing to mind the fun they had with the freshmen last fall.

MEMORIAL DAY SERVICES

Program for the Day as Arranged by the Committee.

Address by Hon. F. W. Mayne—Schools and Council Will Take Part.

The committees from the G. A. R. and Relief Corps have arranged for the proper observance of Memorial Day next Saturday. It is hoped that there will be a general observance of the day. The program, as arranged, is as follows:

Under the direction of the officer of the day, Daniel Hembaugh, the procession will form on Bridge street at 9:30 o'clock, standard time, and move south promptly at 10:00 from place of forming direct to cemetery. On nearing the cemetery the procession will halt, allowing those in carriages to alight and take their places in line. The march will continue into the grounds, the drum corps playing a dirge, and will halt at the cenotaph where the order of exercises will take place as follows:

Call to order.
Invocation, Rev. R. A. Wright.
Reading of orders, Adjutant Hon. E. H. Green.
Reading of Lincoln's Gettsburg address, Prof. Woodley.

The druggist bond of A. B. Fleisher with A. F. Bridge and Forrest Blanchard as sureties was accepted.

The Wagner contract was declared forfeited. The regular bills were allowed and at nearly one o'clock the council adjourned.

CAMPAU IS DEFEATED

At Democratic State Convention, After a Hot Contest

Delegates are Instructed For Bryan—Lewis One of the Alternates.

The chief interest in the Democratic state convention was in the contest between the Campau men to continue Mr. Campau as the party leader in the state, and those who were out after his scalp.

After an all days struggle, Mr. Campau gave up and is now a fallen leader.

The convention instructed the delegates to vote, as a count for the nomination of W. J. Bryan and elected the following delegates at large.

John T. Winship, Saginaw.
Woodbridge N. Ferris, Elk Rapids.
Charles H. Kimmerlee, Cassopolis
Edward J. Ryan, Calumet.

Alternates: John A. McLaughlin, Muskegon; T. E. Tarsney, Detroit; John F. Bible, Ionia and F. L. Dodge Lansing.

Arthur J. Lacy, of Clare and John T. Matthews, of Ithaca, were chosen as delegates from this district, with W. J. Lewis, of Boyne City, and D. L. Ensign, of Traverse City, alternates.

The resolutions adopted speak of their confidence in the ultimate success of their principle, speaks in eulogistic terms of Mr. Bryan and pledges him Michigan's support and indorses the new constitution.

PLATFORM A SHORT ONE

Dodds Announces the Platform Upon Which He Stands.

Hon. F. H. Dodds, the Mt. Pleasant candidate for the Republican nomination for Congress, followed Mr. Covell and announces the following as his platform.

"I am in full accord with the policies of the present administration and favor the nomination of William H. Taft as being the man most likely and best able to carry out those policies.

"I favor such tariff relations with the Phillipines and with foreign nations as will enable us to build up our sugar industry.

"The platform of my party, when adopted by the Chicago convention next month, shall be my platform and I promise the people of the district that I shall, if sent to congress, do my best to carry its teachings into effect."

NORWOOD GOOD PLAYERS

Nearly Defeated the Charlevoix Team Wednesday Afternoon.

Wednesday Norwood and Charlevoix baseball teams met at Norwood, Norwood forfeiting the game in the eighth with the score standing five to four in their favor. The game was a good clean one throughout and Norwood is justly entitled to the honors earned. The Norwood boys royally entertained the Charlevoix bunch in the evening.

Alwood was in the box for Norwood, while Lewis pitched for the locals.

ANOTHER PIONEER DEAD

Mrs. Elizabeth Weikel Dies at Her Home Monday Morning.

Had Been a Resident of Charlevoix County Since 1867—Leaves Three Children.

Mrs. Elizabeth Weikel died at her home in East Jordan, Monday morning, May 25, after an illness of over three weeks.

Mrs. Weikel, who was born in 1826, was one of the oldest residents of Charlevoix county, coming here with her husband, the late Jesse Weikel, in 1867, when they located a homestead on section 14, South Arm township.

Mr. Weikel's home was a famous stopping place for new settlers coming into this region, and in 1877 he built the River Jordan house at East Jordan, which he managed until his death.

Mrs. Weikel was the mother of four children, W. J., of Charlevoix, the present under-sheriff of this county, Howard, of East Jordan; Rachel, deceased, and Mrs. Mary Jones of California.

MANY IMPROVEMENTS MADE

Charlevoix Theater Has Been Provided with Sufficient Fire Protection.

Extensive repairs are going on at the Charlevoix Theater this week. A new stairway has been put up on the north side of the building with a door opening out of the building onto it. The doorway to the stairway under the stage has been made more easy of access.

With these improvements and others which are contemplated, the management have made a building which should be entirely safe in case of fire, good exits being provided in three directions.

GORNELL-GILL

Two Well Known Norwood Residents Married Wednesday.

Henry Gornell and Mrs. Ellen Gill, of Norwood, were married at the M. E. parsonage in this city Wednesday, May 20, by Rev. R. A. Wright. Both are well known residents of Norwood, Mr. Gornell being the foster father of Alderman Fowler of this city, and Mrs. Gornell a sister of Sims Baker, a well known citizen of Charlevoix.

COVELL ANNOUNCES HIS PLATFORM

Alward's Withdrawal Makes His Nomination Probable.

MAKING STEADY GAINS IN THE SOUTH

And Has the Northern Portion of the District Solid.

Is in Favor of a Progressive Policy—His Platform is the One Which Will Be Adopted at Chicago Convention.

The chances of Hon. George G. Covell securing the nomination for Congress, are growing better every day, as announced in the COURIER last week.

The northern part of the district will return him a practically solid vote, and each day he is gaining the support of strong men in the southern part. While everything looks good to Mr. Covell's friends at this time they must not forget that in Mr. Dodds he has a strong opponent and to cinch the nomination they will have to hustle every hour from now until the primaries close.

Believing that the Republican voters should know how he stands on public questions of a national character, Mr. Covell gave out the following statement last week:

"The awakening of the public conscience that has taken place during the past few years has caused a keener sense of justice to prevail in the minds of the rank and file of our citizens than ever before.

"The voters of our district have a right to know upon what platform a candidate comes to them for their support for the important office of congressman.

"In a general way let me say that my platform will be that adopted at Chicago next month.

"Protection has been one of the corner stones of our party, always; but I believe the time has come when there should be a just and equitable readjustment of the schedules, which will afford ample protection to our industries, the highest possible wages for our labor, and a fair return for the products of the farm.

"The prosperity of our district largely depends upon the protective idea, and naturally my desire and ambition would be to serve the district in such a way as to safeguard all interests."

As to the financial question Mr. Covell said:

"I am of the same opinion on this subject that I was in 1896 and since, viz.: That the standard of circulation should be based upon gold.

"Under our form of government, all classes, rich or poor, high or low, employed or unemployed, should have an equal show, and class legislation should be absolutely avoided.

"I am earnestly in sympathy with the progressive policy of our president, Theodore Roosevelt.

"To the accomplishment of these ends, I would lend all my ability and energy. Further than this I would not presume to go, else I would be making a platform for my party, and this duty has been assigned to the delegates of our great national convention in Chicago next month.

My watchword will be, to do right as I am given wisdom to see the right."

For a sprained ankle the whites of eggs and powdered alum made into a plaster is almost a specific.

Hot water is better than cold for bruises. It relieves pain quickly and will prevent discoloration.

One should be cautious about entering a sick room in a state of perspiration, as the moment you become cool your pores absorb.

Stewed rhubarb has a well known medicinal value besides being a complexion beautifier. It is said to be valuable for rheumatic troubles.

Eggs are considered one of the best remedies for dysentery. Beaten up slightly and swallowed they tend to lessen the inflamation of stomach and intestines.

In even severe cases of colic a teaspoonful of salt dissolved in a teacupful of cold water has been known to give immediate relief. The same dose will revive a person who has been stunned by a heavy fall if he can be forced to swallow it.

A teaspoonful of ground mustard in a cupful of warm water is a prompt and reliable emetic, and should be taken in cases of poisoning or cramps from overheating. Powdered resin is the best thing to stop bleeding from cuts.

Alcoholic Hereditary Effects

Child inebriety heads the list. Lady Henry Somerset tells of a child one of whose parents died of alcoholism. Only with the greatest restraint was the child kept from stealing away from the nurse to the dining room; also to the servant's apartments, to drain every glass, in order to get the last drops of liquor—an awful inherited craving. The disease is in the blood, and in such a case the overmastering desire is inwoven in the very life. The victim is not responsible, there is no appeal.

The tobacco habit is also inexorable. Dr. Mary Wood-Allen tells of two cases related to her, where the crying of babies could not be stopped until a pipe with tobacco was put between the lips.

The Earl of Shaftesbury believed that fifty or sixty per cent of the insane could be traced to an alcoholic drinking ancestry.

BIG FOREST RESERVE

To Be Established in Lower Peninsula of Michigan

As a Result of Conference Recently Held in Washington.

At a conference in Washington between National Forester Gifford Pinchot, Senators Burrows and Smith, Gov. Warner, Congressman Loud, Charles Blair, of the Michigan forestry comission; President Snyder, of the Michigan Agricultural college, and others it was agreed upon that all the public lands in lower Michigan shall become a forest reserve. Charles W. Gafield, member of the Michigan forestry reserve commission, is enthusiastic for the chances of a big forestry reserve in Michigan.

"The state, the United States, and the Agricultural college owns thousands of acres in Iosco, Ogemaw, Roscommon, Oscoda, Crawford and other counties in the state," said Mr. Garfield.

"When the next session of the legislature opens some authority will be sought from the state to make combinations of sections between these three owners in order that large tracts of contiguous territory may be secured. With such tracts on which to experiment the commission hopes to make a start toward reforesting the state.

"The agricultural college has made experiments on a small scale along this line before, but they have been limited by the fact that its sections sometimes alternated with those of the state and the government, so that large contignous tracts could not be secured."

Literary Notes

Woman's Home Companion For June.

Five hundred photographs of President Roosevelt, all assembled in one big double page picture, 13 by 19½ inches in size, is an extraordinary feature of the June Woman's Home Companion. The five hundred photographs were taken in almost every state in the Union, at all periods of Roosevelt's public career, and show his wonderful versatility and energy.

In the June Companion appear the first chapters of Harvey J. O'Higgins' great story, "A Grand Army Man," based on Belasco's famous play of the same name, in which David Warfield starred all last winter. Other fiction in this delightful summer magazine is by Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, Zona Gale, Charlotte Perkins Gilman, Temple Bailey and Clinton Dangerfield.

Kellogg Durland, who of late has spent much time in Russia, tells the dramatic and thrilling story of one of the bravest girls of the Russian Revolution. Margaret E. Sangster writes on the American woman as a social engineer.—Dr. Edward Everett Hale devotes his monthly page to some working rules of life. Grace Margaret Gould, the fashion expert, gives many practical suggestions for summer dressing. Sam Loyd's Own Puzzle Page is a mine of interest for the puzzle lover.

"Graft is unearned increment. Money to which the recipient has no legal or moral right. That is"—

"So! Then show me the man who ain't a grafter! A lawyer shows his client how to evade the law, and he takes a fee for doing it. What's that but graft? A magazine takes pay for printing an advertisement its editors know is a fake. What's that? Graft! When a congressman votes for an appropriation because another congressman has agreed to vote for one of his, what's that? Graft! When a five thousand a year senator retires at the end of ten years worth a million, what's that? Graft! A police captain on $2,750 a year buys yachts and country estates. Graft! How about the railroad president who gets stock free in a corporation that ships over his road, or the insurance man or banker who gives or takes fat loans on fancy securities and clears 1,000 per cent? Grafters, all of 'em! Grafters! Every one grafts who can or who isn't too stupid. Show me a man who doesn't graft and I'll show you a fool. Present company not excepted."

"That's where you're wrong," returned Alwyn, ignoring the slur and speaking with a judicial quiet oddly at contrast with the boss' vehemence. "The man who said 'Honesty is the best policy' knew what he was talking about. It pays best not only hereafter, but here as well. Why did Missouri choose Folk for governor? Because in spite of his faults he is honest. Why was La Follette sent to the senate from Wisconsin? Because, faults and all, he was honest. Why did the people of this country make Roosevelt their president? Were they blind to his faults and foibles? No, but they knew he was honest. I am honest. This bill isn't. That is why I won't sign it."

"You won't, eh?" roared Horrigan. "Then veto it! Veto it if you dare! I'll not only smash your political career, but I'll pass the bill over veto. That'll show you pretty clearly how you and me stand as to power in the city. I'll make you the laughingstock of the administration by taking the whole thing out of your hands and passing it in spite of you."

"I doubt it," answered Bennett, paling, but meeting coolly the fiery wrath in Horrigan's little red eyes. "I intend to fight your Borough bill in the aldermanic chamber and outside that council. To pass a bill over my veto you'll have to get a two-thirds majority. That means fourteen votes. You have only your 'solid thirteen.' And I'll make it my business to see you don't get a fourteenth vote."

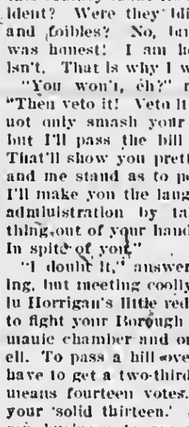
"I'll look out for that, all right, all right."

"One thing more, Mr. Horrigan. I have reason to believe there is bribery in this matter. I'll ferret out the name of every man who gives or takes a bribe in connection with the Borough franchise bill, and I'll send every one of them to jail—not only the aldermen, but the capitalists who are behind the measure. Receiver and thief shall go to jail together."

"Is that so?" chuckled Horrigan. "Then, Mr. Reformer, let me tell you who is really behind this whole affair, the man you'll have to jail first of all, Mr. Charles Walnwright, uncle of the girl you're trying to marry."

He leaned back to note the effect of his revelation, but Bennett's face moved no muscle, gave no hint of what lay beneath.

"Besides," went on Horrigan, eager to press his advantage, "every cent of Miss Walnwright's fortune and of her brother's has been put by Walnwright into Borough stock. If the franchise is beaten, that stock will collapse and Miss Walnwright will be a pauper. You'll beggar the girl you're to love with and her young brother if you veto that bill. Now go ahead and do as you like."



"Now go ahead and do as you like," said Horrigan.

It was Horrigan's trump card, and he had played it well. White, at least, Bennett walked back to his desk. The fight seemed all knocked out of him. Heavily he looked, like a man overexhausted. Picking up a pen, he wrote rapidly, then cast aside the pen, crossed to the window and looked out into the snowy, crowded park.

"You've signed the bill?" cried Horrigan in delight.

"I've vetoed it," replied Bennett.

CHAPTER VII.

"THE boss is turned down!"

This startling news flew lightning fast to every quarter of the organization and in its wake spread a trail of incredulous amaze. Every member, from alderman to "heeler," knew why Horrigan had made Bennett mayor. That the latter should turn against his benefactor seemed not only black ingratitude, but something akin to insanity, for it apparently spelled political suicide for the young man.

While neither of the disputants had repeated the details of the quarrel, yet those details with many another were already passing from mouth to mouth in the mysterious fashion whereby the closest kept secrets are divulged and enlarged on. In the financial world, too, the veto came as a bombshell. Borough Street railway stock fell with a thud that shook more than one colossal fortune. Bennett—central point of the whole upheaval—was the calmest man of all who were involved. He had chosen his course, and he was following it with a dogged quiet far more dangerous than any loud mouthed bluster. He had laid out a campaign, and that campaign he rigidly followed.

His first step was to send for Perry Walnwright early in the morning following the clash with Horrigan and, under strict pledge of secrecy, to explain the whole complicated affair to that very bewildered young man.

"You're all right, Alwyn! You're all the goods!" crowed Perry in genuine admiration. "But why didn't you backheel Horrigan and throw him downstairs?"

"I think I did," said Bennett dryly. "I think I'm still doing it. That's why I sent for you today."

"Want me to lick him for you?" asked Perry—in delight. "He's a lot over my weight, but I wouldn't mind battling"—

"No," interrupted Bennett, amused at the lad's vehemence. "I want you to play the melodramatic brother and protect your sister."

"Say," snorted Perry, all the lightness gone out of his manner and his young frame stiffening ominously, "d'you mean to say the cur is framing up any game on Dallas? If"—

"Sit down," ordered Alwyn, "and try to use what little human intelligence you may have. I've got to have your help, and what use are you when all you can think of is getting thrashed by somebody? Sit down now and listen to me."

Perry meekly obeyed the new note of command in his friend's voice, and Bennett resumed:

"Your uncle has tried to hamper me by putting all your fortune and Dallas' into Borough Street railway stock. The news of my veto will reach the exchange almost at once. That will cause a slump in Borough stock. If Horrigan fails to carry the bill through over my head—and he will fail if I can possibly block him—that will mean the practical collapse of the stock. It will mean that you and Dallas will be almost penniless."

"Well," suggested Perry cheerfully, "then you can marry Dallas, and little brother Perry can come and live with you. Don't worry, old chap. I"—

"Shut up, you young idiot, and sit down and listen! Here's a check; also a note of introduction to my broker. He's a close mouthed fellow, and he'll keep the secret. I want you to sell Borough stock short to the amount of"—

"To speculate? Gee! I never thought"—

Perry Walnwright.

"I don't believe in speculation as a rule, but this time it's the only way out. Sell short. Then if the bill is defeated you and Gladys will still be as well off as you are now, even after paying me back this sum I've advanced. If the bill is passed over my head, the stock will boom, and you'll both be richer than ever. Understood the idea? I think I've arranged it so you and she won't lose a dollar in either case."

"Alwyn," cried Perry, the full idea at last penetrating his youthful brain, "you're the whitest ever. Tho"—

"Hold on! I do this on one condition."

"Oh!"

"On condition you promise solemnly that neither Dallas nor any one else shall know my share in it."

"But"—

"Promise!"

"Oh, well, all right, then. But Dallas ought to"—

"No, she oughtn't. Now clear out. I'm busy. Don't waste any time going to my broker. I'm holding back the official announcement of the veto as long as I can. But"—

"I'm on. So long, old chap. Enter Perry the Lamb into Bear and Bullville! Let Horrigan & Co. indulge in a timely tremble!"

Scarce had Perry departed on his mission when Phelan was announced.

"Your honor," he shouted as he first caught a glimpse of Bennett, "You're all aces! Nothin' to it. Friend Horrigan's lettin' holes in the ceilin'. He'n—oh, you needn't look so mum. I'm wise. I haven't spent ten years and close on a million bucks in scrapin' together a private secret service system for nothin'. 'You've signed the bill' squeals Horrigan. 'No, you big stiff!' says you, 'I've vetoed it. Now go chase yourself before I knock you from under your hat!' says you. Them was the very words, so I'm told."

"I congratulate you on your secret service men," laughed Bennett. "They seem to have a wonderful faculty for quoting one's remarks literally, but"—

"But did I come here to ladle out hot air to you?" supplemented Phelan. "No, I didn't. I come to rip you off to a meetin' that's held last night at Walnwright's house—him an' Horrigan an' Gildus an' some others, including Hen Williams, who's Horrigan's mouthpiece an' handy man in the board of aldermen. Didn't happen to hear of that meetin', did you?"

"No. I am unfortunate in having no secret service corps."

"Never mind," returned Phelan, on whom the satire of the reply was quite lost. "You can get the benefit of mine. Now, at this meetin' they did a lot of jabberin' an' they cussed you up hill an' down dale. Says Horrigan, 'If that young cub'"—

"Thanks," interposed Alwyn, "but I don't care to hear what was said about me. I"—

"All right, then, but there's something you do want to hear. They got busy at last an' framed up a new wordin' for the Borough bill that'll maybe throw dust in your eyes if you ain't put on to it in advance. They've cut out the subway paragraph an' the express business clause, an' they allow transfers at all cross lines. That's the way they'll put the bill up to the aldermen next time. A nice, harmless lookin' document it'll be, an' perhaps the board'll swaller it if"—

"But do the alterations in the bill also eliminate the 'perpetual franchise' clause?"

"Ah, there's the point! They don't. All the other things you kicked against have been wiped out, but the 'perpetual franchise' clause stands."

"And the $2,000,000 cash offer stands, too," added Bennett. "I still fail to see why I should present Mr. Walnwright's company with a franchise for which another man is willing to pay the city $2,000,000, and I shall fight the bill to the very end."

"Good boy, your honor! An' Jimmy Phelan's with you. We'll make Horrigan look like"—

"He needs fourteen votes to carry the bill past my veto. He has his thirteen aldermen, under Williams' lead. But only those thirteen voted for the bill in its original state. Unless Horrigan and Williams can find a fourteenth alderman to"—

"Unless one of the men who voted against it before can be brought to vote for it next time Horrigan loses," answered Phelan. "He'll make it his business to buy a fourteenth man, an' I'll make it my business to find out who he tries to get an' to help your honor keep that same fourteenth man straight. That's how it adds up so far. Well, I'll be joggin'. I'll keep you posted, an' between us we'll make Horrigan give a livin' picture imitation of a man without a scalp before we're through with him."

Little of Phelan's exultation was reflected in the new mayor's face as the alderman bustled out. His duty lay clear before him, and that duty he would follow. But he alone realized the cost. He had no counted on the promised talk with Dallas Walnwright the preceding evening. On the hopes

SO FAR only three candidates have made formal announcement of their candidacy, before the Republican primaries, for Governor; Governor Warner, Auditor General Bradley and State Highway Commissioner Earle.

While any of them, we believe, would make a good governor, the general impression is that among the hosts of Republicans of Michigan some other man can be brought to the front, who will add more strength to the ticket.

Governor Warner's platform, when it is simmered down, is simply Warner. While he has made a splendid governor, we don't believe it would be for the best interests of the party to give him a third term.

Bradley has made a good official also, but the general impression is that he represents the elements of the party, which, at the present time, are discredited, and such impression would be a source of weakness to his candidacy.

This leaves Earle. While his candidacy has not been considered as a serious one, nevertheless, when the votes are counted it will be found he is in the race. While he has been considered a one idea man, his platform, which we print below, shows he thinks of something else besides good roads and has new ideas, beside the dead issue of state wide primary elections, which are sure to be given a try out anyway.

"My platform is made up for purely business matters. This is what I stand for:

"Good roads. Convict crushed stones for roads. State board of trade to boom Michigan. More to tax instead of more taxes. Deed state lands to counties to be disposed of by the counties and so get rid of Michigan's farrow cow. Protect forests and encourage reforestation by timber land tax law. Better equipment and better service from public service corporations. Ad valorem taxation on telephone and telegraph companies as well as on yearlings. One tax on all property. Pay state money only to those that who earn it. Clean appointments, the farmer to have his share. Abolish unnecessary boards and officials. In short, less politics and more business.

"This is the platform upon which I stand and upon which the people of Michigan are going to elect me even if the newspapers in some sections of the state do refuse to give me space in their columns or to recognize that I am moving. This is the platform that I will carry out when I am governor, and don't you forget it."

How He Did It.

"When I was connected with a certain western railway," says a prominent official of an eastern line, "we had in our employ a brakeman who, for special service rendered to the road, was granted a month's vacation.

"He decided to spend his time in a trip over the Rockies. We furnished him with passes.

"He went to Denver and there met a number of his friends at work on one of the Colorado roads. They gave him a good time and when he went away made him a present of a mountain goat.

"Evidently our brakeman was at a loss to get the animal home with him, as the express charges were very heavy at that time. Finally, however, hitting upon a happy expedient, he made out a shipping tag and tied it to the horns of the goat. Then he presented the beast to the office of the stock car line.

"Well, that tag created no end of amusement, but it served to accomplish the end of the brakeman, it was inscribed as follows:

"'Please pass the butter. Thomas J. Meechin; brakeman, S. S. and T. Ry.'"—Harper's Weekly.

Ant Merchants.

Ant merchants, clad in leather underwear, are to be found in Paris, London and several other European cities. Wherever pheasants are preserved the ant merchant is in demand.

It is not, however, nuts, but the eggs of nuts, that the man chiefly deals in. From every part of Europe nuts are shipped to him, and he keeps them in vast runs—places similar in their nature to chicken runs—and he feeds and tends them carefully, so that their health will keep fine and they will lay generously.

The eggs he packs in wooden boxes and ships to various earls, dukes, counts and other game preserves in different parts of the world. And the ants themselves he slays as soon as they cease to lay, pressing them and selling them in block blocks similar to plug tobacco to dealers in birds and bird food.

It is interesting to be an ant merchant, but leather underwear is essential to the business, as the little creatures bite unmercifully.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Coincidence.

The strange story told by a defaulting debtor of his being recognized after he had been for six years trying to live down the past is not so strange a story as one which came within the ken of Professor Jowett. A good man went wrong, was caught and sentenced at Liverpool to imprisonment. After the sinner had served his term Jowett and others helped him, and he obtained a colonial editorship where his past was unknown. He did well; was a new man. One day a tornado swept off the roof of his office. Under the roof was discovered a batch of old English papers which had been placed there and forgotten after the mail had brought them. He set members of his staff to work to get out of the derelicts anything which might be interesting enough to print. The first thing that they found was a full report of the trial and conviction of the man himself, their editor, at Liverpool all those years before.—St. James' Gazette.

Pants and Trousers.

Everybody talks well when he talks in the way he likes, the way he can't help, the way he never thinks of. The rest is effort and pretense. The man who says "trousers" because he likes to say it and the man who says "pants" because he likes to say it are both good fellows with whom a frank soul could fraternize, but the man who says "trousers" when he wants to say "pants" is a craven and a truckler, equally hateful to honest culture and wholesome ignorance. He belongs in the same sordid category with the man who wears tight shoes and high collars that are a torment to the flesh, who eats olives that he doesn't relish and drinks uncongenial clarets in imitation of his genteel neighbor in the brownstone front.—Atlantic.

Book Evolution.

"Books" have progressed from the days when they were only wooden rods or bits of bark. For the derivation which connects "book" directly with "beech," both having been "boc" in Anglo-Saxon, is the favorite one. "Buchstaben," the German word for letters of the alphabet, means literally "beech staves." Many book words go back to such vegetable origin. The Latin "liber," a book, whence comes our "library," was properly the inner bark or rind of a tree, especially of papyrus. The Greek "biblion," whence "Bible" and "bibliophile," meant much the same thing. A "codex" was a block of wood, and "leaf" is obvious.

A Compromise.

A private soldier was taken to the guardroom for being intoxicated. He became excited. "Sergeant, am I drunk?" he asked of the "noncom" in charge.

"Yes—take off your boots," was the reply.

"But excuse me, sergeant," the delinquent continued, "I am only half drunk."

"Very well, then—take one boot off!" said his superior.—London Scraps.

Peculiarity of Madness.

Who can tell why it is that in madhouses the idea of subordination is very seldom to be found? Bedlam is inhabited only by kings, poets and philosophers.—Modern Messenger.

The Potato Storeroom.

The potato storeroom must be dark, cool, well ventilated and dry. There should be a double floor beneath where large quantities are piled together. There should also be opportunities for ventilation at the walls and at intervals through the pile.

Unintentional Sabbath Breaking.

In the early days of New England it was the custom to keep the Sabbath from sundown Saturday night until the same hour on Sunday. That this practice was attended by pitfalls is shown by an incident told in "The Papers of the Connecticut Valley Historical Society:"

There lived in Deerfield a thrifty dame, an enterprising, driving woman and a notable housewife. The good woman was not willing to lose Sunday evenings out of her catalogue of housework, but she was pious withal and strictly kept the day to the sunset limit. As soon as the sun was fairly below the horizon she would begin her washing and get her clothes ready for drying bright and early on Monday morning.

One cloudy Sunday she, supposing the day was ended, changed her Sunday gown, rolled up her sleeves and went to work. As she was scrubbing away in the kitchen, her face toward the west window, the clouds suddenly broke, and the great round sun shone in full on the poor Sabbath breaker at work. She gave one cry of amazement and horror and fled the kitchen.

After that sinful day she never began her work on Sunday evening.

Lincoln's Rules.

On one occasion President Lincoln on entering the telegraph office of the war department, writes Mr. Bates in "Lincoln in the Telegraph Office," was heard to remark to Secretary Seward, "By jings, governor, we are here at last!" Turning to him in a reproving manner, Mr. Seward said, "Mr. President, where did you learn that inelegant expression?" Without replying to the secretary, Lincoln addressed the telegraph operators, saying:

"Young gentlemen, excuse me for swearing before you. 'By jings' is swearing, for my good old mother taught me that anything that had a 'by' before it was swearing."

One day Secretary Seward, who was not renowned as a joker, said he had been told that a short time before on a street crossing Lincoln had been seen to turn out in the mud to give a colored woman a chance to pass.

"Yes," said Lincoln, "it has been a rule of my life that if people would not turn out for me I would turn out for them. Then you avoid collisions."

What He Meant.

Park row at 1 a. m. and a policeman and a sailor in conversation.

"Keyside, keyside!" said the sailor. "'Ow will I'l reach the bloomin' keyside?"

"G'wan wid ye. D'ye think I'm a locksmith, that I know about yer old key and its side? There's one key and lock I'll be after givin' ye, and that's to a cell. Move on now."

"Keyside! I'l said keyside as plain as I'l could, I'line!"

Just then a high brow who had been to the postoffice buying stamps so that his rejected contributions would come back to him stepped up.

"The man wants the keyside, whatever that is, and I dunno," said the policeman. "I believe he's looney and I'll run him in."

"He wants the quayside—the docks," said the high brow as he directed the man to the water front, while the policeman said:

"Well, I'll be blowed!"—New York Press.

A Slap at Mother.

Dinner was done, and the family was assembled in the sitting room. Mother had taken up the evening paper and was reading an account of how a highwayman had been operating in the suburbs. Father was down on his hands and knees trying to act like a horse while little Willie drove him around the floor.

"Papa," finally remarked the good lady, glancing toward her husband, "here is a story about another man who was waylaid. Do these holdups always stop you with a pistol and then go through your clothes?"

"Oh, no," grinfully replied father, arising from the floor. "Sometimes they wait until you hang your clothes over the back of a chair and go to sleep."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Nevertheless He Got Her.

"You say my daughter loves you?" questioned the old man.

"I'm sure of it," replied the young man.

"Well, well," returned the old man, looking the young man over critically, "There's no accounting for tastes, is there?"

And somehow, although the young man knew that he ought to be happy over the possession of the girl, he couldn't help scowling and speculating on that remark of the old man's.

Power of Deceiving.

There is a Brooklyn woman who possesses a servant who is a model in all respects save one—in that she is none too truthful.

Lately the mistress has been using all her eloquence to make Nora see the error of deceitfulness. But at last she had to own herself beaten when Nora, with a beaming smile, turned and in a most cajoling tone said:

"Sure, now, mum, an' wot de ye suppose the power of dessrin' was given us fer?"

Human deeds and human lives are never understood until they are finished. You can no more tell in advance how manhood will turn out than how a young child will grow up.

Dr. J. A. Carlstein and family of Chicago, arrived Monday to spend the summer. They are domiciled at the Washburn home on Park avenue. The doctor's health is very poor, but is better than a month ago.

At the interscholastic meet between the M. A. C. and Notre Dame, Small of Charlevoix, won the 120 yard hurdles in 16 seconds, lowering his own college record by 3-5 of a second. He also took second in the running broad jump.

We have heard during the past week complaints in regard to the scattering of waste paper on the streets and alleys, where the wind blows it every way. This is a matter which might well be taken under consideration by officials and citizens generally.

The barn belonging to Thomas Machett, in Norwood township, burned to the ground Tuesday night, together with ten ton of hay. The origin of the fire is a mystery. No insurance was carried. This is the third barn to burn on the same ground in the past ten years.

Mr. Fred Lanway and Miss Grace Nowland were married on Tuesday evening by Rev. W. W. Lamport. The event took place in the cottage they have been fixing up on the west side, and where they are now snugly situated and happy as such mortals usually are.—East Jordan Enterprise.

Friday night a party of eight young ladies of East Jordan, under charge of Mr. Lewis, Jr., started for Charlevoix but got stranded near the old river. W. C. Bellinger's boat went to their assistance, releasing them about two o'clock, at which time they met Messrs. Gidley and Warren of East Jordan, who were out hunting them up.

The story is told of a prominent Charlevoix county politician that one day while digging potatoes he came in the house and showed his wife a quarter which he had found. Going back and digging a while more he found another quarter. Then he laid down and went to sleep. When he awoke he found out that his wife had dug all the potatoes but no quarters were found.

JOLLY TRIP TO EAST JORDAN

Charlevoix Crowd of Young Ladies Had One Wednesday Night.

A jolly crowd of Charlevoix young ladies, chaperoned by Romeo Emrey, came up to East Jordan Wednesday evening on the launch Minnie S., ostensibly for a surprise party on Miss Maud, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Cross. Several of our young men "got wise" to the trip and proceeded to do the honors. After the party had met at the home of their host our young men secured the town hall where an impromptu dance was held and then the party adjourned to the Bricks Hotel where a mid-night supper was served. It was something after midnight when the young ladies departed for home. We understand the trip was made to offset a party which the Charlevoix young men held and to which none of the young ladies were invited. Those who comprised the boatload were: Chaperon Romeo Emrey, Misses Ruth and Lillian Emrey, Merle Felts, Mayfred Stacks, Mildred Johnson, Gertrude Heath, Lulu Jackson, Ruby Emory, Nita and Marie Mayne, Minnie Gleason, Marjorie Washburne, Amy Hureha, Miss Gilmore, Marion Harris, all of Charlevoix, and Miss Jennette Fryman of Petoskey. Capt. Smith and Clinton Cooper were in charge of the launch.—Herald.

Debating Contest

The debating contest last Friday evening at Harbor Springs between the local high school and Charlevoix high school was attended by a good audience, who were very much pleased with the debate which was very interesting. The judges chosen were Prof. H. M. Elliott and Judge Pailthorp, of Petoskey, and Prof. H. H. Ward, of Mancelona, who decided in favor of Harbor Springs.

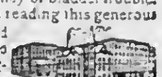
DO YOU GET UP WITH A LAME BACK?

Kidney Trouble Makes You Miserable

Almost everybody who reads the newspapers is sure to know of the wonderful cures made by Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It is the great medical triumph of the nineteenth century; discovered after years of scientific research by Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, and is wonderfully successful in promptly curing lame back, kidney, bladder, uric acid troubles and Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is not recommended for everything but if you have kidney, liver or bladder trouble it will be found just the remedy you need. It has been tested in so many ways, in hospital work, in private practice, among the helpless too poor to purchase relief and has proved so successful in every case that a special arrangement has been made by which all readers of this paper who have not already tried it, may have a sample bottle sent free by mail, also a book telling more about Swamp-Root and how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. The regular fifty cent and dollar sizes are sold by all good druggists.



Home of Swamp-Root.

Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

LEGAL NOTICES

Mortgage Foreclosure.

Whereas, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage dated the tenth day of April, 1903, executed by Adolph Kirchner and Mary A. Kirchner, his wife, to Citizens' State Bank of Whitewater, Wisconsin, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Charlevoix, Michigan, on liber thirty-seven of Mortgages on pages forty and forty-one, on the 27th day of April, 1903 at nine o'clock in the forenoon. And whereas, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of one thousand four hundred thirteen and sixty-five one-hundredths (1,413.65) dollars, the principal, interest, taxes and insurance, and the further sum of fifty dollars as an attorney fee, stipulated for in said mortgage, and which is the whole amount claimed to be due on said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted either in law or equity, to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the east front door of the court house in said county of Charlevoix, on the twenty-third day of July next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon on that day; which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to-wit: The south half (s½) of the north-east quarter (ne¼) of section eighteen (18) town thirty-two (32) north, of range six (6) west; and the north-west quarter (nw¼) of the south-east quarter (se¼) of section eighteen (18) town thirty-two (32) north, of range six (6) west.

Neighborhood Notes

It is probable that a gigantic electrical proposition for a series of dams of the Little Muskegon river and at a point near Howard City will be successfully promoted. The village councils of Morley, Pierson, Sand Lake and Cedar Springs have been asked to consider franchise propositions covering a term of 20 years. Plenty of capital, it is said, has been secured in Grand Rapids, and the towns to be affected by the plan.

The engineering firm of Bending & Bicknell is handling the proposition for the financiers, and for some months past, it is stated, options have been secured that assure all the flowage rights necessary to prosecute the plan.

Howard City is to be headquarters for the company, according to the present plans, and the main dam will be located about five miles from that city.

The Thayer-Lumber company have began shipping its mill and outfit to Muskegon, having finished a cut in Kalkaska county, and each day 24 car loads of logs have been taken out by the Pere Marquette and shipped to Muskegon. In its operations the company used two logging railroads. These have been taken up and the Pere Marquette station at Stratford will also vanish, there being no further need of a telegraph office there.

James Beere, one of the oldest residents of Elk Rapids, was killed at the plant of the Elk Cement and Lime company. Beere was at work in a conveyor at the foot of a trestle used for unloading rock and clay. A car had been unloaded at the head of the trestle and in shifting it got away from the crew and ran down the incline, striking Beere and passing over him, mutilating his body and killing him instantly.

That Cadillac will in a very short time have a turpentine factory is now an assured fact. A meeting of the Cadillac Turpentine company will be held in the near future. The new company will be capitalized at $150,000 and will be the largest industry in this part of the state. The turpentine will be secured from the old pine stumps that abound in that section.

It is expected it will make a boom in real estate and will also be a great benefit to the farmers. The factory which will be located in Cadillac is expected to open late this fall, but the pulling of the pine stumps will start in a short time. The factory will furnish employment to a large number of men, 200 being taken on at the start.

Articles of association of the Osceola Light and Power Company have been filed with the county clerk of Osceola county. This company is the successor to and takes over the the business of the former Reed City Electric Light Co., and is composed of three Cadillac men, Messrs. George D. Westover, E. J. Haynes and H. I. Millsbaugh. The office will be at Reed City. James H. and Cornelia I. Andrews have heretofore jointly owned the Reed City plant, but owing to not having the best of health, Mr. Andrews was compelled to withdraw from active work. The new company is capitalized at $30,000.

A change was made by the last legislature in the dates for holding the meetings of township boards of review. Formerly they were held in May, but now the first meeting will be held on the Tuesday after the first Monday of June and the second meeting will be held on the Monday following.

The thirty-fourth convention of the Michigan Women's Christian Temperance Union will be held at Bay City June 2 to 5. Mrs. Julia R. Parish, of Bay City, state corresponding secretary and editor of the state organ. The Michigan Union, has charge of the arrangements. Prominent state speakers will address the convention. A banquet will be given with Mrs. Anna S. Benjamine, of Portland, national parliamentarian and president of the Fifth district, officiating as toastmistress. Other features will be a department demonstration, an address by Prof. Samuel Dickie, also a diamond medal contest.

Nearly 50 unions have been added to the state organization during the past year. The active membership of the state numbers nearly 10,000. Mrs. Elmer L. Calkins, of Kalamazoo, will preside over the convention.

What Napoleon Owed a Drummer Boy

To Andre Etienne Napoleon owed a debt he could never repay. Andre was a drummer boy at the battle of Arcola. The canal at Arcola was Napoleon's Bulloom, for there it was decided that he and he alone should rise to unparalleled power, the phenix bird from the ashes of the terrible revolution. But he would not have won without Andre. His troops were ragged, footsore and half starved. The battle was going against him. All seemed lost. Suddenly Andre leaped into the canal and, holding his drum above his head, swam across and on the other bank beat an irresistible charge. The French soldiers rallied, and in a few moments Napoleon's great victory was assured. Thus by this lad's heroism were the fruits of his genius brought within the reach of the world's conqueror, for Arcola proved the turning point in his glittering career.

An Old Communion Service.

In the year 1706 the general assembly of the province of Maryland passed an act authorizing a levy on the taxable inhabitants of Somerset parish, Md., of 104,000 pounds of tobacco for the purpose of erecting the Somerset parish church. On Feb. 17, 1767, two lots were conveyed to the rector, Rev. Hamilton Bell, the vestry and wardens, and the church was erected during that year on its present site. In the year 1713 Queen Anne presented to this parish through William Stoughton a massive silver communion service, flagon, chalice and paten. On each piece is inscribed, "For the Use of Somerset Parish, In Somerset County, In the Province of Maryland, Per William Stoughton." Above the inscription are the letters "I. H. S." This communion service is much prized by the congregation. It is one of the three oldest in the United States.

And Thought It Cheap.

The veteran actor Macklin was intimate with Frank Hayman, the eminent historical painter, and happening to call on him one morning soon after the death of the painter's wife, with whom he had lived on indifferent terms, he found him wrangling with the undertaker about the extravagance of the funeral expenses. Macklin listened to the altercation for some time. At last, going up to Hayman, with great gravity he observed, "Come, come, Frank, though the bill is a little extravagant, pay it in respect to the memory of your wife, for, by heaven, sir, she would gladly have paid twice as much for you had she the same opportunity!"

Frailties of English Style.

One commentator has shown that in "Kenilworth" Scott had somebody's mother dying in infancy. Of course it could not have been the mother, but, then, Scott didn't say clearly which it was. Stevenson got off this one: "An advantage over whom he speaks with." Fielding, Thackeray, Lamb, Arnold, Lecky, Ruskin and Spencer sometimes forgot to put in their subject, but hurried on to the predicate. Some of these authors, it may be explained, were originally newspaper men and never got over bad habits. But Fielding, Scott, George Eliot, Macaulay, Lecky and Spencer never were reporters. Possibly the newspapers are not responsible for all the bad English in the world.—Minneapolis Journal.

A Winner.

An Irishman, becoming interested in the local excitement over cockfighting, decided to enter a bird in whose prowess he evidently had every confidence.

On the eventful day Pat arrived at the pit with a fat, sleek duck under his arm and, proudly setting it down before the slim adversary, remarked:

"Divil a bit can you thrip him up! Luk at that fut!"—Short Stories.

"I wonder why people always speak of the earth as she."

"It's natural enough. Nobody knows exactly what her age is."

THE FARMER CUTS A FIGURE.

The American farmer by brain and brawn has made this republic the granary of the nations, as the skilled mechanic has made it the workshop of the world.

In the last twenty-five years there has been a marvelous change in the farms themselves as well as in everything that goes to make the farm home life more comfortable and the farmer more skillful and successful in producing crops in quality and quantity unsurpassed. Byron in looking at Rome's ruins prophesied:

While stands the Coliseum,
Rome shall stand,
When falls the Coliseum,
Rome shall fall,
When Rome falls, the world.

Please substitute farmer for Coliseum and United States for Rome in the stanza and you read the truth. If you have scornfully termed the farmer "a hayseed" or a "Reuben," read it again and in the future be decent.

As the farmer seems to be sum total in producing breadstuffs, fruits, vegetables and dairy products, so it is also evident that he is something in the poultry world.

Cut the farmer out of the egg and poultry report's and behold the vast deficit!

There may be crude chicken methods and careless poultry keepers on some farms; but, kind reader, they will not all plead guilty to the following description, "not by a long shot."

Listen. The farms are decorated with speckled dunghill pheasants that are compelled to dig their living from frozen manure piles.

At night they sleep with the hogs, on the manger or with their crooked breastbones warm the wagon tire and the ancient grindstone.

"Oft in the stilly night" may be heard the last squawk of a Shanghai rooster as he is jerked off the fence by the odoriferous skunk, while the hoot of the long eared owl proclaims the sad requiem of some aged hen that snoozed in the sour apple tree.

Can any hen pen scratcher make us believe all that?

Some of these blue goggled cushion pressers are in most of facts, fresh air and a good square meal of brain and backbone producer, and the place to get these commodities is out on the farm, where most everything else good comes from.

The census gave the farmer credit for producing the greater part of the poultry product, as it mentioned his name in connection with other items that, entering into the big total from all sources, make Uncle Sam the richest ruler on God's footstool. "Better farm poultry, and more of it," is becoming the farmer's slogan, and, just as he is adopting every method to improve and increase his crops, so he is raising better fowls and adopting more advanced methods in poultry culture. But let him speak for himself:

THE FARMER HAS A WORD.

We farmers aren't poultrymen and make no pretension to the profession.

We are ripped up the back by some of the chicken fellows for our methods, but let them be careful to practice what they preach, and especially let some of them quit shoving old culls off on the farmers when they send cash orders.

Poultry with us is simply a family convenience. That our surplus should make us cut such a figure in the government poultry report is astonishing.

We are breeding more thoroughbred poultry, building more comfortable poultry houses and using artificial hatching and brooding, but our main pursuit is tilling the soil.

Farming, and especially intensive farming, requires more money and close application to book and soil than the old system.

As the population increases the demand becomes greater on us to produce more to the square inch than ever.

The people want bread more than chickens, turkeys and eggs, and the great American hen thrives better on the poultry farms where she has no crops to rip to pieces.

We are doing extensive trucking and strawberry growing. We can't jail hens all summer, for it doesn't pay.

The farmer's wife and daughters are needed at other employment, so if the chicken business gradually falls into the hands of the professionals don't be surprised.

The professionals are continually harping at us to go into the poultry business.

If we did, there would be less feed. The price would advance. Then they'd yell louder.

If we went into the business, were successful and prospered, then they would turn and call us bad names and tell us to stick to farming and mind our own business.

We farmers shall strive to advance in all lines that are conducive to bring success to our main purpose, which is to scientifically till the soil, provide the people with breadstuffs and to keep the United States at the head of the nations of the world in cereal production.

REMOVING STAINS.

How to Clean Soiled Garments of Different Materials.

No spot or stain can be removed from any kind of material unless there is a backing to absorb the fluid as it is rubbed in. Failing this, the cleansing agent necessarily spreads over the surface to which it is being applied, carrying the soil stain with it.

Another requisite is fresh cloths to rub with, for as soon as one is soiled it should be rejected, for a cleansing agent immediately loosens dirt, and everything in contact with it becomes soiled, and unless all rags affected are at once laid aside the original stain is spread, and the final condition is worse than the first.

As a background for this cleansing process, use a board about eight inches wide and twelve inches long. This is not inconvenient to hold in one's lap. It should be covered with a thick flannel, like blanketing, and then padded with a piece of thick, strong cotton. Unbleached muslin is the best for this purpose, and there should be three or four of these cloths constantly in use. The flannel must be tacked on, but the top cover left so that it can be removed as fast as it is stained. The object of this board is to give a firm base on which to rub. The covers act as absorbents.

For all kinds of cleaning, except heavy cloth, such as men's garments, white flannel is the best thing with which to rub. The piece should be big enough to hold firmly and turn several times to get a fresh spot while using.

For the cleanser a small flaring basin is most convenient, and if gasoline, etc., is employed only a few spoonfuls should be poured out at a time. As soon as it shows dirt it must be thrown away, the bowl wiped and fresh fluid poured in.

With these ready for work the spot to be cleaned is stretched smoothly over the board, and the first cloth dipped into the bath. Instead of rubbing from the center of the spot outward, which spreads the stain, it is better to begin at the outer rim and work toward the middle. The cleaning cloth should be turned constantly to a fresh spot, and as soon as all has been used it must be laid aside and another one taken.

The material being cleaned must be constantly moved on the board to a fresh place when applying the bath. One sees the reason for this, for the first wetting sends soil and moisture through to the background, and unless the garment is moved from these spots the dirt which was rubbed out will be worked back into the fabric. When the unbleached cotton has been stained, the cover should be removed and a fresh one substituted. When beginning to rub dry, it is well to have a new undercover.

If, even with the best effort, there is a ring left after the goods are dry, a steaming kettle will remedy the trouble, always provided that the ring is not dirt, but simply the line of previous moisture. The ring may be held before the nose of a boiling teakettle, changing the fabric until the entire line has been well steamed. Then, after drying in the sun, the ring will vanish.

Naphtha and gasoline are among the best cleansing agents for silks and satin. Ether is excellent for velvet, rubbing it on lightly and quickly. For cloth soapy water in which there is ammonia is most efficacious. With this, however, care must be taken that all the soapy water is removed by a final brushing with hot water in which there is ammonia. A small scrub brush is best for this last kind of cleaning.

The garment should be pressed after a large surface has been cleaned.

How to Grow Fine Sweet Peas.

A rich sandy loam, good Oregon grown seed, enthusiasm, good culture, a well drained situation, will produce fine sweet peas. Excavate trenches the width of a shovel to the depth of a foot. Fill in a couple of inches with broken stone, on which put the soil, which should be of the richest possible sandy loam. Use no manure unless it is well rotted—a soil that has been heavily manured the year before is an ideal one. Plant the seed in a double row, four inches apart and three inches apart in the row. Merely press the seed beneath the surface, and when the plants have caught on the wire netting between the rows pull the soil up around them, but keep it loose. Cultivate with the hoe often, and after the buds appear, if weather is dry, water freely and spray the vines with a hard stream to keep down the red spider if it appears.

How to Take Bran Baths.

Bran baths are said to be good for nervous people. They have an extremely softening effect upon the skin. Ordinary bran may be bought at a feed store and used as desired. A cheesecloth bag containing about a quart and a half or two quarts should be filled medium full with bran. This bag will do for two baths. The water should be quite warm, and the bag should be put into it and thoroughly soaked and squeezed until the water is brown and full of bubbles. One should stay in the bath for a few minutes only. Massage of the entire body after the bath is beneficial, but one should rest for at least ten minutes between the massage and bath.

The Bishop—My dear, I do wish you wouldn't sign those "Home Hints" that you are sending to the papers.

His Wife—Why not?

The Bishop—Well, I notice that in the title of your "What to Do For a Burn" the printer has left the "r" out of the final word.—Puck.

The psaltery of Spain is supposed to have been introduced into that country by the Moors. It is still in use among the peasants.

The New Mayor
Based on G. H. Broadhurst's Successful Play

The Man of The Hour

By ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE.

Copyright, 1906, by George H. Broadhurst.

of that interview he had staked his all. In it he was to have received the half pledged reward for his months of toil and achievement.

Yet in view of his present relations toward Wainwright he could not, of course, visit the financier's home. The doors of the house that contained the woman he loved had been barred to him. And Dallas—what must she have thought of his failure to call?

CHAPTER VIII.

"I'VE found out who their fourteenth man is, your honor," whispered Phelan in high excitement. "It's Roberts—Richard P. Roberts of the Third. He's the alderman that Horrigan's trying to put the Indian sign on. We've got to nail him if we can."

"You're sure it's Roberts?" asked Bennett in the same undertone.

The administration hall was in full swing. Mayor and alderman had chanced to meet for a moment in a big, crowded reception foyer just off the ballroom.

"Am I sure it's Roberts?" echoed Phelan. "Am I sure? Might as well ask me am I sure Cheaty Dick Horrigan is crooked. I've got the facts down straight. Them secret service chaps of mine"—

"If they get Roberts—they will be able to pass the bill"—

"They ain't goin' to get him if Jimmy Phelan's hand don't turn out to be all deuces an' trays. 'An' "—

"Keep an eye on him and don't let him go away without my knowing it. I must see him tonight and learn positively how he stands in regard to the matter. He has a reputation for being honest. If only"—

"Here's Alwyn, Mrs. Bennett," came Perry Wainwright's voice from the doorway. "In here. Say, your honor, your honorable honor's honored mother has been looking everywhere for you. And now that I've rescued the long lost mayor and his anxious mamma I'll chase off and find my partner for the next waltz. I wish it was Cynthia. Ever dance with Cynthia, Alwyn? Poetry of motion and all that. Like a swan or—or a—oh, good evening, alderman. I didn't see you? Are you dancing tonight?"

"Dancin'?" repeated Phelan in high disgust. "Do I look it? It's had enough to be harnessed into this open faced suit that feels like I was goin' to slip through of it every minute, without tryin' to dance too. At a show of this kind I feel like a pair of yellow shoes at a fun'ral. So long, your honor. Even', Mrs. Bennett. There's the music startin', son," he added to Perry as he started for the ballroom.

"I heard it," said the lad, "but I'm in no wild hurry."

"Thought you said you had a partner to look up."

"I have—one of Judge Newman's daughters. Ever see her? I thought not or you wouldn't have wondered why I wasn't in a hurry. Better late than"—

"Are you having a good time, mother?" Bennett was asking the little old lady as he found a seat for her.

"Yes," she answered. "Aren't you?"

"Of course I am. Why do you ask?"

The foyer was thinning out as people trooped to the ballroom. For the moment mother and son were alone together.

"You aren't having a good time, Alwyn," she contradicted gently. "You're unhappy about something. Tell me."

"Nonsense!" he denied, with a forced laugh. "I"—

"You are thinking of Dallas, my boy. Is anything wrong between you and her? What has happened?"

"Nothing," he answered sullenly. But the mother was not content. Her heart ached for the grief her son was trying to hide.

"Something has happened, Alwyn," she declared, "and I want to know what, so that I can help you. You love her. And that day she came back from Europe I felt sure she loved you. What is holding you two apart?"

"Nothing that can be helped."

"But you never go to see her or"—

"How can I? You know my attitude toward her uncle. How can I call on her while she is in his house? I exposed his relations toward the Borough Street railway franchise bill. I am fighting him and his iniquitous bill with every means in my power! Dallas lives"—

"I hadn't thought of that. You poor boy! But surely"—

"And something more. Her money and Perry's are invested in Borough stocks. By beating that bill I seem outwardly to be willfully wrecking their fortune. I told you the plan I arranged with Perry to avert this, but she doesn't know of that. And"—

"Why don't you tell her, then? Or let me tell her?"

"Because it isn't her gratitude I want. I want her to love me."

"But don't you see in the meantime what a weapon you are putting into Mr. Wainwright's hands? Suppose he tells Dallas of your enmity to him and lets her know you are seemingly toying to impoverish her and her brother? He might prejudice her terribly against"—

"I've thought of all that. I must be content to wait. Next Friday the revised Borough bill comes up before the aldermen again for the final fight. When it's settled one way or the other I can go to her and explain. Meantime"—

"Meantime she is here tonight with Mr. Wainwright. Have you seen her?"

"Only for a minute."

"Did she treat you with the same friendliness, the same interest, as of old? Don't think I'm inquisitive, dear. I only ask all these questions because I love you."

"I know," he answered, pressing her hand as it lay on his arm, "yet I can hardly answer you, for I hardly know. In her presence I am not at ease because I can't tell her everything, and she seems ill at ease because she knows there's something I don't tell her. Oh, it's a wretched position for us both."

"Then why don't you clear it up?"

"Then why don't you clear it up?"

"By going to her and saying: 'Dallas, I am exposing your uncle as a blackguard and am destroying your fortune and Perry's. Will you marry me?' These are the facts; but, thank God, it's only till Friday. After that I can go to her and make it all clear."

Before Mrs. Bennett could reply Perry returned to the ballroom, Cynthia at his side.

"Then why not give me the next one, too?" the lad was pleading. "If one twostep's good, two twosteps are twice as good. Please"—

"But—see," expostulated Cynthia, showing him her card. "The next is Mr. Gibbs'. I've told you that twice."

"I wish Gibbs all the luck in the world," observed Perry benevolently, as he deposited Cynthia on a fauteuil beside her chaperon, Mrs. Bennett. "I wish him so much good luck that if he'd slip and break both his legs I'd pay for a cab to take him home."

"Look out, please!" begged Cynthia. "He's coming."

"The next is ours, I think, Miss Garrison," said Gibbs, entering from the ballroom with Dallas on his arm. "I hope we'll have better fortune than Miss Wainwright and I. My step does not seem to suit hers tonight."

"No, I'm afraid the fault was mine," protested Dallas. "I'm a little tired, I think. May I sit here with you a few minutes, Mrs. Bennett?" she added as Gibbs bore Cynthia away for their dance.

"You don't seem very fond of Mr. Gibbs, Perry," observed Mrs. Bennett, noting young Wainwright's scowl of impotent wrath.

"Not fond enough to make me want to live in the same world with him, Mrs. Bennett, you're too pretty to be just a chaperon. Come and dance this twostep with me. Please do!"

He nodded with vast significance toward Dallas and Bennett, and the little old lady, catching the idea, accepted with alacrity.

"I'm so glad even to get this minute with you," began Alwyn when he and Dallas were alone. "It's so long since"—

"Since you came to see me? Yes, but that is your fault. Alwyn, why haven't you called since I came home?"

"Don't you know why, Dallas?"

"No."

"Are you certain you don't know?"

"I—I don't know absolutely," she faltered. "Oh, there are so many things I don't know absolutely!"

"What is one of them?"

"For one thing, you and I used to be such good friends and"—

"That is past," said Alwyn firmly. "There can be no talk of mere friendship between you and me, Dallas. I must be everything or nothing to you. Tonight I can't speak as I want to, but I can in a very few days. Trust me till then. You know I am fighting Mr. Wainwright's interests and"—

"Yes," she replied bitterly. "My uncle gives me no chance to forget that."

"Don't think I'm fighting him for my own amusement! I must oppose him or else give up a fight that I set out to win. And I mean to win it!"

"That's the same old fighting spirit I used to try so hard to awaken in you," said Dallas, a faint note of admiration in her rich voice. "I told you once it always took a blow to arouse you. That blow has evidently been struck."

"It has been struck!" he acquiesced, with a sad ghost of a smile.

She saw the haggard lines about his mouth, the tired look in his eyes, and a lump came into her throat. She leaned forward impulsively, but before she could speak he had unknowingly thrown away the golden moment by continuing:

"I must win this fight even though it affects others besides Mr. Wainwright. Even if"—

"What others do you mean?"

"Oh, I can't explain now. After Friday I can. On Saturday may I come to see you and tell you everything?"

"Why not now?"

"There are obstacles that"—

"Tell me what they are!" she begged.

"I can't. All I can tell you now is that I love you. I love you above all the world, sweetheart, and"—

But fate in the dual guise of Horrigan and Wainwright intervened. The financier and the boss, seeking some quiet spot for a chat, strolled through the foyer, where Horrigan on sight of Bennett halted with a glower of dislike, which he took no pains to conceal.

CHAPTER IX.

THE moment of strained silence that ensued upon Horrigan's entrance was broken by the irrepressible Perry, who, having rescued Cynthia from Gibbs at the close of their dance, was escorting her triumphantly from the ballroom.

"This is my dance," he remarked happily to Alwyn as he came up, "and we're going to sit it out. If Mrs. Bennett in her capacity of chaperon should ask for Cynthia, you can tell her we're going into the glass house to stroll among the romantic vegetables."

And he departed with his prize in the direction of the conservatory. The moment's interruption had sufficed for Wainwright to whisper an admonitory word in Horrigan's ear. Dallas, too, fearing a clash, took Bennett's arm.

"It's so warm in here!" she murmured. "Perhaps we can find better air in one of the other rooms. Shall we try?"

"Wainwright," exclaimed Horrigan, as the portieres closed behind the mayor and girl, "I don't like that! Is your niece on his side or with us?"

"I don't know," answered Wainwright discontentedly, "and I don't like to force an issue by asking her. It doesn't especially matter, I suppose. In any case, I can trust her."

"You're in luck!" sneered Horrigan. "That makes two people you say you can trust—first your secretary, Thompson, and then— Hello!" he broke off as a swarthy middle aged man hurried in. "Looking for me, Williams? What's up?"

The newcomer was visibly excited, and at first glance Horrigan had seen that something was amiss.

"What's up?" repeated the boss.

"Ellis has gone—deserted!" cried Williams.

"Ellis!" echoed Wainwright in dismay, for the man of whom Williams spoke was one of the aldermanic "solid thirteen" on whom Horrigan counted. The boss made no comment, but waited impatiently for his henchman to continue.

"Ellis has gone," repeated Williams. "He left a note for me saying his wife is very ill and the doctor's ordered him to take her south. So he can't attend Friday's meeting."

"Can't attend the meeting?" gasped Wainwright. "But everything depends on"—

"Oh, he'll be on hand, the cur!" growled Horrigan. "The rest are standing solid of course?"

"I think so," hazarded Williams, "but some of 'em are pretty scared. We've never had such a fight before as Bennett's putting up against us now, and"—

Courier Grange Column

Wilson Grange No. 719.

Wilson Grange No. 719, met Saturday evening, May 23, with all officers present.

In business session the grange decided to order, at once, Iron grange contract firm, 125 pounds of paris green.

Master appointed as committee for handling special sick benefit fund, Brothers A. R. Nowland, Fred Holland and George Todd, same to be furnished later with rules.

Recess.

Called to order in third degree for initiation of candidates, four of whom were initiated in third and fourth degrees.

After initiation a program of music and literature was rendered and appreciated by the members.

Grange closed in due form by Worthy Master Robert Shephard.

Members present 11. No visitors.

Correspondent failed to last report to state announcement of finance committee of balance on hand of $33.00.

Members were pleased to greet our Worthy Brother Richard Lewis, of Charlevoix, at this meeting.

Lecturer announces next meeting's program will consist of spelling match, naming Brothers George Todd and H. Batterbee as leaders.

The next meeting will be held June 13. We will be glad to meet and greet any visitors from any grange in the United States. This is an important factor in grange life. We want to learn more about the successes and failures of our fraternity. Let us visit our neighbors and profit by each others experience.

The past year has been a very prosperous one for Wilson grange. While we have not had a phenomenal growth, our membership has steadily increased. We have also learned a few things about handling our own cash crops and are going to try again during the season of 1908.

In handling our potatoes the lesson was this; All plant the same kind, the round white ones of Rural New Yorker type, and ship no damaged stock.

Come and see us and we will talk the matter over.

Barnard Grange No. 689.

Barnard grange No. 689 met Wednesday, May 20, with fifteen present. Grange opened in fourth degree by Worthy Master S. Godbold.

The principal business was ordering binder twine and paris green.

Declared by a vote of all present, to hold grange every four weeks through the summer season.

Master declared recess, grange marched down in the basement, where a supper was awaiting them.

After the course of fifteen minutes the grangers appeared to feel better.

Master called grange to order in the fourth degree. After the transaction of some business, grange closed in regular form to meet again in four weeks.

FROM MARION.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Bogart of Charlevoix visited at Nat Burns Sunday.

The county normal class visited some of the Marion schools last Wednesday.

Ellis Crandall, and wife visited his brother Eugene and family last week.

Ammon Beers and wife of Advance, spent Sunday at William Withers.

Florence McClellan of Hayes, visited friends and schoolmates in Marion a few days last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Ingalls and daughter Nellie, visited relatives in Banks Sunday.

Little Bertha Smith gave a birthday party last Saturday in honor of her fourth anniversary, to a large crowd of her little friends. Many presents were received and refreshments were served.

Received High Compliment.

Miss Hazel M. Washburn, who arrived last week from Detroit to spend the summer season with her father, A. T. Washburn, received a high compliment when her portrait was awarded the $1,000 prize in the Eastman Kodak Company contest. This company is now using this portrait as the "Enstmnn Kodak Girl," their leading advertisement for 1908, appearing in full pages in the leading magazines, among which are included Collier's, Woman's Home Companion and Ladies' Home Journal for June.—Petoskey Evening News, May 21.

How to Clean Wall Paper.

Wall paper that has a smoky or grimy look can be brightened with a powder preparation which frequently removes even very objectionable marks. Make a mixture of equal parts of cornstarch, whiting and fuller's earth and with a soft cheesecloth or any cotton rag dip it into the powder and carefully go over the paper, rubbing vigorously, but not enough to injure the print. Change the cloth as it gets badly soiled, after which wipe the walls with large pieces of cotton rags or cheesecloth. An old worn tablecloth torn into pieces will do for dust cloths. For very delicate tints put the powder in a gauze bag—an old piece of veiling will do—and carefully wipe down the walls with the powder bag. Put newspapers on the floor to catch the dust which falls. A thin paste of fuller's earth and ammonia will often remove bad grease marks, cover the spot, but do not rub it. When dry, carefully brush off the dust.

How to Paper Calcimined Walls.

Rooms whose walls have been whitewashed or calcimined present a difficult problem when one wishes to paper them. The usual method is to size the walls with a sticky preparation of molasses, vinegar, milk or glue to "kill" the lime so that the paper will stick. A much better way that has proved perfectly satisfactory is to simply wet up the usual paste with vinegar instead of water and add 5 cents' worth of glue for each ordinary sized room. Brush the walls well with a dry broom to remove any dust or loose particles, put on the paper in the usual way and be assured that it will stay there.

How to Test Potatoes.

To test potatoes cut the raw vegetable in two and rub the halves together. If the moisture on rubbing is great enough to wet the potato will be soggy and set when cooked. A potato that will be dry and mealy when cooked will give a good rich froth, while a poor one will show only a watery froth by the same rubbing action. Moreover, the two pieces or halves will stick together if the potato is a good one. Of course the whole process is to test the amount of starch in the potato, and the more starch the better the potato.

St. Patrick and the Roosters.

St. Patrick's reputation as a snake charmer is known all the world over, but what he did to the roosters is a bit of history less disseminated. There is a small district in the heart of County Sligo, it seems, which strenuously resented the intrusion of the Scotchman. Sucest (St. Patrick) had become exceedingly domineering, and it was decided to put a damper on his progress. He said to his hostess, "Wake me when the cock crows." When he had gone to bed she whispered this command to the neighbors, and all the populace concealed their roosters under small creels so they could not lift their heads high enough to crow. In consequence thereof the saint overslept himself and was furious when he discovered the trick that had been played on him. He laid his everlasting curse on the roosters of that district, and they have never crowed since.—Exchange.

The Number Fourteen in France.

So far as France is concerned, it is the number fourteen that has played a conspicuous and generally portentous part in her history. On May 14, 1554, the Rue de la Perronnerie was enlarged by order of Henri II., and four times fourteen years later Henri IV. was assassinated there by Ravaillac—namely, on May 14, 1610. Henri had lived four times fourteen years, fourteen weeks and four times fourteen days—i. e., fifty-six years and five months. Then Henri's son, Louis XIII., died May 14, 1643 (the same day and month as his fathers). And 1643 added together equals fourteen, just as 1553 (the year of the birth of Henri IV.) equals fourteen. Louis XIV ascended the throne 1643, which added together equals fourteen and similarly the year of his death (1715) equals.

The Doctor at Sea.

A veteran naval surgeon, speaking of the odd things that crop out in the service, said that one of the younger medical cranks in the navy discovered much virtue in sea water, and no matter what disease came on his first action was to throw down the patient's throat a large dose of the nauseating liquid. The crew soon learned to hate him thoroughly. In process of time he fell overboard in a choppy sea, and a great bustle ensued. In the midst of it the captain came up and anxiously inquired the cause. "Oh, nothing, sir," replied a tar, "only the doctor has fell into his medicine chest!"

Fooling the Youngster.

"Mother," said Mr. Popley guardedly to his wife, "why not take the y-o-u-n-g-s-t-e-r to the m-a-t-t-i-n-e-e tomorrow?"

"Pa," chimed in the youngster quietly, "there's only one 't' in 'matinee.'"

CLEANING OILY HAIR.

How to Treat the Scalp For This Defect.

In washing an oily scalp special treatment is necessary if the abnormal condition of the glands that causes the excess of oil is to be checked. Before beginning the shampoo rub into the scalp to absorb the oil a mixture made of one ounce of soft water and one raw egg beaten together. Then wash the scalp with clear warm water.

Another excellent cleanser for oily hair is made from quillia bark. To one-half pint of boiling water add one-half ounce of quillia bark, that may be bought at any druggist's. Let this stand, but not on the stove, until cool. Shake at intervals. Strain and use as soap.

Equal parts of green soap and cologne make an excellent shampoo for a scalp with distended glands. The preparation should stand for twenty-four hours, shaking occasionally.

Any one of these three cleaning agents should be selected by a woman who is afflicted with oily hair, and it is worth while repeating that under no condition should shampooing be done oftener than once in three weeks, and once a month is apt to give more beneficial results.

A mistake frequently made in treating oily scalps is the use of tonics that are overastringent, for these will contract the glands too quickly, having precisely the same effect that hot drying applications cause.

An excellent tonic to be put on every night in connection with massage of the scalp is made of two drams each of spirits of rosemary, spirits of thyme and alcoholic tincture of cantharides, one dram of bicarbonate of soda, one dram of oil of mace, seven drops each of oils of bitter and almond and half an ounce each of alcohol, ammonia and cologne. Into the cologne put the three oils and dissolve the soda in the first two spirits.

Mix the two combinations and add the tincture and ammonia last. If the total quantity does not make five ounces, add cologne until that measure is complete. Should there be any soreness of the scalp this cannot be used, as the ammonia will cause a smarting.

In its place may be applied a tonic made of one-half ounce of alcoholic tincture of cantharides, three-quarters of an ounce each of spirits of rosemary, glycerin and aromatic vinegar and one and one-half ounces of rosewater.

How to Cook Rice.

Few housewives understand how to cook rice so that it puffs into a snowy mass, each kernel distinct. I have found a way, says a writer in Harper's Bazar. First wash it thoroughly through several cold waters, rubbing the kernels between the hands. This is to remove all the loose flour on the outside of the grains. After the water runs clear turn the rice into a colander and drain; then put it into a deep stewpan, allowing one quart of boiling water to a cup of washed rice. Add a teaspoonful of salt and allow it to come to a good boil. Cook steadily for twenty minutes, lifting the rice occasionally with a fork to prevent its sticking. Shake the kettle also for the same purpose, but never stir or mash with a spoon. Take it from the fire, pour off the water if any is left and place it on the back of the stove in the oven or even over a pot of hot water until it finishes swelling. Cooked in this way you will find the rice plump, light and white, each grain distinct and separate.

The Buckboard.

"There are few persons who know how the name of 'buckboard' came to be applied to a vehicle," says a writer. "It was away back in the twenties, when the transportation of goods, wares and merchandise was almost entirely by wagon. A Dr. Buck was then in charge of military stores en route to army posts in the southwest. In east Tennessee much difficulty was experienced by reason of the rough roads, and there were frequent mishaps, mostly from wagons overturning. Dr. Buck overhauled the outfit, and, abandoning the wagon bodies, long boards were set directly on the axles or hung below, and the stores were loaded in such a manner that there were no further delays from breakdowns, and the stores safely reached their destinations. In special emergency, too, the load could be shifted or taken off in a hurry. Dr. Buck's example was followed, especially when roads were rough, and soon much hauling was done by the use of wheels, axles and boards only. Now we have the buckboard, both in carriage and automobile forms, conforming closely to the original idea, though few suspect the source of it."—Chicago News.

Technical Swearing.

The late Sir John Millais was a very keen fisherman. He used to tell a story of an old man who was his attendant during a day's sport in the north of England. The old man was full of local gossip and small scandal, and where the natural supply failed him he was clearly able to manufacture enough of his own to go on with. "I were out with the bishop yesterday," said the old man, referring to a popular church dignitary, who is also a good fisherman. "Ah," replied Millais, "he's a good man." "Well," continued the old fellow, "'e may be, but 'e do swear a bit when 'e's fishin'." "Oh, nonsense!" replied Millais. "I don't believe that." The old man insisted that he was right, however. "I'll give you an instance," he said. "I was standin' 'longside o' the bishop, same as I might be aside o' you, and 'e'd got a big fellow at the end of 'is line that was pretty nigh pullin' 'im off 'is feet, and I turns to 'is lordship and I says, "'E pulls — 'ard, don't he?" and the bishop says, "Yes, 'e do." Well, now, ain't that swearin'?"—London M. A. P.

A Lesson In Grammar.

In a certain mountainous region the teachers are appointed with little question concerning their grammatical orthodoxy. Occasionally, however, a wave of school reform sweeps through the valleys, and undesired examinations are thrust upon embarrassed pedagogues.

It was during one of these periods of intellectual discomfort that the following sentence was given: "The bird flew over the house." Accompanying it was the query, "Is 'flew' a regular or an irregular verb?"

One teacher after another shook his head hopelessly despite the slow, thought inspiring fashion in which the examiner repeated the perplexing fact that "The — bird — flew — over — the — house."

Finally a man rose in the rear, and, with the assurance of one who puts his trust in logic and a practical knowledge of natural history, he volunteered a solution. Said he:

"If that bird which flew over the house was a wild goose, it went in a straight, regular line, so the verb is regular. But if it was a peckwood that flew over the house, then it went in a crooked, zigzag line, and so the verb is irregular."

All but the grammar bound examiner were satisfied with this sensible and rational explanation. — Youth's Companion.

Artistic Slips.

It is a frequent matter of lamentation on the part of artists that one of their number may spend genius and time on a piece of work, only to fall conspicuously in small detail.

There is a story that one Royal academician gave a hand five fingers and a thumb and that another painted a five lobster bright red.

The clever Goodall had been engaged in painting a number of laborers dragging a huge stone across the desert when a man of science entering the studio said to him: "I say, Goodall, if you want those fellows to pull that stone you must double their number. It would require just twice as many for the task."

But it is not modern painters alone who slip up on points of accuracy. Even Albrecht Durer in a scene representing Peter denying Christ painted one of the Roman soldiers in the act of smoking. Turner put a rainbow beside the sun, and in another picture he got fearfully tangled in the ship's rigging.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Fixing a Photografter.

Senator Stone of Missouri once made himself unpopular with a certain photographer. The latter individual appeared at the senator's room at the capitol and announced that he was there to take a picture. Stone expostulated, but in vain. A few days later the photographer again appeared and presented the pictures and also a bill for $10. Remembering how hopeless was his argument against having the picture taken, Senator Stone decided it would be still more useless for him to decline to pay for them. So he wrote a check. After the man's name was on the check he wrote the word "Photografter."

When the man presented the check at the senate disbursing office for payment, he was required to indorse the check and write after his name, just as it was written on the face of the check, the word "Photo-grafter."—St. Louis Republic.

Greatest Corn States.

All the states that produced more than 100,000,000 bushels of corn in 1907 were Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri and Texas. It is worthy of remark that the only other state which produced up to the limit mentioned was the youngest state of all—namely, Oklahoma—and that her corn crop for 1907 is set down at 113,267,000 bushels.

Imports of Nuts.

In the eleven months ended November, 1907, nuts to the value of $9,459,761 were imported into the United States. Of this total almonds represented 27 per cent, walnuts 23 per cent and cocoanuts 14 per cent.

A Limit to His Power.

A curious historical anecdote is handed down from the time of James I. James, being in want of £20,000, applied to the corporation for a loan. The corporation refused. The king insisted. "But, sire, you cannot compel us," said the lord mayor. "No," exclaimed James, "but I'll ruin you and the city forever. I'll remove my courts of law, my court itself and my parliament to Winchester or to Oxford and make a desert of Westminster, and then think what will become of you!" "May it please your majesty," replied the lord mayor, "you are at liberty to remove yourself and your courts to wherever you please; but, sire, there will always be one consolation to the merchants of London—your majesty cannot take the Thames along with you!"

Garrick's Wit.

David Garrick on one occasion passed Tyburn as a huge crowd was assembling to witness the execution of a criminal. "Who is he?" asked the great actor of a friend who accompanied him.

"I believe his name is Nowel," was the reply.

"Ah," said Garrick, "I wonder which of the vowels he is, for there are several. At all events it is certain that it is neither I nor U."—London Saturday Review.

Quite Natural.

"Of course," said the tourist, "you know all about the antidotes for snake bites?"

"Certainly," replied the explorer.

"Well, when a snake bites you what's the thing you do?"

"Yell."—Philadelphia Press.

"Bummer."

When people are trying to be very polite in their language they avoid the use of the word "bummer," yet it is a most respectable word and is not slang by any means. It is not even an "Americanism," but has come to us from our English relatives and is found in the English market bylaws of two centuries ago. In the form "bummaree" it appears in advertisements in the Publick Intelligencer of 1660. Originally it meant a fish peddler. You are likely to get your head shrieked, however, if you mention it to an honest American citizen of that occupation now. The United States did not acquire the word until the early fifties, when it appeared in California.—New York World.

CHARLEVOIX COUNTY NORMAL CLASS

Commencement Exercises Occur Friday Night at M. E. Church

ADDRESS BY STATE SUPT. WRIGHT

Class Day Exercises at M. E. Church Thursday Evening

Eloquent Baccalaureate Sermon by Rev. R. A. Wright on "Woman and Her Opportunities."

This week will be a busy one for the members of the Charlevoix County Normal class. The class this year is composed of ten young ladies as follows: Mayme Scroggie, president; Annie M. Metcalf, vice-president; Leah M. Persons, secretary and treasurer; Bessie E. Cramer; Lola M. Cross; Julia Baucroit; Alma Francis; Grace Meggison; Grace Hamlin and Minnie A. Williams. Their motto is "Push back your horizon." Class colors, blue and gold.

Sunday evening, Rev. R. A. Wright delivered the baccalaureate sermon to the class at M. E. church, taking his text from the fourth chapter of Esther, "Surely thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this." The subject was "Women and her opportunities." Mr. Wright outlined the new opportunities, which have been opened to women in recent years, speaking of the great improvement which had taken place in the life of business men since their offices had began to be shared with women workers.

The opportunity which was offered to them as teachers, as molders of the character of our boys and girls was eloquently potrayed, but for all he regarded their greatest opportunity as Queens of the home but to whatever kingdom one may be called, he urged all to do their duty and do it well.

Special music was provided through the kindness of Mrs. A. J. Davidson, Mrs. A. L. Coulter and Claire Coulter.

The class night program will be in the form of a lyceum and will be given in the M. E. church Thursday evening, June 4 at 8 p. m. The following program will be given:

AUTOMOBILE NEWS

Lon Hanshew Not The Only One Who Has His Troubles.

Since Lon Hanshew bought his automobile he has been joshed considerable, especially since he took his son-in-law fishing. When it came time to go home Lon could not get the engine to going. After working until both of them were tired out, they telephoned to Theodore Erickson to come out. Erickson went out and had no trouble in getting the machine running. Lou's friends got hold of it and gave him the laugh. But Lou can laugh when it comes his turn. Last Monday night a party of four men, Will Campbell, O. D. Hammond, Milo Miller and E. B. Ward went to Petoskey in Ward's automobile. On the return trip the machine broke down and the party "hoofed it in." Why not start a "Weston Walking Club" in this city?

WAS INSTANTLY KILLED TUESDAY

August Bergman of Wilson Township, Blown to Pieces.

BY A HEAVY CHARGE OF DYNAMITE

While Blowing Out Stumps on His Farm—An Old Resident.

Was Alone at the Time, His Wife Having Gone to Boyne City—Funeral Will be Held Thursday.

Tuesday morning, about eight o'clock, August Bergman, of Wilson township, was instantly killed, while engaged in blowing out stumps with dynamite on his farm on section 21 in that township.

Mr. Bergman left his house early in the morning, taking with him, ten pounds of dynamite for the purpose of blowing out stumps.

Mrs. Bergman went to Boyne City to do some trading, returning and preparing dinner. Mr. Bergman not coming to the house, she went out to find him and found his body badly blown to pieces.

Neighbors heard the explosion about eight o'clock, and it is supposed that while engaged in work around a large elm stump, he in some way, dropped his sledgehammer on the whole amount of dynamite.

Mr. Bergman had been a resident of that section for several years and was a highly respected citizen.

The funeral will be held at the German church in the Knop settlement, Thursday.

He leaves no family except his wife.

The Salvation Army Special Services

Ensign H. Olthoff, from Detroit, who has been a Salvationist over thirteen years, is having special services for a few days. He generally makes things interesting. He says they had quite a congregation, a lively time was experienced and one came forward for salvation Monday night. He invites all who can come to attend the services. He is assisted by Mrs. Captain Post, Captains VanDyke and Kinzy.

Come and hear the man from Dixie.

LITTLE BUSINESS DONE

At Meeting of Council Held Thursday Night

Printing Awarded to Sentinel—Sidewalks Ordered—Mason St. Curb to be Made Right

Nothing of much importance was transacted at the last meeting of the council.

Petitions were read for new sidewalks from Amos Webster, G. C. Geiken, Charlevoix Lumber Co., L. D. Bartholomew, Egbert Carpenter and J. P. Partridge. Sidewalks ordered put in.

The question of the curb and gutter on Mason street was brought up and a general disposition seemed to be manifested by all to place the responsibility on the other fellow, for the bad blunder made on that street. It was reported that the City Engineer admitted that he had made an error in establishing the grade. It was decided to have the work put in proper shape at once.

The committee on printing, recommended that the printing be done by the Sentinel for the next year. Recommendation adopted by a yea and nay vote as follows; Yeas, Wilbur, Geiken, Fowler, Glassford. Nays Swinton, Ward.

The matter of water supply of the X. L. Produce Co. was referred to the Board of Public Works, as was also the question of cesspools on Clinton and Antrim streets.

IN MEMORY OF THE DEAD

Memorial Day Fittingly Observed in Charlevoix.

Fine Program Arranged by W. R. C.—Odd Fellows and Maccabees Took Part.

The weather was in favor of a proper observance of Memorial day in Charlevoix. Although the morning opened rainy, when the time for the exercises of the day arrived, the storm cleared away until they were over.

About ten o'clock the procession, composed of the Odd Fellows and Maccabees, who acted as an escort to the G. A. R. and W. R. C., was formed under command of Captain Berdan. Arriving at the cenotaph the following order of exercises were carried out:

Invocation, Rev. R. A. Wright.
Reading of orders, Adjutant E. H. Green.
Reading of Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, Prof. Woodley.
Ritualistic work of Baxter Post.
Reading of selected poem by Judge Mayne.
Strewing tribute of flowers by 18 girls representing the different states. This was a very beautiful ceremony.
Song, "America," by schools, led by the kindergarten.
Address, Rev. Holden A. Putnam.
Music by Congregational church choir.
Benediction, Rev. F. H. Bayles, after which followed the decoration of the graves.

A large crowd of citizens were present and from start to finish the exercises were a credit to the committee from the W. R. C. who made the arrangements.

CHARLEVOIX WILL CELEBRATE

Preparations Have Begun for a Proper Observance of July 4th.

Charlevoix will have a celebration of July Fourth this year.

While only one days work has been put in sounding the sentiment of our business men toward the project, they are all enthusiastic over it and all may look for a record-breaking day in Charlevoix. Further announcements next week.

MASONS NAME OFFICERS.

At the Grand Lodge Held at Jackson Last Week.

Contest Over Grand Marshalship Results in Selection of Detroit Man.

The grand lodge of Michigan Free and Accepted Masons at their session at Jackson last week elected the following officers. The contest was over the grand marshalship, made vacant by the advancement of the other officers in line of promotion. William M. Perrette of Detroit, was well in advance of the field of a dozen candidates on the first ballot with 387 votes of the 526 required to elect and on the second ballot the supporters of the other aspirants swung to him. Grand master, Herbert Montague, Traverse City; deputy grand master, Dr. Arthur M. Hume, Owosso; acoior grand warden, G. Roscoe Swift, Adrian; junior grand warden, James E. Dillon, East Tawas; grand treasurer, William Wente, Manistee; grand secretary, Lon B. Winsor, Reed City; grand lecturer, Frank O. Gilbert, Bay City; grand chaplain, William H. Gallagher, Saginaw; senior grand deacon, James H. Thompson, Evart; junior grand deacon, Francis D. Clark, Flint; grand marshal, William M. Perrette, Detroit; grand tyler, James F. McGregor, Detroit.

Grand Secretary Winsor's report showed a present membership in Michigan of 58,500, an increase of more than two thousand during the last year. Grand Treasurer Wente's report indicated a very satisfactory condition of finance. The session of the grand lodge was one of the most successful in the history of the order, but nine of the 450 lodges in the state being unrepresented.

EIGHT BISHOPS ELECTED

After a Warm Contest at the Methodist Conference.

The Episcopal election of the Methodist Episcopal conference of 1908 is now a matter of history, and when the announcement was made late Wednesday night of the selection of the eighth and last bishop, many delegates heaved sighs of relief. The new bishops are:

Rev. W. F. Anderson, New York.
Rev. J. L. Nenisen, Berea, Ohio.
Rev. W. A. Quayle, Chicago.
Rev. Charles W. Smith, Pittsburg.
Rev. Dr. Wilson S. Lewis, Sioux City.
Rev. Edwin H. Hughes, Greeo Castle, Ind.
Rev. Robert McIntyre, Los Angeles.
Rev. Dr. Frank M. Bristol, Washington, D. C.

The last named was the pastor, intimate friend and often, it is said, adviser of the late President McKinley. The bishops-elect will be consecrated at a special service which will be held on Sunday afternoon at the Lyric.

Held Thimble Party.

Mrs. A. T. Buroett entertained a number of ladies with a thimble party at her home on Park avenue Thursday afternoon, in honor of her daughter, Mrs. G. E Hinchey, who has been her guest for the past three weeks. Light refreshments were served.

JOHNSTON GETS CONTRACT

For Putting in Sewer on Petoskey Avenue.

Board of Public Works Transacts Little Business Monday Night.

The Board of Public Works met in regular session Monday night. The principal business was the opening of bids for the construction of a sewer on Petoskey avenue.

Three bids were submitted as follows:

A. Powers $300; Peter Benson $300; Robert M. A. Johnston $215.

The bid of Mr. Johnston was accepted and the City Attorney was instructed to draw up a proper contract with him, the work to be completed by July 1.

The matter of the water supply of the X L Produce Co., referred to the board by the council, was referred back to the council, after a long discussion.

CHARLEVOIX LOSES HER FIRST GAME

But Demonstrates She Has a Team That Can Play.

IN GAME WITH PETOSKEY SATURDAY

Lewis Was in Fine Form and Pitched Winning Ball.

Return Game Will be Played on Home Ground Thursday—Notes on the Game.

Although Saturday opened up so stormy that the excursion and forenoon game of ball at Petoskey was called off, the Charlevoix boys could not be discouraged, and in the forenoon chartered the Minnie S. and with a few enthusiasts, made the trip to Petoskey, arriving there at about 1:00 p. m. and going immediately into the game. The class of ball put up by Charlevoix was a surprise to their best friends, and demonstrated that we have a team that can keep all comers guessing. Here follows the line-up:

CHARLEVOIX	PETOSKEY
Emery, 1 b	Boyles, c
Bedford, 2 b	Goodwin, p
Davidson, 3 b	King, 1 b
Lewis, p	Goudrey, 2 b
Withers, r	Freyer, 3 b
Small, l f	Call, s s
Holmes, c f	Kirby, r f
Hampton, r f	Gleason, l f
Wilbur, s s	Marshall, c f

Score by innings:

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	R	H	E
Charlevoix	0	0	0	0	0	2	1	0	0	3	7	3
Petoskey	0	0	2	0	0	0	0	3	0	5	10	4

Holding down Petoskey, one of fastest teams in this section of the state, to five runs by a team which had practically no practice, and went right into the game without any preliminary warming up, was a remarkable feat.

Lewis pitched winning ball throughout the game, and had splendid support, with the exception of Withers, who had a very bad hand, and ought not to have been in the game.

Whenever a ball comes within reaching distance of Holmes he is sure to nab it. Small opened the way for a Charlevoix victory in the sixth, with a two bagger, Wilbur, the next man up, repeating the performance and Charlevoix had them coming when a little shower came up and gave Petoskey time to recover.

Every man on both teams played ball every minute, no wild throws being made during the entire game. What Charlevoix lacks is more team work.

Wilbur needs a little more speed and then he will be the equal of any man on the team.

Emery batted a hot liner, but the Petoskey pitcher easily gathered it in.

The game was a game of ball throughout not being marred at any stage by any of the bad features of many games, discourteous treatment of visitors. Both the players and audience being composed of gentlemen through and through.

We have no comments to make on the trip either going over or coming back.

Thursday the return game will be played at the north side ball ground, in this city, and as the teams are evenly matched a fast game is promised. Game is called 4:00 p. m. Admission 25 cents.

Is Achieving Success.

Miss Madeline Mullen and Miss Corrine Blount, pupils of Mabel Spooner Schmidt, were soloists at chapel exercises this morning at the University. Miss Blount played beautifully Bachman's "Gigue," and Miss Mullen played Henselt's "If I were a bird." Miss Mullen, whose home is at Charlevoix, Mich., has secured an excellent position for the next year as teacher in one of the large cities of the south. She is considered one of the most talented pupils attending the music department and is esteemed by all who know her.—Valparaiso (Indiana) Messenger.

WARD & WARD

DESSERTS FOR HOT DAYS.

How to Make Ices and Creams With Summer Fruits.

When it comes to summer desserts the ice cream freezer shows to its full advantage, says the June Delineator. Literally hundreds of ices and creams can be made nowadays, many of them with the least possible trouble, if only one owns the most useful household utensil.

The plain vanilla cream, which the beginner should learn because it is the basis of so many others, is made by this rule: Scald a pint of rich milk or thin cream with a cupful of sugar. Cool, flavor and add a pint of cream, plain or whipped, and freeze. This can be varied indefinitely by adding summer fruits. Crush a quart of strawberries, sweeten with sugar and water syrup and put these in when the cream is half frozen, or add a cupful of stale cake crumbs and some chopped nuts, or flavor with strong coffee, or melt and brown the sugar you are to use and add that and have a caramel ice cream.

For a plain ice, which is the basis of all ices, boil a cupful of sugar and two cupfuls of water to a smooth syrup. Add fruit juice or lemon, or both. Strain, cool, add two egg whites unbeaten and freeze. A little lemon juice is always really necessary, with other fruits to bring out the flavor.

Pineapple can be picked up very fine or put through a press and added to the plain ice when it is half frozen, or currant juice may be put in, or sapberry juice, or, indeed, anything one happens to have at hand.

How to Wash Woolens.

The very best way to wash sweaters, babies' sacks, leggings and afghans—in fact, all garments knitted or crocheted—of wool is to sew the article in a bag of cheesecloth or mosquito netting. Then wash the bag, with its contents, in soft water with a good white soap. The water must not be cold; neither must it be very hot, and of course the soap must never be rubbed into the bag, the water being soaped beforehand. After rinsing in several waters, which must be of the same temperature as the soapy water, rip the garment from the bag, but do not hang it on a line to dry. Lay it flat on a table without stretching and place in the air to dry. If colored, avoid the sunlight, as it will fade it. Some ammonia in the water helps to keep wool garments soft. The disastrous experience that many people have had in washing sweaters is due to the fact that they wring and stretch them, which should never be done. Simply crush the bag to squeeze out the water, but do not wring.

How to Eat Pineapples.

Pineapples should never be sliced. That treatment releases the juice from the pulp and leaves the meat dry and woody and tasteless. Down in Cuba and in the lower part of Florida, where they know how to eat the fruit, they never peal a pineapple. They take a ripe fruit—for pineapples should never be eaten unless they are ripe—and cut off the top and bottom; then they split the fruit lengthwise, then quarter it and split the quarters. This gives eight slices, which are then eaten from the hand as one would eat a piece of watermelon. By following this method you get all the juice and can make a tidy job of it. You eat it right down to the skin, and after trying it that way I do not think you would voluntarily go back to the old way of chopping the fruit into chunks and eating the juiceless pieces.

Marital Troubles.

Most of the people who write about troubles of married life are single. If they were married they would be so busy with their troubles they would not have time to write.—Moorhead Independent.

ECZEMA

Cured in less than four weeks.

Those who have had experience with this stubborn disease can hardly believe at first that Wonderful Dream Salve can and does cure Eczema.

There is no doubt about the matter whatever. A great many letters are on file in our office from grateful patients, telling of the quick and easy way in which Wonderful Dream Salve has removed all traces of this torturing skin affliction.

Mr. John T. Kealey, a well-known business man, located in the Stevens Bldg., Detroit, Mich., was recently cured of a bad case of Eczema of fourteen years' standing. After treating with many doctors and taking many remedies without relief, Mr. Kealey was induced to try Wonderful Dream Salve, and in four weeks was entirely cured. He says:

"I certainly consider this a remarkable cure, inasmuch as I have spent hundreds of dollars in the fourteen years of annoyance with this troublesome itching skin ailment. I have since the cure of my case heard of other cures, some of them even more remarkable than mine, which go toward demonstrating the value of Wonderful Dream Salve as a great skin healer."

If you have Eczema, why not try a box of Wonderful Dream Salve. If it fails, your druggist will refund your money. Isn't that fair enough? Keep it in your home for Chilblains, Chapped hands, Piles, Cuts, Burns, Frost-bites, Boils and Sores of any kind. You will never use anything else. 25c a box at your druggist or mailed prepaid direct.

CHAPTER III—Continued.

"I'll strengthen 'em up so as to knock out any weakening!" declared Horrigan confidently. "It's Ellis we've got to look after now. Go after him, Williams, on the first train south and haul him back. Have him here by Friday if you have to kidnap him. I'll stand for any damage or expense. Only see he's here for that meeting. It's up to you. Now jump!"

As Williams hastened toward the door Horrigan called after him:

"On your way out send word to Roberts that I want to see him here. Well, Wainwright," he resumed, turning back into the room, "it looks bad."

"Do you think"—

"I think we're in a tight place. If our aldermen found out about Ellis' quitting, there's no knowing how many of 'em would bolt. If we could only work Bennett!"

"Out of the question. He can't be turned."

"There's no man who can't be turned. I've one card up my sleeve yet that ought to land him. But I'd rather try something else first. I wish we could get a line on his price."

"He can't be bought! He"—

"Rot! Everybody can be bought. Only there's some that can't be bought with cash. I'm wondering what there is that'll buy him if money won't."

Gibbs, in search of an elusive partner, crossed the foyer and paused to greet them.

"What news?" he asked.

Wainwright surveyed the broker's well groomed figure with less approval than usual.

"You seem to be industrious enough tonight," said he. "It's a pity some of tonight's dancing energy couldn't have been devoted to your work this morning."

Gibbs flushed at the reproof in words and tone.

"I don't understand," he replied stiffly.

"Why didn't you notify me of the big block of Borough stock that was bought up just before noon?"

"I hadn't heard about it," answered Gibbs, with not quite all his customary assurance.

"Everybody else heard of it. You'll have to keep better tabs on the market than that if you're to be any use to us. Do you know who bought it?"

"No," returned Gibbs, with growing uneasiness. "Of course I don't. How should I know? What are you driving at?"

"This is what I'm driving at: Several big blocks of the stock have been unloaded on the market during the past few days and have been quietly snapped up. Somebody's evidently tailing on to our game. You don't know who?"

"I've told you twice that I didn't know," blustered Gibbs, masking his concern under a show of virtuous indignation.

The effort called forth all the astute young broker's nerve, for a certain shrewd scheme of his showed signs of failing through. By his original arrangement with Wainwright he was to have manipulated all the Borough stock purchases on the exchange floor and to receive 20 per cent of the profits on the condition that he invest not one dollar in the stock on his private account.

Having strong faith in the deal's success and having no equally strong incentive to keep faith with his partners, Gibbs had sought to await his own profits by secretly buying up quantities of the stock for himself until every penny of his capital was involved. His troubled mind could not now determine whether or not Wainwright suspected him. Gibbs, while possessing all the ambition, selfishness and lack of conscience that go toward the making of a great financier, lacked the one chief essentials for the part—namely, a cold and unshaken nerve. It was this defect that now threatened to expose him.

"Fall through!" cried Gibbs, dismayed.

"Well," resumed Wainwright, as though dismissing the topic, "you should have made it your business to know who is doing this private buying. That's what we brought you into the deal for. Anyhow, the mysterious purchaser is liable to find himself in hot water before long."

"Why?" queried Gibbs in a voice he tried to make indifferent.

"Only because the deal will probably fall through."

"Fall through!" cried Gibbs, dismayed. "What do you— Why, you told me Mr. Horrigan could win over a fourteenth alderman, and that with his solid thirteen"—

"Yes," drawled Horrigan, who had been unobtrusively eying Gibbs from the moment of his entrance, "we had some such notion, as you say. But my 'solid thirteen' didn't happen to be as solid as he looked. He's bolted."

"Bolted! Then we—we will lose! We"—

"Say, Mr. Gibbs," observed Horrigan, "you seem to take this thing pretty hard for a man with only 20 per cent at stake. Mr. Wainwright stands to lose some millions. I'm interested to the extent of almost a million. Yet you don't see us getting pale and shaky, do you? If a man can't pay for the chips he has no right in a poker game. Brace up and act like a man, can't you? We haven't lost yet. I've sent after the fellow that bolted, and I think I can land the fourteenth alderman too."

"Good!" exclaimed Gibbs in wild relief. "And you'll do your very best to pull the deal through, won't you?"

"No!" snarled Horrigan in elephantine sarcasm. "I'm going to spend the time playing pingpong and diabolo with the kids or taking a course of lessons in fancy knitting. Oh, buck up, can't you, and quit acting like a baby! Judge Newman's out there on the other side of the ballroom. Chase over and tell him to come here."

Too confused to resent the boss' words, Gibbs meekly set out on his errand.

"That chap's got a streak of yellow a yard wide," commented Horrigan, gazing after him.

"Not as bad as that," replied Wainwright. "He's young and not used to reverses. You'll find he is game, all right, when it comes to a pinch. What did you want of Newman?"

"You'll see. Here he comes."

"You wished to speak to me, Mr. Horrigan?" piped the little judge, hurrying into the foyer. "Good evening, Mr. Wainwright. What a success the ball is! My daughters have been dancing all evening. And Mrs. Newman is so"—

"Never mind Mrs. Newman just now," broke in Horrigan. "There's something important I want you to do for me."

He spoke, as he always did to Newman, in the manner of one addressing an incompetent servant. The judge, for all his pomposity, deemed it wise to ignore the politician's mode of address.

"I want you to hunt up Bennett," went on the boss, "and persuade him to stop fighting the Borough franchise bill. Tell him"—

"Oh," gasped the judge in genuine alarm, "I really don't think I could presume to"—

"Yes, you can," contradicted Horrigan. "You can do it, and, what's more, you will. You don't feel shy about asking favors of me, and when it's the other way around you've got to come down or"—

"I know! I know!" protested the frightened little judge soothingly. "But you don't understand how"—

"I got you the nomination last fall. Are you going to be a white man or a weleher?"

"But I'm sure that Mrs. Newman"—

"To blazes with Mrs. Newman! Now listen to me. Go to Bennett and do what you can to make him keep his hands off our Borough bill. If he's difficult offer him, in my name, the nomination for governor next year. If you can get him—well, there's a vacancy next year in the supreme court and"—

"I'll do what I can," assented the judge. "I'm sure you are right, Mr. Horrigan, even if your way of putting matters is just a little ragged. I'll see Mr. Bennett tonight and use all the persuasion in my power. I'm quite sure civic welfare will be best served if he will cease his unseemly opposition to the Borough bill. Thank you, Mr. Horrigan. I'm very sure that Mrs. Newman"—

"I'm sure, too," cut in Horrigan. "Now run on. We're busy. Remember, now—the very next supreme court vacancy"—

"Do you really think he has any influence with Bennett?" asked Wainwright as the judge vanished.

"Can't do any harm to try. They're neighbors in the country and in the same crowd in society and all that. If it fails, I've another card that's even stronger. Roberts ought to be here by now. You found out about those notes of his?"

"Yes; both of them. One for $7,000, one for $15,000. Both secured by mortgaging his factory. Roberts can't meet them. They've been extended twice, though the security must have been fairly good or the Sturtevant Trust company wouldn't have lent"—

"Williams said you wanted to speak to me, Mr. Horrigan," said a nervous voice from the door, and a pale, middle aged man came forward. He wore worry's stamp between his perplexed eyes, and care had bent his narrow shoulders.

"Yes. Good evening, Roberts," replied Horrigan cordially. "See you later, Wainwright."

The financier took the hint and walked toward the ballroom, on his way out nearly colliding with Phelan, who was entering the foyer. At sight of Horrigan and Roberts together Phelan's eyebrows went upward, with a jerk, and he tiptoed out in the opposite direction as fast as his stout legs could carry him in search of Bennett. Meantime Horrigan had come directly to the point, as usual, in his appeal to Roberts.

"Look here, alderman," said he, "you've been trying for years to get through a park bill for your ward. Still want it?"

"Yes," returned Roberts. "My constituents are at me all the time about that park. They"—

"It would make your ward's property values go up 50 per cent, and it would make you solid there forever, hey?"

"Yes, but"—

"Introduce that bill again, and I'll guarantee it will go through."

"Are you in earnest?"

"There's my hand on it. Only, of course, it's understood that your park bill won't come up until after the Borough Street railway franchise is passed. Understand?"

"I'm afraid I do," said Roberts after a pause, "but I voted against that bill, and"—

"You voted against the bill in its original form," Horrigan interrupted reassuringly, "and you were right, too. It had a lot of clauses that you thought weren't square. But all those have been cut out."

"But I still"—

"But you'll be doing what's best for your own constituents by looking after their interests in the matter of the park. You'll be their hero for that. Of course if I wanted to put it another way I could remind you that your business is in a bad way and that a friend of mine has bought up your notes at the Sturtevant Trust company and means to send them to you tomorrow. But that has nothing to do with the case. So I just"—

"I'm honest, Mr. Horrigan," faltered Roberts. "I"—

"Sure you're honest! That's why you'll have the courage to vote for the bill when you see it's been amended so as to be a good thing for the city. That's being honest, isn't it?"

"I—I suppose so. And the notes—the"—

"They'll be sent you by registered mail tomorrow if you want them. Do you?"

"Y-yes. That is, I"—

"That's settled, then. You've got a level head. Good night."

The boss strode out, a grim smile of victory on his big face, leaving Roberts standing confused, doubtful, his brain awhirl. How long the tempted alderman stood thus—oblivious to the music, his surroundings and all else—he could never remember, but a voice at his elbow brought him to his senses with a start that was followed by a thrill of fear as he wheeled and recognized the speaker.

CHAPTER X.

ROBERTS' eyes rested on the grinning, complacent features of Alderman Phelan. At the latter's side was Bennett.

"I was saying," remarked Phelan blandly, "that it's a fine ball, isn't it, now, Roberts?"

"Yes," said Roberts hastily, preparing to move away. But Phelan buttonholed him.

"Stay an' swap talk awhile with his honor and me, Roberts," he begged.

"I'm in a hurry," began Roberts "and"—

"Alderman Phelan has been trying to cheer me up a bit," said Bennett. "He knows I'm worried about the Borough bill's outcome. I wish Friday was past."

A Prescription for Constipation.

Eminent medical authorities agree that ninety per cent of their patients suffer from ailments due to clogged bowel (Constipation.)

The bowels become clogged with impurities and body poisons, causing biliousness, colds, stomach trouble, headache, rheumatism, deranged liver and kidneys, etc.

A Tonic Laxative is prescribed in nearly every case. Those who need a laxative may use this prescription with the assurance that no harmful results will follow its use. It has been given to the Public in tablet form and is known as Iron-ox (Laxative Iron-ox Tablets) and are put up in minimum pocket cases.

The formula is wrapped around the case. The action of each ingredient is explained, that you may understand why Laxative Iron-ox Tablets are the safest Laxative to use; they strengthen the bowels, aid digestion, and keep the liver and kidneys healthy and active. We have secured the selling agency for Laxative Iron-ox Tablets and recommend them to our Customers. F. N. Chapel & Co.

THE snow and rain, rushes and sand inseparable from duck and geese shooting never bother the hunter who is using a Marlin Model 1912 gauge repeating shotgun, the best all-around gun in the market.

The ejection is from the side (an exclusive Marlin feature) and the closed breech bolt covers the action keeping out all foreign matter which so often clogs repeating shotguns.

The Marlin automatic safety prevents the accidental opening of the action when firing, and holds the breech shut until after expulsion in cases of hang-fire; the solid top of frame is always a protection between your head and the cartridge.

The man who loves a gun needs the 1907 Marlin Book. It is full of gun information, has the answer to every gun question, contains 136 pages of live matter. Price, for 3 stamps postage.

ANYONE going up Mason street at the present time, would wonder if they didn't know, what was the reason the new curb was being drawn away and another one put in at an additional expense to the city. On asking any of the city officials, he would be told that the fault lay with the other fellow, as all seem to wish to get out from under. On an impartial investigation of the matter, he would find that the City Engineer, Mr. Nettleton, made a mistake, which he frankly admits, in establishing the grade. Now the question arises, where does the blame lay for this uncalled for expense to the city? Mr. Nettleton frankly admits he was in error, but there are others also involved. The mistake was plain to everybody, who cared to look, and should have been stopped.

The council decided that this work was under the control of the chairman of the street committee, Alderman Glassford, supervised by the street commissioner.

The commissioner denies responsibility through lack of authority. Mr. Glassford, on whom the responsibility seems to rest, appears to have relied entirely on his subordinates, and in a measure, neglected the duties of his position, when it was important he should have been there.

The mayor reports that he knew the work was wrong and tried to get into communication with his committee to have the work stopped but was forced to leave the city on business. He is not entirely blameless, as it would have been better to have known that the work had stopped even if he was away.

In the opinion of the COURIER it was a mistake to appoint as the committee on streets—the most important committee—all new members of the council, whose lack of experience excuses them somewhat for this bad blunder.

The whole matter seems to be a disposition to shirk the responsibility which our officials owe to their constituents; a lack of decision which is manifested in almost every move; a forgetting that "public office is a public trust" and acceptance of the same means that you owe it to yourself and the city that its affairs should at all times be the first thing looked after.

TIPS ON CARE OF FLOWERS.

How to Keep Them Fresh, as Told by a Florist.

"Very few persons understand the art of keeping flowers," said a St. Louis florist, "and yet by a little attention flowers may be kept fresh for three or four times as long as people expect them to stay in good condition.

"The matter is simple enough. It is merely a question of temperature and moisture. Roses, for example, are grown at a high temperature in the greenhouses and are then generally spoiled by ill treatment after they have been cut. Grown in a temperature of 65 to 75 degrees, they are placed in an icebox, where the temperature stands at about 40. Then when sold they are taken into a dining or ball room, where the temperature is 75 or 80. Of course they wilt in a few hours, sometimes in a few minutes. Nothing else could be expected.

"They could, however, be kept in proper condition for a week by placing them in water and standing the vase in the coolest part of the living room. Every day half an inch of stems should be cut off in order to present a fresh suction surface to the water. If this precaution is neglected the stem becomes clogged with a glutinous matter something like the gum that exudes from peach and cherry trees, the water in the vase, however pure, cannot be drawn up, and the leaves and flowers wither for lack of moisture.

"In cutting off the stems a knife should always be used, never a pair of scissors. The reason is plain enough. The knife makes a smooth cut, leaving the cells of the wood open and unobstructed. The scissor blades, no matter how sharp they are, always compress the woody fibers at the end of the stem and leave them so tightly pressed together that it is almost impossible for sufficient moisture to find its way through to support the leaves and blossoms."

Restless Animals.

When you see the animals in the park menageries pacing back and forth restlessly in their cages, do not take it for granted that the creatures are unhappy or even discontented. It may be that the lion or the tiger or the polar bear that moves about with apparently ceaseless activity is only taking his daily exercise, without which he would pine and die soon. When the wild creatures are in their native jungles they are kept pretty busy hunting food. Thus each day they walk many miles perhaps. In their narrow cages in the parks they are plentifully supplied with food, but their brawny bodies still demand a great amount of exercise. Mile after mile is paced off daily by the uneasy creatures. Usually they move with a long, swinging stride, but when mealtime comes around then the step quickens until when the keeper appears with his baskets of meat the tigers and lions and other animals leap against their bars and growl and whine and lash their tails. In fact, they act like great hungry boys do after a long day's tramp if they find that supper is late.

SUCCESS WITH COWS.

Liberal Feeding and Good Care Make the Dairy Pay.

By WILLIAM M. JONES.

[Prize article in stockmen's contest.]

The first and most important thing for a farmer to do who expects to succeed with cows is to be always on his job, and the next point is not to be afraid to feed liberally. Half the farmers I know starve their cows.

In January, 1905, I began to keep accurate accounts of the milk, cream and butter sold from my herd of seven Jerseys. Those cows were at that time housed during winter in a building twelve feet wide, each cow having a large stall with a loose box in which to feed grain. I soon found my cows wasted too much feed.

During that year I sold $515 worth of dairy produce, an average of $73 each. Late in the year I pulled down my old stables and built a new one with concrete floor and gutters, good stanchions and a tight manger for each cow. At the end of the stable I built two rooms, one for the separator and the other for feed, with cellar under both for storage of roots.

In the beginning of 1906 I began to take better care of my cows in this new stable and gave better rations. During the winter months I fed each cow six or eight quarts of mixed feed per day, consisting of one part each of cornmeal, bran and gluten feed. I gave each cow one peck per day of pumpkins. That year my sales amounted to $721, or an average of $103 per cow.

For the past year I have been feeding mixed feed that is very rich in protein, containing about 21 per cent. I have used from three to ten pounds per day during winter and summer; have also fed beets and pumpkins with all the clover hay and corn stover that the cows would clean up. In early summer I feed green oats and peas, then cut clover, and later on I gave sweet corn fodder, which I had sown in rotation until frost came.

During 1907 I sold $846 worth of milk, cream and butter, or $135 per head. I sold my cream during fall and winter at the creamery and received 35 cents per pound for butter fat. In summer I sold it in the city for 40 cents per quart, testing 45 to 50 per cent fat. I have a lot to learn yet, but I think I am on the right road.

WORK THE BULL.

Head of the Herd Must Have Exercise to Keep Vigorous.

Exercise the bull must have, for unless he is properly exercised he will not be thrifty and have a vigorous constitution. This question is a serious one, and the picture of Sir Jacob Poesh at work shows how a bull may be made to exercise and also be of great assistance to his owner. He pumps all of the water for a large dairy, cuts feed and makes himself very useful to his owner.

His calves all come strong and thrifty since he began work, and, although he weighs a plump ton, he handles himself like a kitten.

Don't look upon the bull as an enemy and carry a club or pitchfork every time you go near him, writes W. M. Kelly in Farm and Home. His disposition toward you will be just what you make it yourself. Treat him kindly, but with firmness. He is sure to remember any kindness and surer to remember any meanness that you may do to him and will watch his chance to get even with you.

Allow him but one service and then lead him to his stall, and he will soon learn what is wanted of him and will readily take up with the programme. Well managed and properly fed, he will live to be eight or ten years old and get good calves. A well cared for bull instead of being a nuisance and disgrace will be an object of admiration and a credit to your herd and farm.

How to Keep Flies Outside.

For those who object to wire netting in the windows during the summer a new idea has been found to prevent flies and such annoying pests from entering the house. This new preventive is a window box of mignonette. It seems that the insects do not care to face the odor of this charming flower, so that it is an effectual barrier against their invasion. It sounds like a very pretty idea, and we may expect to see ugly wire screens entirely discarded and the windows decorated with fairy boxes filled with the sweet blossoms.

How to Preserve Eggs.

Dissolve four ounces of beeswax in eight ounces of warm olive oil. Dip the tips of the fingers into the solution and anoint the eggs all over. The oil will be absorbed and the shell and pores filled up with the wax. Pack in bran or sawdust and put away in a cool place. Eggs treated in this way will keep two years.

How to Clean Zinc.

To clean zinc make a paste of common whiting and ammonia and apply with a woolen cloth. A last rubbing should be given with a dry flannel.

What is The Vudor Re-Enforced Hammock?

The Vudor Re-enforced Hammock, as its name implies, is a hammock made extra strong where the most strain and wear comes on hammocks.

Ordinary hammocks give out first in the middle of the bed of the hammock, and in the supporting cords at the ends. In ordinary hammocks the fabric is no stronger in the middle of the bed than at the sides. The bed of the Vubor Hammock is woven with a gradually increased number of warps to the inch from the sides to the middle, so that the hammock is strongest where most strength is needed. This is a patented feature and can be found in no other hammock. These features make the Vudor Re-enforced Hammock outwear two ordinary hammocks.

We are local agents for Vudor Re-enforced Hammocks and we will be glad to show them to you, feeling sure that you will at once recognize and appreciate their superiority.

HELD ANNUAL MEETING

First Baptist Church Elected Officers Monday Night

Membership is Nearly Two-Hundred.—Will Raise Funds by Special Appeal.

The First Baptist church held it's annual meeting Monday evening, June 1st and while some phases of the work might be better, there is ample reason for being encouraged. After listening to various reports, the following officers were elected.

Deacons for two years—Charles Carey, Joseph Rhebine, Charles Peaslee.

Trustees for three years—Archie Carey and James McGeagh.

S. S. Supt.—Charles Carey.

Assistant S. S. Supt.—Harker Kirby.

S. S. Treasurer—Miss Elizabeth McClanathan.

Mrs. James McGeagh, Miss Mary Tysver and the pastor were continued as church music committee.

The church also voted to dispense with the duplex envelope system of raising the expenses and benevolences of the church and hereafter the benevolenees will be raised by special appeal.

Much is hoped for the future of this church, whose membership is nearly two hundred.

Women as Well as Men Are Made Miserable by Kidney Trouble.

Kidney trouble preys upon the mind, discourages and lessens ambition; beauty, vigor and cheerfulness soon disappear when the kidneys are out of order or diseased.

Kidney trouble has become so prevalent that it is not uncommon for a child to be born afflicted with weak kidneys. If the child urinates too often, if the urine scalds the flesh or it, when the child reaches an age when it should be able to control the passage, it is yet afflicted with bed-wetting, depend upon it, the cause of the difficulty is kidney trouble, and the first step should be towards the treatment of these important organs. This unpleasant trouble is due to a diseased condition of the kidneys and bladder and not to a habit as most people suppose.

Women as well as men are made miserable with kidney and bladder trouble, and both need the same great remedy, The mild and the immediate effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It is sold by druggists, in fifty-cent and one dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also pamphlet telling all about it, including many of the thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers cured. In writing Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., be sure and mention this paper.

Home of Swamp-Root.

Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

LEGAL NOTICES

Mortgage Foreclosure.

Whereas, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage dated the tenth day of April, 1903, executed by Adolph Kirchner and Mary A. Kirchner, his wife to Citizens' State Bank of Whitewater, Wisconsin, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Charlevoix, Michigan, in liber thirty-seven of Mortgages on pages forty and forty-one, on the 27th day of April, 1903 at nine o'clock in the forenoon. And whereas, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of one thousand four hundred thirteen and sixty-five one-hundredths ($1,413.65) dollars, the principal, interest, taxes and insurance, and the further sum of fifty dollars as an attorney fee, stipulated for in said mortgage, and which is the whole amount claimed to be due on said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted either in law or equity, to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the east front door of the court house in said county of Charlevoix, on the twenty-third day of July next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon on that day; which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to-wit: The south half (s½) of the north-east quarter (ne¼) of section eighteen (18) town thirty-two (32) north, of range six (6) west; and the north west quarter (nw¼) of the south-east quarter (se¼) of section eighteen (18) town thirty-two (32) north, of range six (6) west.

Neighborhood Notes

If present plans are consummated the villages of Calumet, Mohawk, Red Jacket, Laurium and several smaller communities will be combined into one big city with a population of 50,000, and ranking as the third city in the state. Petitions will be circulated in a short time with this end in view. If the project is favorably received it will be put before the people of the district for a vote.

The territory included in the proposed new city is nine miles long and two miles wide. At the present time Calumet is the largest incorporated village in the United States Thirty-nine different languages are spoken in the city. The project, if successful, will make the new city the business and commercial center of the upper peninsula.

Last Saturday, a special car came over the M. & N. E. R. R., which carried all the general officials of the M. & N. E. R. R. Co., and of the Michigan Trust Co, making a final review of this road and stopping here long enough to drop some information as to the extention of the road; one official stated, "If laborers enough can be secured this season the road will be extended as far as Michigan Central." When another stated that the small connecting link between there and Alpena would be pushed through as rapidly as possible.

This is even better than was expected the company would do this season, as Walton Jc. would have been a great relief, but that the road is now going to be extended to the Michigan Central will mean considerable to this region and all will be pleased to receive the news.—Buckley Enterprise.

In the case of Mrs. Edward Welton against the township of Crystal, Montcalm county, the supreme court has reversed the verdict of Judge Davis, who took the case from the jury and ordered a verdict for the township, and has directed a new trial. Mrs. Welton, while walking on the streets of Crystal, an incorporated village in Crystal township, fell on an alleged defective sidewalk and was severely injured. She brought suit against the township because of the fact that the village, being unincorporated, could not be legally sued, taking the ground that the township was responsible. The position of the supreme court places a responsibility on the conduct of unincorporated villages within the township limits.

The supreme court on the application of Henry J. Patterson, of St. Johns, granted a writ of certeriori on the showing of Mr. Patterson, who claimed that Judge Kelly Searl of the Clinton county circuit, had erred in his decission in regard to the mandamus proceeding to compel Mayor Boron to appoint Patterson city attorney. Mr. Patterson applied for the position of city attorney of St. Johns under the statute passed by the last legislature requiring that a civil war veteran be given the preference for a municipal position, were their ability equal to other candidates.

Patterson asked for the job, was turned down and then demanded of Judge Searl a mandamus to compel Mayor Boron to appoint him. Judge Searl said it should not come into court that way. With the assistance of an attorney Judge Searl will now prepare an answer to the writ granted by the supreme court.

S. S. Cronn died very suddenly Wednesday at the home of J. H. Hickman, at Harbor Springs. He arose apparently in usual health and took breakfast with the family, remaining at the table after they had retired. He was looking over some papers when he fell from his chair unconscious. Mrs. Hickman, who had left the room, heard the fall and called for assistance, but before aid came he expired.

His death was due to heart trouble from which he had suffered at times for several years.

Mr. Cronn has resided in and about Harbor Springs for the past twenty years and has a large circle of friends. He was sixty-five years of age and leaves a wife and four children, two sons and two daughters, who have the sympathy of the community.

Down at Bellaire, August Shoene tried to convince a judge that he had made a wrong decision, and went to the judge's private office to labor with him, and produced for an effective argument an old-fashioned Colt's revolver the size of a young cannon, the dimensions and ramifications of which he proceeded to elaborately unfold to the judge with all persuasiveness.

The judge made his escape and the sheriff took Shoene to jail. The judge then told him: "When you come up before me for hearing I will show you."

Cadillac has gone dry for fair. In addition to Wexford county going dry at recent election, the druggists feel that they have been imposed upon by the thirsty ones of that city, so two of them have resolved not to sell liquors for any purpose, and the other three will sell it only upon a physician's prescription, so now it's up to the doctors. What?

Loyal, the 20-year-old son of Alexander Sayers, of Kingsley, was drowned Sunday morning in Duck lake. The body was recovered about an hour after the accident. Young Sayers was fishing with a friend in a small boat and in throwing the anchor the boat was overturned. Sayers could not swim. His companion shoved the boat to Sayers, but he was too weak to retain his hold and sank, in about 20 feet of water.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured.

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give one hundred dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

A National Trait.

A traveler returned from Jaffa tells this tale at his own expense. Having journeyed to the historical seaport on his way to Jerusalem, he succeeded in hiring a conveyance to carry him to the station. By speech and gesture he informed the native driver that he wished to be carried in a leisurely, sightseeing fashion through as many as possible of the principal thoroughfares of Jaffa and to be delivered at the terminal just in time to take the outgoing train.

He had no sooner seated himself in the vehicle, however, than the driver whipped up his horse and whirled the dismayed traveler at a furious pace through all the dust and over all the stones of the notoriously rough streets of Jaffa. The passenger was too busily employed in saving his bones to be able to see anything of the interesting town.

Arriving at the station, he found that he still had two hours to wait.

"Why in the world," he demanded indignantly, "did you ever hurry like that?"

"You American," responded the driver, with an expressive shrug. "All American like go very much fast."—Youth's Companion.

He Was Too Smart.

He was the only man at the table full of lovely girls, and, like all only men, he was spoiled. So when the belle of the table remarked that she was very fond of pepper and then sifted half the contents of the pepper box over her food he sprang an old gag on her.

"It won't hurt you. This pepper is half peas."

"What is that you say?" asked the landlady from the next table. "Speak a little louder, please."

The reformist his remark.

"That isn't true," retorted the landlady hotly. "I do not use adulterated goods on my table."

"My dear madam," said the bland joker, "there are always a lot of p's in pepper."

There was an impressive pause. Then the landlady said in a crushing voice:

"Oh, yes, just as you always furnish part of the dessert."

"I don't understand."

"The chestnuts."—London Standard.

Did She Keep Her Temper?

Mr. Biles is a very hasty tempered man, but he is also one who keeps his promises to the very letter. Therefore Mrs. B. has trained him to believe that second thoughts are best and even in a moment of his weakness extracted from him a promise always to count twenty before he speaks if he feels rage coming upon him. Last Sunday he rushed into the back drawing room spluttering with fury and red in the face. Mrs. Biles rose and laid a gentle hand on his stammering lips.

"Hush, dear," said the sweet woman. "Count twenty and conquer yourself, and I shall be more proud of you than if you had conquered the world."

"Eighteen, nineteen, twenty"—

"Now tell me, dear."

"It's that new hat of yours that you paid 6 guineas for, and the new servant's gone out in, and it's raining hard—that's all."—London Express.

Mrs. Bibby—And which is the port side?

Mr. Bibby—The port side, my dear! Oh—ah—yes (with happy inspiration). Of course that is obvious, the side of the vessel that is nearest port!

Mrs. Bibby—Why, of course, yes! How stupid of me!—Pick-Me-Up.

THE SOCIALIST AIM.

Capitalism No Longer Serves and Socialism Must Be the Next Step.

The short period which has elapsed since the birth of our republic has witnessed tumultuous changes. New economic conditions have sprung up, new social relations have been created, new popular needs have been developed, and a radical readjustment of our industrial and political institutions has become necessary.

The United States entered on its national career as a farming country. Manufacture and commerce played but an incidental part in the early life of the population. But within the last century, and more particularly within its last decade, agriculture was gradually subordinated to the great modern factory industry. The centers of national activity were transferred from the peaceful villages to the large cities, and within the latter the methods of manufacture and commerce were thoroughly and rapidly revolutionized.

The modest workshop of former generations was superseded by the huge factory. The simple tool of the old time mechanic developed into the gigantic machine propelled by the power of steam and electricity, while the railroads, steamships, telegraphs and telephones united the entire country into one great market for the exchange of goods. These marvelous improvements in our methods of production and distribution, together with the extraordinary abundance of the natural resources of the country, have resulted in immense benefits. The productivity of labor and the wealth of the nation have increased a hundredfold, and the United States is today one of the richest countries on the face of the globe.

But, although this wonderful transformation is the result of the collective ingenuity and labor of the multitudes of workers of present and past generations, its fruits have been seized and appropriated by a small portion of the population—the capitalist class. The capitalists own as their individual and private property all the land on which we live, together with the mines, oil wells and other natural treasures hidden in it, and most of the structures and homes erected on it. They own our railways, telegraph and all other means of transportation and communication. They own our factories, machinery and all the tools indispensable to the production of the necessaries of life. They own the food, clothing and shelter of their fellow men. In short, they own the country, with all its wealth and resources, while the great mass of the population, whose labor has created our so called "national" wealth and still maintains our national life, are virtually destitute of property and depend for their right to work and live upon the will of the more or less idle capitalist.

The anomalous fact that a small group of capitalists are permitted to use all the country's resources and social tools for their individual profit and to make the production of the necessaries of our lives the object of their competitive private enterprises and speculations is at the bottom of all the social evils of our time. In spite of the organization of trusts, pools and combinations, the capitalists are powerless to regulate production for social ends, industries are conducted in a planless manner through periods of feverish activity during which the strength and health of the workers are mercilessly undermined and periods of enforced idleness during which the workers are frequently reduced to starvation.

The climaxes of this chaotic system of production are the regularly recurring industrial depressions and crises which paralyze the nation every fifteen or twenty years. In its mad and reckless race for profits the capitalist class is bound to exploit the workingmen to the very limit of their endurance and to sacrifice their physical, moral and mental welfare to its own insatiable greed. Capitalism keeps the masses of workingmen in poverty, destitution, physical exhaustion and ignorance; it drags their wives from their homes to the mill and factory; it snatches their children from the playgrounds and schools and grinds their slender bodies and unformed minds into gold dollars; it wantonly disfigures, maims and kills hundred of thousands of workingmen annually in the mines, railroads and factories; it drives millions of workers into the ranks of the unemployed and forces large numbers of them into beggary, vagrancy and all forms of crime and vice. To maintain their iniquitous rule over their fellow men the capitalists must keep in their pay all organs of the public powers, public mind and public conscience. They control the dominating parties and through them the elected public officials; they select our executives, bribe our legislatures and corrupt our courts of justice; they own and censor our press; they subsidize and direct our churches and colleges, and they own the nation politically, intellectually and spiritually just as they own it industrially.

There is but one way to free our social system from all these grave evils, and that is to remove their common cause and source—the private ownership of the nation's wealth, tools and resources. To make the people free and independent in fact as well as in name the people must take possession of their land, mines, wells, railroads, telegraphs, factories, machinery and all social tools of wealth production and use and operate them collectively and democratically for the joint benefit of all members of the community.

And the basis for such transformation is rapidly developing within the very bosom of present capitalist society. The factory system, with its immense machinery and minute division of labor, is rapidly destroying all vestiges of individual production. Modern production is already very largely a collective and social process, while the great trusts and monopolies which have sprung up in recent years have had the effect of organizing the work and management of some of our main industries on a national scale and fitting them for national use and operation.

The task of so transforming our industrial system devolves primarily on the workers. The working class is the principal victim of the evils of the capitalist rule; it is numerically the strongest class, and it has gradually become the most useful and essential class in society. While the typical capitalist is rapidly degenerating into a mere parasite on industry whose functions are limited to drawing interest and dividends, the paid wage-workers of all grades in the fields of manual and mental labor are assuming the direction and operation of all phases of the industrial process. The working class, therefore, has the most vital and direct interest as well as the greatest power and ability to abolish the capitalist system. But in abolishing the present system the workingmen will free not only themselves, but also all other classes of modern society—the farmer, who is today exploited by large capital more indirectly but not less effectively than is the wage laborer; the small manufacturer and trader, who is today engaged in a desperate and losing struggle for economic independence in the face of the all conquering power of concentrated capitalism, and even the capitalist himself, who is the slave of his wealth rather than its master. The struggle of the working class against capitalism, while it is a class struggle, is thus at the same time a struggle for the abolition of all classes and class privileges.

To accomplish this great social task the workers must become conscious of its wrongs and remedies and above all must collect and organize all members without distinction of trade, race, sex, nationality, creed or color into a powerful party distinct from and opposed to all parties of the propertied classes for the purpose of conquering the powers of government, national state and municipal, and using such powers to overthrow the system of capitalist exploitation.—M. Hillquit.

WHAT CAPITALISM DOES.

Enables the Few to Take the Cream of the Products of Labor.

Socialism denies with all its vigor the monstrous contention of the capitalist class that the farmer who toils laboriously to feed a hungry world should be content with a few old clothes and enough food to keep life in his body; that the wageworker who toils day in, day out, with hand and brain in a whizzing factory to fashion into merchantable shapes these raw products from field, forest and mine shall be given only a rented house and a "full dinner pail" for his toil, and it therefore brands as the very quintessence of injustice an industrial system that condemns to lifelong toil for a bare living these most useful members of human society—the farmer and the wageworker—while it gives to the men who only sit in skyscrapers and scheme the very cream of what the working class has produced.

Yet that is what the private ownership of capital and the competitive system of industry are doing, and they are doing it because the wealth producers whom they are despoiling are voting the capitalist class the power to do it. This may be news to the "intelligent" wageworker or farmer, who ever voted the ticket of any party that did not claim to be the "friend of labor," but it is true nevertheless.—Allan L. Benson.

The "Independant" Farmer.

Say, Joe, if the trusts were not making more money off the farmers than they could make by owning the farms and running them with hired labor don't you think they would soon own the farms? To be sure! Farmers are "easier" for the trusts than the hired men are. It is less trouble and more money for organized capital to control the unorganized farmer by controlling his means of transportation and his markets than it would be at present to own the farms and have to deal with the wageworkers. So much for the "independence" of the noble farmer!

And, again, money is largely loaned on farm mortgages at 5 or 6 per cent gross, or about 4 per cent net. If the capitalist money loaner could make more than the usual rate of interest by running the farms with hired labor wouldn't they soon own them? Then don't you see that the "independent farmer" is more profitable to the capitalist class than the wageworker would be?—"Eight Letters to a Farmer."

Investing in Revolution.

In North America the capitalists finance political campaigns. In South America they finance revolutions. In both cases the undertaking is a business investment. But in South America the transaction works out somewhat differently from that in the north. If the revolution succeeds, of course it is a source of profit, but if it fails—well, the financier is compelled to stand and deliver. Here is an instance of poetic justice.—London Labor Leader.

Socialism's Advance.

If we don't give the people municipal ownership, the Socialists will, is the way some of the old party politicians look at it. Every advance toward public ownership is a certificate of the fear in which the politicians view the steady advance of Social Democracy.—Frederic Heath in Social Democratic Herald.

"Same here," chimed in Phelan. "An' you, Roberts?"

"I?" muttered the uncomfortable man. "Why?"

"It's Friday that the Borough bill comes up again," explained Bennett, as though imparting new information. "You will vote against it, of course, Mr. Roberts?"

"I'm not sure. You see, it's been altered so as to"—

"The alterations don't affect the main issue, and they can't change any honest man's views. So I can count on you to continue opposing it, can't I?"

"I object to this catechizing!" flared up poor Roberts. "I won't stand for it. I'm my own master and"—

"Are you sure you're your own master?" demanded Bennett. "If so, why should you be afraid to say how you are going to vote?"

"Do you accuse me of"—

"I accuse you of having changed your mind about the bill for some reason that won't bear the light. And I warn you to go carefully. Somebody's going to prison before this matter's ended."

"Somebody's going to prison before this matter's ended."

"I'm not answerable to any one but my constituents," said Roberts, with a pitiful attempt at cold dignity, "and they"—

"And they shall demand an answer from you," warned Bennett. "I'll see to it that they do. Now, you can go if you want to," turning his back on the confused Roberts, who eagerly took the opportunity to escape.

"I'm afraid friend Roberts ain't havin' the happiest time of his life tonight," remarked Phelan, going to the doorway and looking after the departing alderman. "There's not much of what the poet geezer calls 'whoop up the dance, fer joy he unrefined' about him. Poor fool! I never was cut out to be a crook. He makes a punk job of it in spite of the trimmin's Horrigan's decorated him with. If I hadn't the sense to be crooked without makin' a monkey of myself, I'm blest if I don't believe I'd turn honest. Hey! Here's a couple of folks, though, that's gettin' more fun out of the ball than ever I had at a dog fight!"

As he spoke Perry Wainwright piloted Cynthia in from the conservatory at top speed, his jolly young face alight with a joy that reflected itself in Miss Garrison's own very flushed countenance.

"Alwyn," shouted young Wainwright, not seeing Phelan in his excitement, "guess what's happened! I'll give you three guesses and"—

"And I can't possibly guess if you gave me a thousand," retorted Bennett, with vast gravity, "so I won't try. I'll just congratulate you with all my heart, old chap, and wish Miss Garrison every happiness that"—

"Gee! How'd you know? We haven't told a soul. It only happened about four minutes ago. I was telling Cynthia what a daisy little girl she was, and she said she thought I was pretty nice, too, and so I got brave and said, 'Then why don't you' "—

"Perry!" reproved Cynthia sternly, jerking his arm to show that Phelan as well as Alwyn was recipient of the highly intimate tidings.

"Oh, don't mind me, children!" put in Phelan. "I'm used to it. I was young myself once, so I've been told, though I don't clearly remember it myself. Can I butt in with a line of congratulations?"

He extended his big hand with an honest cordiality that quite won Cynthia.

"Thanks, alderman," grinned Perry effusively. "Now, Alwyn, we've got to go and break it to your mother if we can find her. Come along and back us up."

Dragging Bennett between them, the two youngsters started off on their quest. Phelan was about to return to his beloved bar when he was checked by seeing in the opposite doorway a man who stood as though petrified watching Cynthia Garrison's departing form. The intruder was about to withdraw when Phelan hailed him.

"Good evening," called the Alderman.

"Good evening, sir," said the newcomer respectfully, pausing on the point of leaving the foyer.

"I've met you before, I think," went on Phelan.

"Some days ago in the mayor's office," assented the other. "I am Thompson, Mr. Wainwright's private secretary."

"I'm Alderman Phelan of the Eighth, and I've seen you before we met at his honor's."

"So you said then, sir. But you were mistaken. Good evening."

He turned again toward the door, but Phelan resumed, without seeking to stop him:

"A mistake, was it? I'm not a man who makes many mistakes, Mr. Garrison."

The retreating secretary halted as though struck.

"That is another mistake, sir," he said in a muffled voice. "My name is Thompson."

"Is it, though?" inquired Phelan innocently. "It's queer how I could get mixed up so. When I was chief of police there was a bank president named Garrison who shot himself after bein' swindled an' whipsawed by a financier who was his dearest friend. He left a little daughter, Miss Cynthia, who you was lookin' at so keen just now, an' a son, who disappeared. That was nine years ago, an' I only saw the boy once, so maybe I've overplayed my hand in pipin' you off for him. But," added Phelan, laying a strong, detaining hand on Thompson's shoulder, "here comes some one who can clear it up easy enough."

The secretary twisted in the iron grasp and sought vainly to break away as Cynthia and Perry entered.

"Cynthia's lost her fan," explained Perry at sight of the alderman. "She's had me looking all over for the measly thing. Wait here a minute," he added to her, "and I'll chase into the conservatory and see if we left it there."

And, depositing the girl in a chair, he bolted away in search of the missing article.

"Now then, young man," said Phelan, "if your name's Thompson, as you say, there's no reason why you should object to my introducin' you to this young lady. Step up, son."

Still holding the reluctant, struggling secretary by the shoulder, Phelan turned to Cynthia.

"Miss Garrison," said he, "here's a gentleman I think you know. Would you mind lookin' him over?"

Wondering at the odd request, Cynthia raised her eyes to the stranger. But the latter persistently kept his face averted.

"I don't think I know him," she answered doubtfully. "There is something familiar about"—

The secretary shifted restlessly, unconsciously bringing his profile into

"Harry," the girl was pleading, "you do know me!"

her range of vision. With a gasp, Cynthia sprang to her feet, her face white, her eyes wide and incredulous.

"It's not—it's—oh, Harry!" she cried in an ecstasy of recognition, flinging her arms about the secretary's neck. "Harry! Brother! Back from the dead! Don't you know me? It's Cynthia! Don't"—

How to Care For Polished Tables.

Sometimes there are ways of doing things that are so simple that we forget to employ them. Here is an instance: The polished mahogany dining table is a source of some anxiety and care in many households. An easy matter it is to keep it bright and unspotted if after each meal you wash it with cold water, using a sponge. Then dry and rub briskly. This keeps the table top clear and bright and free from that greasy look so often seen upon tables in even well regulated households. White spots sometimes appear upon the polished surface of furniture. Just remember that you can readily remove such a spot by rubbing with a cloth moistened with alcohol. This will not mar the finish of the wood.

How to Clean Wooden Floors.

Many times when there is a large grease spot on the floor it is hard to remove it with soap and hot water. Fuller's earth will remove the most obstinate grease spot. Dissolve some dry fuller's earth in a small amount of hot water to the consistency of a thick paste. Then allow the earth to grow cold. When it is cold, spread it on the grease spot thickly and allow it to remain on all night or for several hours. When thoroughly dry, scour it off with cold water. Should the grease spot be deep it may be necessary to repeat the process once or twice.

How to Prepare Ice For the Sick.

When ice is broken in small pieces, ready for use in the sickroom, it melts rapidly. Keep a large piece in a basin or pail and cover with several thicknesses of newspaper and break off the pieces as needed. They can be broken any size desired and with little noise simply by sticking the point of a darning needle into the ice and tapping it with a thimble.

Death Was On His Heels.

Jesse P. Morris, of Skippers, Va., had a close call in the spring of 1906. He says: "An attack of pneumonia left me so weak and with such a fearful cough that my friends declared consumption had me, and death was on my heels. Then I was persuaded to try Dr. King's New Discovery. It helped me immediately, and after taking two and a half bottles I was a well man again. I found out that New Discovery is the best remedy for coughs and lung disease in all the world. Sold under guarantee at F. H. Hines & Co.'s Drug store. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

The Duelist's Disease.

Dr. Pean, a Paris physician, was called as a physician to attend a duel. One of the adversaries was so cowardly that he ran away after the first shot, unhurt. The four seconds, the remaining combatant and the doctor stood looking at each other with embarrassment and discomfiture when Dr. Pean broke the silence by saying gravely, "I know the disease that has suddenly attacked this gentleman." And, taking out his pencil and paper, he drew up a report as follows: "At the first shot Mr. X. was taken with a sudden attack of tachypodia that would not yield to treatment. The seconds, therefore, on consultation with the physician, stopped the duel." Thus "honor" was saved.

FRAZIER'S FOR SHOES

Just set aside your winter shoes for a rainy day and buy a pair of those elegant low shoes at Frazier's that he is selling so cheap.

FRAZIER'S

JACK HORNER'S MISTAKE.

When stingy Jack Horner
Put his ad. in a corner
And stuck in his thumb for a plum,
He was rather struck dumb
To find there was none,
Because his ad. was so bum.

To shake a plum tree,
You may quickly see,
It takes a man of large size;
To bring in the gold,
You need not be told,
You must largely advertise.

A space is a space,
And an ad. is an ad.,
And if you're a second Jack Horner
You'll run in a fine
To put out a gold mine,
But get left with your ad. in the corner.

BRAIN FAG OR BRAIN JAG?

Certain goose bone prophets in our schools of chicken house philosophy are wrinkling their brows to invent unusualities.

One erudite seer says that the longer a hen waits to lay the thicker gets the shell.

If the hen has to wait long for the nest, the shell gets so thick that the chick can't break through. This may not be a shell game, but it certainly is a thin shell argument for a thick shell theory. If true, the egg shipper might rejoice, for he could easily produce eggs with shells so thick that no baggage smasher could crack them.

Our California friends, who sell eggs by weight, would need only furnish few nests and much oyster shell at 30 cents the hundred to get rich.

Now, we believe when a man waits long for a shave on a Saturday night his whiskers grow with his impatience, but you can't apply this to an old hen. When an inspiration comes to a hen to lay, the egg is finished and has passed the lime point. It is then impossible for it to return to the egg making room, for it is now occupied by another egg.

A hen does not secrete sufficient lime to do such double stunts, the average hen finishing only one shell in two days. Besides, the shell is generally finished so smoothly when moment for laying comes that no new lime would adhere.

The oviduct down which the egg travels works like a department store moving stairway. The muscles only move one way—viz, to push the egg along to the outer world—and thus the egg can't return. Neither dare the egg remain long in the oviduct, or the hen dies of egg bound. Then nature has so constructed the healthy hen that she can never put off till tomorrow what she should do today. She does not lay to accommodate you, but to relieve herself.

If you don't provide a nest, she steals one. When the time comes she must lay, and if a nice soft nest cannot be found she will lay on a hard board.

She will go hungry to lay, for she prefers an empty oviduct to a full crop any day and cackles with joy and relief when the egg is laid.

The thick shell theory is the result of brain fag or brain jag. You may decide which.

A WORD TO THE WISE.

The breeding season is over, and the alert poultryman will be the first to advertise his surplus old birds at home and abroad to catch the early trade, knowing the few eggs they lay in the hot months will not pay their bills, and then comes the molt, when they lay hardly any. The longer kept the less chance for sale, and in molt they are not fit for market or to ship for breeders, and the feed they get should go to the pullets.

Now, think of the high priced feed and the millions of hens and ducks that must be disposed of to save a loss!

Indeed, when the sharp poultryman does not see an early and hard pull for breeders coming his way, thoroughbred or no thoroughbred, he dresses them and sells for the best price he can get before the enervating heat and molt put them out of condition. He makes that much at least, has room for young stock, less work for himself in the heated spell and more feed to push his young layers, on which depend his big winter profits.

DON'TS.

Don't fail to remember that redhot days mean fewer eggs, and then comes the molt.

Don't fail to buy a half wild turkey male. Plenty on the western market at a fair price.

Don't neglect a large supply of water when you feed oats. If the oats aren't soaked, you will be.

Don't forget to disinfect the water vessels once a week and keep them in the shade. Only decency.

Don't leave young stock to the fury of thunderstorms. You can stand a ducking and the other ducks also.

Don't take your eye off the clerk when he mixes that egg soda. May put in something strong. Then what?

Don't do a wildcat stunt when your neighbor proves your cat steals chickens. If his chickens come over into your garden, just trade.

PIGEON POX.

Pigeon pox is caused by protozoa and is more apt to appear in damp quarters and wet, foggy weather. Protozoa, or fungi, multiply rapidly where there is moisture, while bacteria increase faster in heat. Thus pigeon fanciers who are too lazy to patch leaking roofs or to clean up may simply blame the weather when their pretty pigeons are ornamented with yellow topped warts. Moist droppings mean pigeon pox, and this may come from splashed bathing water as well as from leaks. Chicken and pigeon pox are very similar, with the exception that the ailment is generally confined to the chicken's head, while on pigeons the disease will travel from head down the neck, over the under surface of the body and on the inner side of wings and legs.

It sometimes appears on the back of the body and wings, and when it takes a diphtheritic turn, invading the mouth and throat, the disease is fatal. You can imagine the appearance of a flock of beautiful pigeons with bunches of yellow topped warts on their eyes, necks and bodies.

Their rough plumage, rapidly exhausting strength and refusal to eat are signs to their worried owner that his pigeon pole will soon be empty.

Many, of course, cannot see, and squabs calling for feed to parent birds that are too blind to find their young or feed makes a pitiable sight.

The disease may be introduced by a purchased bird into a pen that is kept spick and span and a flock that is in the pink of condition.

PIGEON POX.

So you can see the necessity of quarantine and also for a special place to cage sick birds. The first thing to do is to remove all affected birds, with their squabs, to other quarters. Whitewash thoroughly, having the lime strong with crude carbolic acid.

Renew nest material and keep unaffected birds under close observation. Feed dry meal sprinkled with sulphur. In treatment if disease can be localized or confined to spot where it first appears the warts will dry up and fall off and the bird will be little affected.

Remove top of warts, dip a toothpick in carbolic acid and just touch the red spongy surface with the acid. Paint with iodine, having care not to get remedies in the eyes or on unaffected surface. Some burn out the warts with a redhot iron. This is cruel to the bird and dangerous for the doctor.

FEATHERS AND EGGSHELLS.

The dry hopper feed fellows aren't preaching its superiority for fertility. Their failure to make good last season shut off their eloquence.

"I will try geese this season," writes a friend. You ought to have a good market for breeders and eggs, judging from the number who are cackling about geese.

If you desire to keep your white chicks from cream and brassiness feed cracked corn sparingly. If you're in the brass weather vane business it doesn't matter.

One big squab firm trains kittens to keep rats and mice out of the lofts. The cats and birds become so accustomed to each other that they drink from the same canteen.

The establishment of free dispensaries for poor consumptives in Pennsylvania is certainly a mercy. Free nursing, free medicine, pure milk and fresh eggs cheer many a poor soul. The eggs are eaten raw, and fresh, sanitary eggs are in demand.

Poultrymen in general are giving a western judge the blue ribbon. When two chicken thieves were brought before him he gave them two years in the penitentiary and stated that he considered it as great a crime to steal a chicken as to steal a piece of plated silverware. Other judges, sit up and take notice.

Mr. J. H. Sublette, an American, has a poultry plant and apiary in the suburbs of Itavsna. His eggs commanded 90 cents all winter, and his honey sold at a premium. Knowing a negro's fear of bees, he surrounded his 1,000 hens with 500 beehives. A darky is especially afraid of spooks, witches, hard work and bee stingers.

A poultryman in November put 250 pullets in fifteen colony houses to discover whether they would do better there than in the big scratching shed. They laid well and kept well, but did not pay so well. Chickens love company. A big flock on the roost throws off an amazing lot of heat. The outside temperature of a hen's body in health averages 103 degrees, and she wears no "nightcap" either. She needs no "eye opener" at the dawn, nor does she care for a "morning glory." But you did swear off.

In the time of Pharaoh hens set, and the modern hen has asked for no patent on an improvement in her hatching apparatus. Now there are myriad manufacturers of hatching machines that all seem to be different, but they all claim to have patterned after mother hen. But there are hens and hens. Some set, some set standing and some set not. Some incubators hatch chickens, some hatch trouble, and some hatch a conflagration. Perhaps some of the incubator firms patterned after a bobtailed rooster in mistake.

Fish as They Bite.

"If you will take the time to investigate," said an old time angler who has observed as he fished, "you will find that the full stomached trout in your catch will outnumber the empty stomached ones ten to one. This would seem to indicate that it is the trout which has already dined well that is eager for more, while the one which has not dined at all regards it with indifference. In other words, it is the saintliest trout that bites and the hungry one that doesn't—paradoxical proposition. And this odd circumstance is not confined to brook trout. Pickerel not only swollen with food, but having the tails of fish they have since caught protruding from their mouths because there is as yet no room for the newly taken victims in the capacious pickerel maw, will yet voraciously seize the tempting live bait of the fisherman, as any angler who has fished much for pickerel has doubtless had frequent proof."—New York Sun.

A Book Accident.

When M. Henri, a quaint and shabby miser of threescore and ten, died in Paris some time ago, the closest search for treasure revealed nothing more valuable than two shelves of dingy looking books, which were sold, with his few sticks of furniture, to pay his funeral expenses. When the buyer of the books examined his purchase he discovered to his amazement two volumes of rare value—absolutely unique in the whole history of books—every page in each of them consisting of a five pound sterling note of the Bank of England. In all there were 820 pages, a nest accident of $20,500.

The Holy Carpet of Turkey.

The holy carpet of Turkey is a gorgeous piece of red velvet embroidered with gold. It takes a year to make the carpet, and the sultan of Turkey then intrusts it to the Egyptian pilgrims in place on the tomb of the prophet at Mecca. At the end of that time it is replaced by another carpet and is returned to Cairo with great ceremony. The right to carry the carpet has been handed down from camel to camel in the male line for hundreds of years.

Neighbors Do the Repeating.

"I wonder what's the meaning of the expression 'History repeats itself?'" asked Dubley.

"I don't know," replied Subbubs, "but I do know if it's scandalous family history it needn't exert itself at all."—Philadelphia Press.

In Luck.

"Mamma, do animals know what they are called?"

"No."

Jack uttered a sigh of relief and remarked, "It would have been so unpleasant for the donkey, wouldn't it?"

"This kid," declared the New York broker, "is no good as an office boy. He has absolutely no memory."

"Well," inquired the junior partner, "shall we fire him or take him into the firm?"—Kansas City Journal.

A Slow Process.

The constant dripping of water will wear away the hardest stone, but people who sit and wait around for it to do so don't get very far.—Chicago Record-Herald.

HAS PLAYED OVER ONE THOUSAND PARTS

Fred G. Conrad, producer and director of numerous popular attractions has taken a step in advance this season with an admirable production of a play by the distinguished author of "The Squawman," Edwin Milton Royle. The new production is a comedy drama entitled "My Boy, Jack" and the star part of Jack will be played by Eugene Moore, who will be pleasantly remembered in "Monte Cristo" and other high class productions.

Mr. Moore was born in Annapolis Valley, Nova Scotia, "the land of Evangeline," but spent most of his early life in Boston, where he prepared to enter the divinity school at Harvard, his parents having cut out a career in the pulpit for him. But he early developed a liking for the stage, and gave up his theology for the study of Shakespeare and the legitimate drama. The late Thomas W. Keene gave him his first training in the hard school of experience, and he afterwards served with Edwin Booth, John McCullough, Frederick Warde, Louis James and Stuart Robson in Shakespearean plays. After this excellent training on the legitimate stage he was starred for a period of five years playing Agustus Thomas' "The Burglar." He then joined the Frohman "Diplomacy" company and played the part of Julian Beaucaire. He was for a time leading man with Robert Downing and then took a turn at the stock business, playing leads with the Alcazar and Grand Opera House companies, San Francisco, and later accepted a flattering offer from the Thanhouser company of Milwaukee where he remained for three years. Then followed the principal stock theatres in Philadelphia, Nashville, Toronto, Chicago, Pittsburg and the Yorkville Stock Company in New York City. He has played over 1,000 different leading roles during his career, and in every respect he is a thoroughly trained and gifted actor.

Ancient Gallantry.

The respect and veneration paid to the fair sex formed an essential ingredient in chivalry. Principle of female adoration so prominently displayed in every aspect of chivalry extended its influence to the laws of the times, for we find James II. of Aragon ordering in this manner: "We will that every man, whether knight or no, who shall be in company with a lady pass safe and unmolested unless he be guilty of murder."

And Louis II., duke of Bourbon, instituting the order of the Golden Shield, enjoins his knights to honor, above all, the ladies and not permit any one to slander them, "because," adds he, "from them, after God, comes all the honor that man can acquire."

SERMON WILL BE LONG REMEMBERED

Baccalaureate to the High School Class Sunday Night.

BY THE REV. THOMAS N. HARROWELL

Was Eloquent in Language, Mode of Delivery and Lesson Conveyed.

Church Was Crowded—Splendid Music Under Direction of S. A. Marting—List of Graduates.

The baccalaureate sermon to the graduating class of the Charlevoix high school was delivered last Sunday evening in the Congregational church of this city by Rev. Thomas N. Harrowell, rector of Christ Church-Episcopal-Mission of this city.

The church was filled to the aisles, with the class and their relatives occupying front seats separated from the rest of the audience by draperies of the class colors, old gold and purple, while handsome floral decorations were massed near the pulpit.

The class members are:

Ruthe M. Bowdish, M. June Stafford Earl A. Young, Peter Donald Campbell, Dorothy Winthrop Iddings, E. Doris Kane, Isabelle W. Mitchell, Kathryn Z. LaPeer, V. Mae Feltz, John Lyogklip, Sam Levinson, Cleland Mayne, Henry Partridge, Arvilla Dunham, Irene E. Harsha, Marion E. Jones, Mary Clare O'Leury, Margaret A. Ryan, William David Robinson, Emerald Emory, Charles Plum.

A selected choir of twenty singers, under the direction of S. A. Marting, rendered with beautiful effect the chorus selection from the oratorio "Creation" by Haydn, "The Heavens are telling the Glory of God."

The evening's bible lesson from the 28th chapter of Job was read by Rev. F. H. Bayles, of the Baptist church; Rev. R. A. Wright, of the M. E. church offering prayer; Rev. H. A. Putnam, pastor of the Congregational church introduced Mr. Harrowell.

The address, text for which was taken from Job 28, was in every way a splendid effort, the speaker first showing the futility of man's efforts to gain knowledge by other means than that laid down in the bible, and showing with beautiful diction the littleness and the limitations of human efforts unaided by God; then contrasted the fullness of knowledge and understanding and its satisfying completeness, if accepted from the biblical standpoint as to its substance and the method of obtaining it. Altogether the sermon was one highly creditable to the talented gentleman who gave it, appropriate to the occasion, and very delightful as well as impressive to his hearers.

The choir sang the beautiful "Zion, Awake!" in a manner to delight the soul, after which the benediction was pronounced by Rev. F. H. Bayles.

The class of '08 is to be congratulated on the fact that their baccalaureate services will be memorable in Charlevoix school history as being very near the ideal in such matters, even the weather being in seeming accord with the best wishes of the friends of the graduates.

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

Will Give Reception to Class of '08 Friday Evening.

The twentieth annual reception of the Charlevoix High School Alumni Association will be given to the class of '08 at the Belvedere Casino Friday evening at 8:00 o'clock. All who attend are urged to be prompt.

GIFT TO UNIVERSITY

Tract of Land Near Pellston by Col. Charles Bogardus.

Through the generosity and philanthropy of Col. Charles Bogardus of Pellston, Mich., the University of Michigun has come into possession of 1,440 acres of land, partly timbered, fronting on Douglas Lake and located half way between Pellston and Cheboygan, for a site for the summer engineering camp.

The regents decided to change the camp from Burdickville and for that purpose appointed Regent Cary, Dean Cooley and Prof. J. B. Davis to visit Douglas Lake to select a new site. An appropriation of $2,500 was made for the camp this year. The Bogardus property was regarded as an ideal site and the committee conferred with the owners with a view of obtaining a lease. As the result of this conference Mr. and Mrs. Bogardus decided to accept the $2,500 and make the university a gift of the whole tract, the estimated value of which is $30,000.

In a letter to Regent Cary, inclosing a warranty deed to the property, Mr. and Mrs. Bogardus say they are moved to making the gift "in the realization that the benefit to these young people will be of lasting value to themselves and to this and other states and countries they represent."

The property, besides being well timbered, contains fine springs of water with an estimated flow of 3,000,000 gallons daily. Dean Cooley says of the new camp site, which will be named the Bogardus engineering camp:

"There are engineering problems to be fought here to keep the classes busy for fifty years without duplicating their work."

Some day the U. of M. will have summer schools in forestry and botany and in this respect, also, the tract of land will be invaluable.

NORMAL COMMENCEMENT

Class Day Exercises Thursday—Commencement Friday Nights

Members of the Class Did Themselves Proud—Address by Superintendent Wright.

The Class Day exercises of the county normal class, held at the Methodist church Thursday night, deserved a much larger crowd than was in attendance.

The program, as announced in last week's COURIER, was carried out in full, the members of the class demonstrating, that so far in life, the lesson conveyed by the baccalaureate sermon was being carried out, "To Do Ones Duty and Do It Well."

The contestants in the debate were so evenly matched that the judges had a hard time deciding and then were unable to agree on an unanimous decision, the negative side winning.

The commencement exercises were held at the same place Friday night, State Superintendent of Public Instruction Wright delivering the address. This address was along educational lines, and while it might have been of interest to the graduates, failed to hold the attention of the audience.

Commissioner Milford presented the diplomas with a few well-chosen words of advice and another class of better trained teachers were added to the splendid corps of Charlevoix county teachers.

ANNUAL SPRING MEETING

Of Charlevoix County Fair Association Held Thursday.

Officers and Superintendents Appointed—Races to be Improved.

The annual spring meeting of the officers and board of directors of the Charlevoix County Fair Association was held at East Jordan Thursday afternoon.

In spite of the very unfavorable weather at the last exhibition the finances were found to be in good condition and prospects bright for a banner exhibit this fall.

A change was made in division B, cattle, by the premiums on all thoroughbred stock being increased one dollar each. Additional entries were also made.

The speed committee were instructed to make an extra effort to get better horses and more of them, with a view of improving the races.

The securing of other attractions was left to the executive committee.

The premium lists will be ready on or before the first of August. The dates will be September 23, 24 and 25.

Officers of the association elected last fall are:

President—Robert Price.
Secretary—R. A. Brintnall.
Treasurer—Martin Rhuling.

BAPTIST ASSOCIATION

Holding a Successful Meeting at Boyne City This Week.

The meeting of the Grand Traverse Baptist Associatinn being held at Boyne City is one of the most successful meetings in the history of the association. Over one-hundred were present, forty-five of whom were delegates, at the opening B. Y. P. U. session, Rev. F. H. Bayles, of this city, gave a half hour address on the trip to Spokane, telling of the two minute address by Michigan representative, which was that Michigan ought to be the best Baptist state in the Union on account of the water.

The following B. Y. P. U. association officers were elected:

President—Howard Dunn, Kingsley.
Vice president—William A. Carey, Charlevoix.
Secretary—Miss Mamie Morehouse, Boyne City.

BASE BALL LEAGUE FORMED

At Meeting Held Here Monday—Four Surrounding Towns Represented.

Monday an important meeting was held in Charlevoix by the base ball magnates of surrounding towns. The following towns being represented: Boyne City, Messrs. Baxter and Sandlenunn; East Jordan, F. A. Kenyon; Charlevoix, D. F. Meech and A. J. Usher; Petoskey, Mr. Gundry, whose proxy was held by Mr. Usher.

Steps were taken for the formation of a regular schedule of playing dates between the four towns, which will be announced later. It was planned to have the season begin immediately after July 4. Rules will be adopted governing the control of players.

Missionary Meeting.

Special missionary meeting at 3 p. m. Friday, June 12, in Baptist church, led by Field Secretary Miss Florence E. Grant, Detroit, and Miss Kitty Cooper, Petoskey.

A cordial invitation extended to all ladies.

GRADE EXAMINATIONS

One Hundred Sixty Two Wrote—Sixty One From Rural Schools

Thirty Two of Whom are on List of Successful Pupils.

The result of the grade examinations this year, while not as satisfactory as we hope future results will be, was on the whole, very gratifying. In all, 162 students wrote the examination.

This included the classes from the village schools numbering in all about 100. The report this year shows a decided improvement in the matter of averages. Students are balancing up better and show that the entire course is being evenly brought up.

Other reports will show many students who have excellent standings in some branches would fall very low in others. The report this year shows a decided improvement in this line and also shows a very much higher general average than former reports have shown. Rural conditions also show very decided improvements along these same lines. The percentage of students passing this year is higher than that of any previous year, all of which shows that the general condition of the schools, both rural and village, is improving.

A careful examination of the reports will also show that the students making the best showing were in most cases, those who came from schools taught by trained teachers, which is another proof that a fund of general knowledge is not all that is necessary in the makeup of a good teacher. The teacher, who has had the advantage of a normal training or else has had some years of training in the actual school room work invariably produces the better results, even though the other one may be the more brilliant in the matter of what might be termed stored knowledge.

We will not give the names of the village students who passed the examination as they will reach the public through the school reports. Out of a total of 61 rural students, who wrote the examination, diplomas were issued to 32 and many of the others made an excellent showing and could, if they would spend a little time in reviewing, do good work in the ninth grade next year.

The following is a list of rural students to whom eighth grade diplomas were issued:

Earl Shapton, Theo Bowman, Will Koteskey, Leon Ransom, Harry Bardwell, Patrick Boyle, Francis Gordon, Beatrice Gallagher, Anna Curry, Mildred Hutton, Countess Mason, Florine Hudkins, Arthur Ripp, Goldie Schneider, Goldie Sheatsley, Edward Jensen, Constant McCauley, Myrtle Douglass, Susie Malloy, Mabel Dunlop, Leon VanGorder, Sophie LaLonde, Hazel Pearl, Harold Tillotson, Milo Shaw, Paul Colden, Ada Bardwell, Martha Gallagher, Rachel Donlevy, Ulysses McCann, Charters Curry, Walden Valentine.

J. H. MILFORD, Commissioner.

GREAT TIME IS ASSURED

At the Celebration of the Fourth at Charlevoix—Two Ball Games.

While we cannot tell much more about the preparations for the celebration of the Fourth than last week, the men who have it in charge have not been idle and a grand old time on new lines is assured.

East Jordan, at a citizens' meeting held last week, decided not to celebrate, but to come to Charlevoix and Boyne City instead, expecting reciprocity at the time of the county fair.

Arrangements have been made for two ball games between Charlevoix and East Jordan and Petoskey.

BLACK-EASTCOTT

Popular Marion Man Will Wed Antrim County Lady Today.

The wedding of Henry Black, Jr., and Miss Kittie L. Eastcott, of Banks township, Antrim county, will occur today at the home of the bride's parents, in the presence of a large company of invited guests.

Mr. Black is one of Marion's best and well known farmers and numbers his friends by the legions, who unite in extending congratulations.

COUNCIL HELD OVER

Unable to Secure a Quorum Thursday Night—Meeting Held Friday Night.

Thursday seemed to be an off day for Charlevoix. Not only did she get trimmed in a ball game, which was almost a farce, but the demoralization seemed to strike the council. When the time for the regular meeting of the council nine arrived only Alderman Wilbur, Ward, Glassford, Captain Berdan and Clerk Lewis were able to respond to the call. After waiting for about an hour for Alderman Fowler to appear, the only one whom there was any hope of securing, the first inning resulted in no score, Fowler, Geiken and Swinton being out.

Ward was then despatched to find Fowler and reported that he was out on the lake and probably would not be able to come to bat that evening, however after a little Fowler appeared and Capt. Berdan was sent to find Ward, when he too disappeared for the night.

Second inning resulted no score, Ward, Geiken and Swinton out.

The meeting was then adjourned until Friday when no business was transacted except the regular allowance of bills.

ANCIENT ORDER OF GLEANERS

Local Arbors are Being Organized in the County.

Mrs. Coblentz and Mrs. Ramsey of Traverse City, organizers for the farmers' insurance order, the Gleaners, are working in Charlevoix county at the present time. They have perfected an organization at Ironton and are now at work in Marion.

This order has had a steady growth since it was first organized and in the thickly settled parts of southern Michigan an arbor can be found in nearly every township.

EIGHTEEN TO SIXTEEN

In Petoskey's Favor Was the Result of Thursday's Game.

Good Ball Was Played at the Start—Then Base Running Practice—Honors Even.

Thursday Petoskey and Charlevoix played their second game, the score standing 18 to 16 in Petoskey's favor. As previously announced both teams are evenly matched, both being capable of playing good ball and both able to put up an exhibition like Thursday's game.

In the beginning a good game was promised, fast ball with few errors being played. Petoskey went to pieces first in the fourth inning, and Charlevoix, not to be out done followed promptly and from that time to the finish followed suit.

It was simply a slugging match, tiresome to players and spectators alike. While the usual knockers are abroad, the facts remain that the Charlevoix boys demonstrated that they can play good ball, and with more team work and practice, are ready for all comers. The features of the game, while it was a game, was the good work with the stick done by the players. An analysis of the score will show that Charlevoix though defeated played a better and more even game than the visitors.

PYTHIAN DAY IN CHARLEVOIX

Thursday, June 18, is the Date Set For Picnic.

ADDRESS OF THE DAY BY C. A. PALMER

Famed in Pythian Circles and Next Auditor General.

Base Ball Games, Life Savers Drill and Many Other Attractions—County Association to be Formed.

Monday, the committees appointed from the East Jordan and Charlevoix lodges, Knights of Pythias, met in Charlevoix and decided that it would be for the best interest of the order to have the picnic at Charlevoix instead of Ironton, a decision which was approved of by the Boyne City committee, who were consulted by phone.

While all the arrangements have not been perfected as yet, enough has been decided upon to make it an established fact that it will be a record-breaking day for Charlevoix.

The picnic proper will be held in the park and a full attendance is promised from all the Pythian lodges of our neighboring towns.

The famous "Puss" Palmer of Manistee has been secured to deliver the address, which in itself will draw an enormous crowd, as he has the reputation of being one of the brightest, wittiest and brainy picnic speakers in Michigan and undoubtedly will be the next Republican candidate for auditor-general.

In addition the life savers will give an exhibition drill and one of the fastest ball teams to be secured will cross bats with the Charlevoix bunch.

At the same time a County Pythian Association will be formed and not only will it be a gala day for the entire county, but will mean much for the future of the order in Charlevoix county.

SEMI-ANNUAL MEETING

Of B. Y. P. U. Held Monday—Officers are Elected.

The semi-annual meeting of the Charlevoix B. Y. P. U. was held Monday night and elected the following officers:

President—Vern M. Norton.
Vice President—Miss E. Tysver.
Secretary—Miss E. McClanathan.
Treasurer—Miss Minnie E. Payton.
Cor. Secretary—Miss Grace E. Papineau.
Collector—Wm. A. Carey.
Organist—Miss Minnie E. Payton.
Asst. Organist—Miss Mary E. Tysver.

It is not the past year that we are hopeful or satisfied with, but with the present indications and deep interest which is manifested through our own union. We feel sure that we are to rise to a higher standard as a result of the harmony which exists among our new officers, committees and members.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured.

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the Mucous lining of the Eustachian tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give one hundred dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

A Wreck.

A certain man, who had been imbibing freely, was passing along the highway, when, with a very unsteady gait, he approached a watering trough, and fell headlong into it. A policeman happened along and pulled him out. "I'm all right, officer," sputtered the man, "but see if you can't save the women and children!"

This rather amusing story, which bears the ear-marks of truth, is very suggestive. This man, under the effects of intoxication, evidently received the impression that when he plunged into the water there was a "shipwreck," and he suddenly became anxious that the "women and children" should be saved from the sinking steamer!

The impression that there had been a "wreck" was verily true. And what a wreck! The wreck of manhood, only the animal apparently remaining.

His instinct of self-preservation was gone, for he would doubtless have drowned in a foot of water, had not help been at hand. He was thoroughly helpless.

His conscience was dulled to that extent, that he probably blamed; not the rum that was in him, but the water in the trough, for his misfortune. Had the water been inside and the liquor outside, he would never been a victim of so violent a "catastrophe!"

"Yea, thou shalt be as he that lieth down in the midst of the sea, or as he that lieth upon the top of a mast. They have stricken me, shalt thou say, and I was not sick; they have beaten me and I felt it not; when shall I awake? I will seek it yet again."

This pen picture drawn by the hand of the wisest man of ancient Israel, is true to life in this age, when men attempt to "add drunkenness to thirst."—Rev. O. W. Scott, Fithburg, Mass.

He Got What He Needed.

"Nine years ago it looked as if my time had come," says Mr. C. Farthing of Mill Creek, Indian Territory. "I was so run down that life hung on a very slender thread. It was then my druggist recommended Electric Bitters. I bought a bottle and I got what I needed—strength. I had one foot in the grave, but Electric Bitters put it back on the turf again, and I've been well ever since." Sold under guarantee at F. G. Hines & Co.'s drug store. 50c.

Predicting by Bones.

Is it not strange that, although the Transvaal has been conquered by whites since 1836, the belief in Kaffir doctors and their wizarding has not died out? Nearly every old Kaffir has always with him a bag of bones—knuckles and joints of animals. With these he pretends to be able to foretell the future. He throws the "dolos," as they are called, and then reads out the omens. Should a white man wish to confer with the oracle he must throw the bones himself. I have known, says a Transvaal traveler, many whites who firmly believe in the ability of the Kaffir doctor to cure them from sundry ills, and I have been informed that in Rhodesia the Kaffir doctors save many whites from the ravages of the terrible fevers that rage there in addition to coping successfully with the toothache and other ills.

CHAPTER III—Continued.

"I am afraid you've made a very strange blunder, Miss Garrison," returned the secretary, his voice hoarse and tremulous. "My name is"—

"Your name's Harry Garrison!" Phelan shouted. "What's the use of lyin' to your own sister? I give you credit for havin' good reasons for callin' yourself Thompson, an' I think I begin to see what them reasons are, but when it comes to denyin' your own sister you're playin' it down low, whatever your game may be, and I've a good mind to"—

"Harry," the girl was pleading, "you do know me! After all these nine lonely years have you no greeting for me? Every night I've prayed that God would bring you back to me, and now"—

The secretary's pallid, expressionless mask of a face broke in a flash into a look of infinite love and yearning. With a single gesture he gathered Cynthia's fragile body in his arms and crushed her against his breast.

He gathered Cynthia's fragile body in his arms.

"Oh, my little sister!" he murmured, a great sob choking his words. "My little, little sister!"

Phelan cleared his throat and coughed savagely to express his contempt for the mist that sprang into his own hard old eyes. The sound recalled the secretary to himself.

"You've trapped me into this," he exclaimed, with a laugh that was half a groan, "and you must both promise not to betray my secret. It won't be much longer now, thank God! But you'll both promise, won't you?"

"Sure!" assented Phelan.

"And you, too, Cynthia?" pleaded her brother. "You can trust me, can't you?"

"Of course I can. If you insist, I won't tell any one. I"—

"I'm happier this minute than I've ever been in all my whole life!" smiled the secretary, again clasping his sister in his arms. "If you only knew, little girl, how I've longed for this!"—

"Here's the tan!" announced Perry, hurrying around the corner of the doorway. "Found it under a"—

He stopped short, open mouthed, dumb and motionless. Thompson and his sister stood in close embrace before him, with Phelan looking on like some obese caricature of a benevolent fairy.

The fan slipped from young Wainwright's nerveless grip and fell with a clatter to the polished floor, its ivory sticks snapping like icicles.

CHAPTER XI.

At sound of the breaking fan all three participants in the strange reunion turned. For a second or more they faced the crimson faced, dumfounded Perry without a word. There was no element in the affair on which neither Phelan nor Cynthia had counted when giving Thompson their promise not to reveal his identity. They gradually realized this, and it left even the ready witted Phelan speechless.

Perry himself was first to break the spell.

"Well," he observed, with an assumption of airy scorn that was meant to be annihilating, "you all seem quite happy. Don't mind me! I'm sorry to butt in on this cute little love fest, but I left a fiancee here. Perhaps one of you can explain what's happened to her since I"—

"Oh, Perry," exclaimed Cynthia, "don't be silly! I'll tell you all about it some time. It is"—

"Some time!" squealed Perry, rage battering down his attempt at sarcasm. "Some time! Maybe it might be just as well if you did condescend to explain. Here you promise to marry me, and ten minutes later I find you in a catch-as-catch-can hug with this ugly little shrimp and Phelan looking on as happy as if he'd eaten a canary! And then you've got the gall to tell me you'll explain 'some time!'"

He glared at Cynthia in all the majesty of outraged devotion, only to surprise on that young lady's face a look that indicated a violent struggle with the desire to laugh.

"This is funny all right, I guess not!" he snapped. "Cynthia, you've mauled and smashed a loving heart, and I'll make a bit with myself by forgiving you, but as for you," wheeling about and thrusting his furious face to within three inches of Thompson's immobile countenance—"as for you, I'm going to do all sorts of things to you the moment Miss Garrison will have the kindness to shassay out of the room. Your sorrowful relatives will have all manner of fun sorting you out when I've finished with you! Steal my sweetheart, would you, not ten minutes after I'd"—

"There!" interposed Phelan, shoving his powerful bulk good naturedly between the two younger men and linking his arm in Perry's. "Now you've got quite a bunch of hot words off your chest, an' you'll be in better shape to hear sense. Ain't you just a little bit ashamed?"

"Ashamed?" sputtered Perry. "Who? I? Well, that"—

"Yes, you, youngster, and if you holler like that in comp'ny I'll sure be forced to wind up by spankin' you. Now, stand off there—no, over there where you can see Miss Garrison—an' listen to me. So! Now, first of all, did you happen to be in love with this young lady?"

"It's none of your measly business, but I did."

"Why'd you ask her to hitch up with you for keeps?"

"Because I loved her and"—

"Because you had a lot of faith in her, too, hey?" persisted the alderman.

"Yes, and a nice way she's"—

"Pretty girl, too," mused Phelan as if to himself. "In my young days if I could 'a' got a little beauty like that to sign articles with me I'd 'a' thought I was the original Lucky Jim. I'd"—

"So did I!" interrupted Perry hotly. "I"—

But Phelan was continuing in the same abstract monologue:

"An' if I could 'a' seen from her eyes like any dough head could see from Miss Garrison's that she had a heart as big as a watermelon an' as true as a Bible text an' as warm as a happy man's hearth fire well, if I'd seen all that an' got wise to the gorgeous news that that same heart was just chock-a-block full of love for my own grocery, cheap skate self I'd 'a' hopped down on both knees an' sent up a bunch of prayers to be allowed to go on dreamin' an' never, never wake up."

Phelan paused. This time Perry did not break in, and the half audible monologue continued:

"I'd have had the sense to know that a girl with eyes like those couldn't be a dirt an' couldn't double cross the man she loved if her life depended on her doin' it. I'd 'a' licked any guy that said she could, an' if I'd seen her kissin' another man I'd 'a' punched myself on the jaw an' called myself a liar. That's what Jimmy Phelan of the Eighth would 'a' done. An' "—

"Say," broke in Perry in a curiously subdued voice. "Those eyes of mine do funny things sometimes. I'll bet $5 they played a joke on me just now. And even if they didn't I don't believe 'em. Cynthia, I'm dead stuck on you! You're all right even if you did happen to be acting a trifle eccentric a few minutes ago. You can explain or not, as you like. If you'll just say you love me, that's ace high with yours truly."

He slipped an arm about her waist as he spoke, awkwardly seeking to atone for his recent anger. The secretary looked at them for an instant, then said briefly:

"You can tell him, Cynthia. He's a good fellow. Come on, alderman. I think you and I still have something to say to each other."

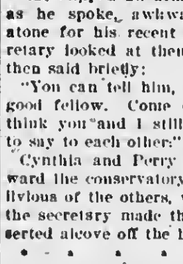
Cynthia and Perry drifted away toward the conservatory again, quite oblivious of the others, while Phelan and the secretary made their way to a deserted alcove off the ballroom.

* * * * * * * *

"I've been looking all over for you, Mr. Bennett," called Judge Newman, hurrying out through the chain of anterooms as Alwyn wandered out of the ballroom into the foyer a few moments later.

"Anything important?" asked Bennett, pausing in his stroll and greeting the older man cordially. He had known the judge as long as he could remember and had always had a decided liking for the pompous henpecked little dignitary. Surrounded as he was by political intrigue, heartache and association with rogues, the harassed young man rather welcomed the variety promised by a chat with his old friend of his boyhood.

"Anything important, Judge?" he repeated. "Or are you just taking pity on a lonely chap and giving him a chance to chat with you over old times?"



He slipped an arm about her waist as he spoke.

"Well," began the judge, his customary air of pompous nervousness tinged by an almost confidential manner, "I would like to have a little business talk with you if you don't mind discussing work at a ball."

"Not at all. I've had the honor of dancing with three of your daughters this evening, and the least I can do is to repay such pleasure by"—

"Did you, really?" beamed the judge, on whom the unmarried state of his four fast aging girls rested heavily. "I'm sure Mrs. Newman will be pleased. But this business matter. You—you won't misunderstand me"—

"Of course not," replied Alwyn heartily. "You and I are too old friends, judge, to"—

"I hope so; I hope so," conceded Newman, with growing anxiety in his tone. "You see"—

"I see you have some trouble coming to the point," said Alwyn, pitying the sorry you feel so. You were my father's friend, and I like to think of you as one of my own best friends. There surely should be no hesitation in asking anything in my power to grant."

Thus emboldened Newman blurted out:

"I—we—that is, seems to me you have been a little hard upon this Borough franchise bill, if you don't mind my saying so, Bennett. Couldn't you let up on them now?"

"Why, no, judge, I can't," replied Bennett, still failing to connect Newman with the Wainwright-Horrigan clique and attributing the judge's interest in the matter to an amateur's love of dabbling in politics. "I can't let up on that fight," he continued. "All perpetual franchises are wrong, and this particular franchise bill is rotten to the core. In sheer justice to my oath of office I must fight it."

"My boy," said the judge in a fatherly manner that he had often found successful in argument, "I was in politics long before you were born, and I'm speaking for your own good when I say I deeply regret the stand you've taken in this matter. You objected to the bill in its original form. Almost every change you demanded has been made in it. As the gentlemen who asked me to speak to you said"—

He checked himself a minute too late. The narrowing of Bennett's eyes and the vanishing of the friendly light in the young man's face warned Newman he had made a fatal error.

"So you come to me as an emissary, not as a friend," said Bennett slowly, "and the 'gentlemen' you come from"—

"Are the men who represent all that can make or break your career—capital and political organization."

"In other words, Wainwright and Horrigan?"

"Yes. All they ask is that you remain neutral; that you"—

"That I look the other way while they rob the city?"

"I am an old man, Bennett," evaded the judge, trying another tack, "and I've seen one rash step wreck many a bright career, just as this will wreck yours. Never antagonize wealth and the organization. The public for whom you sacrifice yourself will forget you in a month. Capital and politics never forget."

"I am not catering to the public. I am acting as my own conscience"—

"But this is stubbornness, not conscience. All you have to do is to remain neutral. If you do this I am authorized to promise you—now, listen—to promise you the nomination for governor when your term as"—

"That's the bait, is it?" cried Alwyn angrily. "If I consent to betray my trust I'll get the governorship. The bribe is golden, and I don't wonder at Horrigan for offering it. The only thing that surprises me is that he should have chosen such a man as you for his lackey and go-between."

"'Lackey!' 'Bribe!' 'Go-between!'" echoed the judge in real indignation. "How dare you, sir? This"—

"Isn't it a bribe," hissed Alwyn, "and weren't you the man chosen to offer it? It will do you no good to bluster or grow indignant. In your heart you know the words I used were deserved. The governorship offer was a bribe, pure and simple, and worthy the modern highwaymen who made it, but that you, a judge—a former friend of my own blameless father—that you should come to me on such a vile errand turns me sick. Heaven help justice and right when our judges can be controlled by a political boss and a roll of bills! That's all! I don't care to go further into the subject!"

Bennett walked away, leaving the little judge to stare after him, pink with wrath, speechless with amazement. In all his sixty years no man had thus laid bare to Newman his own heart, stripped of its garments of respectability and self deception. And, as usual in such cases, now that the truth had been driven home to him, Newman wrathfully denounced it, even to himself, as a lie.

Still flushed and incoherent, he wheeled to face a trio who were just returning from the supper room. They were Dallas, Gibbs and Wainwright.

"Hello!" exclaimed Wainwright in surprise. "What's the matter with you, judge? Are you ill?"

"If—if Mrs. Newman should come to know of this," sputtered the judge, glaring from one to the other, "she"—

"To know of what?" queried Gibbs. "What has happened?"

"Happened?" fumed Newman. "I have been insulted—grossly, vulgarly insulted!"

"Insulted, judge?" repeated Dallas. "By whom?"

"By Alwyn Bennett!" snapped the judge. "Outrageously"—

"Impossible!" exclaimed Dallas. "There must be a mistake somewhere. Mr. Bennett is too well bred to insult any man, much less a man so much older than"—

"A gentleman, is he? I should not have believed it. He has insulted me most"—

"I'm not surprised," observed Wainwright.

"I am," announced Dallas.

"Naturally," sneered Wainwright. "If you can remain on speaking terms with him after his abominable treatment of me you can easily overlook any other brutality of his."

The Picturesque Fez.

Present day pillagers at Fez will bag very few fezzes compared with the quantity which might have been looted a century ago, for the manufacture of the red and brimless cap, with its black tassel, which adorns the heads of the Levantine peoples, has long since ceased in the sacred city of its origin. Tunis is now the African factory of the headgear loved alike of Turk, Persian and Greek. But Tunis has formidable rivals in Germany and Switzerland, who make a handsome profit by helping to clothe the Mussulman.—London Chronicle.

AN examination of the state crop report, in another part of this issue but confirms our belief that Charlevoix county presents the greatest field for agricultural development to be found today. In practically everything she leads. We, in this section, are peculiarly well situated to take advantage of the exodus which is taking place, in answer to the cry, "back to the soil," back to the soil, where the cares and stress of business life are laid aside, where results are shown in every effort to improve, where study of the vast capabilities of the soil becomes a pleasure and never a task, where the stored up fertility of ages lies at our feet and cries,—Here is your treasure box, exhaustless, if you but open it with the keys of rotation, of cultivation, and of fertilization,—The studying out of these problems become the most facinatting and elevating pursuit of man. No thoughts of evil can enter the mind of the successful tiller of the soil, who constantly has before him the wonderful plan of creation.

With facilities for land and water transportation, the sugar factory, creamery and seed ware house already established industries, a country where fruit is produced to perfection. We present a field waiting and ready for the husbandman without any preliminary period of evolution.

Our opportunity lies in letting the world know the untold wealth stored in our soil.

Will we grasp it?

FOR BLACK ROT IN GRAPES.

Michigan Agricultural College Issues a Bulletin on Treatment.

Prof. L. R. Taft, horticulturist at the Michigan Agricultural college, has issued a timely bulletin on the treatment of black rot in grapes, for the development of which the past four seasons have been so favorable It says:

"To be effectual, the treatment must begin before the grapes have been attacked, as, once inside, the spread cannot be checked. For this reason also, it is very important that the treatment be so thorough as to reach every part of every grape and leaf.

"The first application should be made just before the buds open and should not only thoroughly soak the vines, but the trellises should also be sprayed. For this treatment it will be well to use a copper sulphate solution of two pounds in 50 gallons of water.

"After the growth has started and before the blossoms have opened the first spraying of bordeaux mixture should be made. This should be repeated when the fruit has set and is the size of small peas. Especially if the season is favorable to the development of the disease, the spraying should be repeated every ten days until the fruit begins to show color. In case the disease is not troublesome upon unsprayed vineyards, a somewhat longer interval would answer, but four or five applications after the fruit has set can generally be made with profit in sections where the disease is working.

"For the first application of bordeaux mixture it will be well to use four pounds of copper sulphate and six pounds of lime in 50 gallons of water, but for later sprayings the amount can be reduced to three and five pounds respectively. If necessary to spray after the fruit has begun to color, the amounts should be reduced to two pounds copper sulphate and two of lime in 50 gallons.

"Another remedy that can be used to advantage when the grapes are ripening is known as 'soda bordeaux.' It is prepared by dissolving three pounds of copper sulphate and one pound of concentrated lye and slaking five ounces of lime, using two gallons of hot water for each. Mix the lime and copper sulphate solution and after adding the lye solution, dilute to 50 gallons."

THEATRICAL

The Great Joy of Giving.

Character is never complete, and no man is refined until he is purged of selfishness, this is not a trite saying, but a truism, and how few of us are thoroughly unselfish? We all have our faults in this direction to a greater or lesser degree, but for all that, there is not one of us that does not enjoy and appreciate a character that is utterly devoid of selfishness. Mr. Edwin Milton Royle's Hero, Jack Paden, in "My Boy Jack," is one of this kind. In his composition there is not the slightest taint of selfishness, he never hesitates in giving up what is most dear to himself, for the happiness of another. There is no intermediate stage with Jack, he doesn't stop and wonder if he will be benefited in any way, but does it, its a quick natural impulse, and in his soul there is the great joy of giving, and his influence must be felt, we can't get away from it, it grapples our hearts and draws us towards him. It is a touch of the divinity which we can't and we don't want to resist, but for all this, "My Boy Jack," is one of us, and when he appears at the Charlevoix Theater Saturday night, June 13, don't be afraid to call and introduce yourself, his heart is big and there is room for all.

Hear "My Boy, Jack."

A Militant Lecturer.

A well known lecturer tells the following story against himself:

When lecturing in an Australian bush town he waxed eloquent on the athletic feats of Britons. After each assertion came a deep toned "It's a lie!" from a drunken auditor.

"Give me a stop of five minutes," said the lecturer to his audience. Off went his coat, down jumped the lecturer, and in a moment he had collared the interrupter and bundled him out.

"If I had know you meant to do that," said the manager, "I'd have charged double prices."—London Tatler.

THE HERO IN BLUE.

'Tis not of arms with Virgil we sing,
Nor just of the man with the hoe;
'Tis not for the Carnegie hero we bring
Our verses with praise all aglow;

But 'tis for the hero who wears the blue—
The blue overalls, well worn;
Who wears a Coxey badge or two
And checked shirt, soiled and torn.

His hands are neither soft nor small,
His face not creamy white,
But the hero who wears the overall
You just can bet's all right.

He wears no starry diamond ring
Nor sports a stovepipe hat,
He never puts on the dandy fling,
But he's the man for a' that.

Leave us our noble Coxey badge blue
And hand your roses of state.
We'd rather grub from dinner pails, too,
Than dine from White House plate.

C. M. B.

THE GAPES.

It is stated that 3,000,000 chicks died in 1907.

The most of the bright eyed fluffy ruffles go by the gape route.

England loses 500,000 annually by this disease, and thousands of her pheasants and quail are choked by the "branch (gape) worm."

Wet weather and sandy soil are gape worm breeders. They were first discovered in the United States in 1799, and, though various theories have been ascribed for their existence, about the only thing so far proven is that the gapes are here.

It is a double worm, the male and female being a Siamese twin. Each head has a sucker that attaches itself to the inner surface of the windpipe, sucking the blood, irritating the lining, so that, with loss of blood, constant irritation and accumulated bloody mucus, the victim soon dies of weakness and suffocation.

Sixty have been found in one pheasant, thirty-seven in a pouit and thirty-five in a chick. Three or four are enough to cause death, though birds three or four weeks old are little affected and adults not at all.

The earthworm is stepmother to the gapeworm, just as the common hen is believed to breed within her the black head germs. In some way the gapeworm egg gets into the earthworm and develops there.

The chick swallows the earthworm and gets the gapeworm for a side dish.

Then the fight for life begins. The chick throws up its head, coughs, gapes and after a hard struggle throws up some of the worms. It promptly eats them. The eggs in these worms are hatched in the digestive tract; the new worms fall to the ground; another chick picks them up and also gets the gapes. It's on the endless worm style.

TREATMENT.

The following remedies are good. Take your pick:

One garlic bulb chopped in feed for ten chicks, pheasants or poults. Camphor or assafoetida in one grain pills three times a day.

Ten drops turpentine to pint of drinking water. Place chicks in covered box and blow in tobacco smoke or dust slacked lime through muslin top. The chick will cough up the stupefied worms, but be careful not to smother chicks.

Loop a horsehair or trim a small wing feather except the end, dip in turpentine and twirl in windpipe. Worms will be withdrawn with hair or feather. Grease under neck with lard and turpentine, equal parts. Buy an extractor and use according to directions. Our plan of keeping chicks out of the wet and on boards for three weeks saves us from this plague. The gapes especially attack chicks and turkeys from one to four weeks old and pheasants at change of plumage, just when sex can be distinguished.

PREVENTION AND CURE.

We once visited a poultryman who prided with pride to a great accumulation of bottles, patent poultry nostrums and prescriptions and exclaimed, "This is my medicine chest!"

But with all this his poultry were always ailing. He may have been long on poultry physic, but was very short on prevention.

The man who is proficient in physic and prevention need not make a drug store of his birds. It's much easier and more profitable to lead your fowls safely round the precipices of disease than to get them back after they've gone over. And how easy to keep them well generally when the causes of disease are so well known. Here they are in brief:

Filth, improper feeding, crowding, vermin, dampness, drafts, extremes of heat and cold, exposure and ego tonics.

There may seem i ofmental causes where diseases are introduced by strange birds, originate in heredity or from floating germs.

But every stranger should be quarantined. Only strong stock should be bred from, and birds in health and sanitary environment offer little encouragement to germs seeking lodgment.

Yes, my friend, you are wise to be prepared for war.

You should accumulate a library of good medical works, acquire a knowledge of the symptoms of every known fowl disease, and you should by your study, observation and experiment be able to detect the first symptoms of disease and make a correct diagnosis and have the remedy right there to cure or the wisdom to see the incurable and to end it with the ax.

But what does it amount to if you, Mr. Chicken Doctor, have not learned the old lesson that "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure?" A physician depends for his living on doctoring people who are sick, but has nothing to do with their getting sick.

A poultryman depends for a living on keeping his fowls well and has every thing to do with their being in health or sickness.

If through ignorance of the requirements his birds are afflicted and he meets with loss he is to be greatly pitied, but if he sins against knowledge he deserves no sympathy and only condemnation.

FEATHERS AND EGGSHELLS.

German experts have tested the water glass egg preservative and find eggs keep well four years.

You should make a track for hauling your brooders and colony houses from place to place. The wheels may be found on a foundry scrap pile; the rest you can make yourself.

There is nothing in the statement that soft food belongs infertile eggs. We fed one pen nothing but oats, cut bone, greens and soft mash of bran and mids, and their eggs were highly fertile.

Your early chicks must not only be fed well, but they must be kept out of the wind and rain. We use heavy matting on the wire pens to break the wind, keep out rain and the hot sun.

If your watchdog went to roost with the chickens and got the distemper it certainly shows the scratching litter was damp enough. Maybe when heat option comes your way you'll keep dry.

Homers in good health carry the head erect, have a bright, clear eye and the feathers cling tightly to their plumpe bodies. When pigeons loaf and puff up their feathers, get the louse gun.

When a thunderstorm threatens to catch those chicks in a hurry simply have a piece of raw meat handy. Our chicks pile over each other for it, and we gather up a thousand in a few minutes.

At one time a fresh egg was equal to a pound of meat. Now scientists say four eggs do the stunt. But you never see a gilt edge sign to this effect in meat markets, and their storage eggs are equal to anything.

The real causes of leg weakness in chicks are heavy wings and running on board floors. To prevent it get them out on the ground soon as they are gape proof and clip the wings. Do not pull the wing feathers. It is cruel.

When you get brain fag take time off or you may serve up stale ideas or have a brain storm. Fresh air and garden spading, chickens and cherry tree climbing are preventives. What are the symptoms and sensations of a brain fag? Is yours chronic?

Ireland is not only organized for liberty, but for poultry culture. Fifteen thousand dozen of thoroughbred eggs were distributed last year. The appropriation for some months reached $2,000. Women are employed to lecture on chickens at $15 a month. These women certainly can lecture.

Los Angeles has the largest pigeon plant in the world. Fifty thousand pigeons, mostly white, are housed in cotes and a large shed building. They eat three tons of wheat a day. What a fluttering and flapping of white wings as they rise for flight. What a tremendous stir when they return.

Your customer kicked on your last shipment because the dressed chickens were dark and had a bad color. Yes, of course they were fresh and yellow when you shipped. You cool them too quickly. By putting them at once into ice you drive the animal heat into the crop and entrails and they ferment. Gradually drive out the animal heat by three changes of well water before using ice.

"I am going into the poultry business to lose my own boss," says one. Don't get gay, my friend. You'll paddle your own canoe against a rock, and it might be a Plymouth Rock poultry farm too. The poultryman not only gets henpecked, has no holidays, can't blow in money at seashore resorts, but the business, if done right, is the most exacting boss. A few side issues put on the garnish.

DON'TS.

Don't think weasels can't get through inch wire. If there's a loophole, they won't need a lawyer to help find it.

Don't let the poultry roost in the barn. The sparrows will distribute enough lice to make the horses lively.

Don't get excited over orders and sell all your best birds. That's frenzied finance.

Don't build your poultry house without thoughtful planning. No cold air castles for Leghorns.

Don't get gay and go off for fun and let your incubators run themselves. Chicks are pleasant, but fires aren't ice cream and cake.

Miss Ethel Plum is expected home from Washington this week for a visit with friends and relatives. She will return this fall to resume her work as a school teacher.

Sunday afternoon the water tower at East Jordan collasped from some cause unknown. No particular damage was done, except the destruction of the tower.

The steamer Lena Knoblock is taking the place of the Cummings for a while. The Cummings was in dry dock the first of the week and took the excursion to Sutton's Bay Monday.

Sam Alexander, of Ironton, who was taken sick while serving as a juror in the United States court at Grand Rapids last spring is improving slowly, being in the city Monday.

The painting of the bridge was completed last week which is a great improvement. Bridge-tender Johnson has erected a flagstaff and now it is up to the city to purchase a flag for it.

Only one marriage license was issued during the past week, by County Clerk Lewis. That was to Henry Black, jr., 39, Marion township, and Kittie L. Eastcott, 22, Antrim county.

Dr. Cronter is the latest victim of the habit automobiles have of going back on anyone, his tire going back on him on his way to Traverse City last Saturday and his engine on the way home.

Many new sidewalks are going in these days, one notable stretch extending from Egbert Carpenter's, corner State and Clinton streets to Park avenue and west on that street to include the W. A. Smith home.

The following old settlers are attending the old settlers' meeting at Sutton's Bay today: M. J. Stockman, Hon. A. Buttars, Major Green, Capt. O. E. Wilbur, of Charlevoix, and Mrs. Carr and Mrs. Porter, of East Jordan.

The Ninth Annual Convention of the Charlevoix county Sunday school association will be held in East Jordan June 23, 24. Interdenominational. Everybody invited. East Jordan is planning to give the delegates a hearty welcome.

At the track meet at Traverse City Saturday, Charlevoix came out second, four high schools competing. The excursion on the Lena Knoblock was called off, but with true Charlevoix spirit they went just the same, some by auto and some on the morning train.

F. M. Glassford was in Bellaire Tuesday attending the funeral of Elbert E. Trull, of that place, who was killed by a log rolling on him at Lovelady, Texas, last Friday. Mr. Trull was a well known citizen, having been deputy sheriff of Antrim county several years.

Thursday night the burglar alarm at the State Savings Bank went off caused by a slight error in setting. The least movement from place will cause the alarm to be given. No harm was done and it proved how effectively the bank cares for the safety of its deposits.

A large crowd went to Boyne City on the excursion given by A. T. Hoxie Tent, K. O. T. M. M., last Friday night. The degree team from here initiated a class of candidates for the Boyne City lodge. Those who were not Maccabees proceeded to shake their feet in Garland's hall and the Odd Fellows temple until a late hour.

When Dignity Larks.

An English orator, having to address a meeting in a country town, had beforehand been begged to remember that his audience was not remarkable for any great intellectual culture. A chatty, sparkling speech, judiciously peppered with anecdote and chaff, would be the sort of thing to arouse enthusiasm and capture its sympathies. The evening having come, the speaker attempted to enliven his discourse by interpolating remarks of a less serious kind than those which his speeches usually contained. Well satisfied with the result and driving away with an old friend, he said to him: "Well, I hope that suited you. At any rate, no one could say I spoke too seriously." "It was a capital speech," came the reply, "only, to tell you the truth, it rather reminded me of an article from the Quarterly Review out for a lark."—London Bellman.

Over-Work Weakens Your Kidneys.

Unhealthy Kidneys Make Impure Blood.

All the blood in your body passes through your kidneys once every three minutes.

The kidneys are your blood purifiers, they filter out the waste or impurities in the blood.

If they are sick or out of order, they fail to do their work.

Pains, aches and rheumatism come from excess of uric acid in the blood, due to neglected kidney trouble.

Kidney trouble causes quick or unsteady heart beats, and makes one feel as though they had heart trouble, because the heart is over-working in pumping thick, kidney-poisoned blood through veins and arteries.

It used to be considered that only urinary troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all constitutional diseases have their beginning in kidney trouble.

If you are sick you can make no mistake by first doctoring your kidneys. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases and is sold on its merits by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also pamphlet telling you how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. Mention this paper when writing Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

LEGAL NOTICES

Mortgage Foreclosure.

Whereas, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage dated the tenth day of April, 1903, executed by Adolph Kirchner and Mary A. Kirchner, his wife to Citizens' State Bank of Whitewater, Wisconsin, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Charlevoix, Michigan, in liber thirty-seven of Mortgages on pages forty and forty-one, on the 27th day of April, 1903 at nine o'clock in the forenoon. And whereas, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of one thousand four hundred thirteen and sixty-five one-hundredths (1,413.65) dollars, the principal, interest, taxes and insurance, and the further sum of fifty dollars as an attorney fee, stipulated for in said mortgage, and which is the whole amount claimed to be due on said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted either by law or equity, to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the east front door of the court house in said county of Charlevoix, on the twenty-third day of July next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon on that day; which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to-wit: The south half (s½) of the north-east quarter (ne¼) of section eighteen (18) town thirty-two (32) north, of range six (6) west, and the north west quarter (nw¼) of the south-east quarter (se¼) of section eighteen (18) town thirty-two (32) north, of range six (6) west.

THE SPLIT LOG DRAG

How to Build and Use this Simple Road-Building Device

Subject of the Latest Bulletin from the U. S. Department of Public Roads.

One of the latest publications issued by the office of public roads of the United States department of agriculture treats of the split-log drag, an implement which numerous experiments have conclusively shown to be the greatest possible boon to keep earth roads smooth and passable. Because of its simplicity, its efficiency and its cheapness, both in construction and operation, it is destined to come more and more into general use. With the drag properly built and its use well understood, the maintenance of earth roads becomes a simple and inexpensive matter.

At the present time there are approximately 2,000,000 miles of earth roads in the United States. Some of the most important of these roads will eventually be improved with stone, gravel, and other materials. Many others which are equally important cannot be so improved on account of lack of funds or suitable materials, while, still others will not require such treatment because of the light traffic to which they are subjected. For these reasons the majority of our roads must be maintained as earth roads for many years to come. This must be done by inexpensive methods and the split-log drag will be a powerful aid if economy is the criterion demanded.

In the construction of this implement, care should be taken to make it so light that one man can lift it with ease, a light drag responding more readily to various methods of hitching than a heavy one, as well as to the shifting of the position of the operator. The best material for a split-log drag is a dry red cedar log, though red elm and walnut are excellent, and box elder, soft maple, or even willow are superior to oak, hickory or ash. The log should be between 7 and 10 feet long and from 10 to 12 inches in diameter at the butt end. It should be split carefully as near the center as possible, and the heaviest and best slab chosen for the front. In the front slab 4 inches from the end which is to drag in the middle of the road bore a 2-inch hole which is to receive a cross stake. At a distance of 22 inches from the other end of the front slab, locate the center for another cross stake. The hole for the middle stake will be on a line connecting the half way between the two. Then place the back slab in position and from the end which is to drag in the middle of the road measure 20 inches for the center of one cross stake and 6 inches from the other end locate the center of the opposite stake. The hole for the center stake should be located half way between the two. All these holes should be carefully bored perpendicular or at right angles to the face of split log.

If these directions are followed it will be found that when the holes of the front and back slabs are brought opposite each other, one end of the back slab will be 16 inches nearer the center of the roadway than the front one. That gives what is known as "set back." The stakes, which are 30 inches long, will hold the slabs this distance apart. When the stakes have been firmly wedged into their sockets, a brace about 2 inches thick and 4 inches wide may be placed diagonally to them at the ditch end of the drag. A cleated board is placed between the slabs and across the stakes for the driver to stand on.

By many it is deemed best to place a strip of iron along the lower face of the front slab for a cutting blade and to prevent the drag from wearing. The drag may be fastened to the double tree by means of a trace chain. The chain should be wrapped around the left hand or rear stake and passed over the front slab. Raising the chain at this end of the slab permits the earth to drift past the face of the drag. The other end of the chain should be passed through a hole in the opposite end of the front slab and held by a pin passed through a link.

For ordinary purposes, the hitch should be so made that the unloaded drag will follow the team at an angle of about 45 degrees. The team should be driven with one horse on either side of the right hand wheel track or rut the full length the portion to be dragged and made to return in the same manner over the other half of the roadway. Such treatment will move the earth towards the center of the roadway and raise it gradually above the surrounding level.

The best results have been obtained by dragging roads once each way after each heavy rain. In some cases, however, one dragging every three or four weeks has been found sufficient to keep a road in good condition.

When the soil is moist but not sticky the drag does its best work. As the soil in a field will bake if ploughed wet, so the road will bake if ploughed wet. If the roadway is full of holes or badly rutted, the drag should be used once when the ground is soft and slushy. This is particularly applicable before a cold spell in winter, when it is possible to so prepare the surface that it will freeze smooth.

Not infrequently conditions are met which may be overcome by a slight change in the manner of hitching. Shortening the chain tends to lift the front slab and make the cutting slight, while a longer hitch causes the front slab to sink more deeply into the earth and act on the principle of a plow.

If a furrow of earth is to be moved, the doubletree should be attached close to the ditch end of the drag, and the driver should stand with one foot on the extreme forward end of the front slab.

Figures have revealed the wonders of this simple device. The least expense per annum for split-log dragging was $1.50, the greatest a little over $6, and the average $3, and the average expense per mile for 5½ miles a little over $3.

A township in Iowa making an investigation of the split log drag experimented with it a year on 28 miles of highway. The total expense for one year averaged but $2.10 a mile, and the roads were reported to have been "like a race track" the greater portion of the year.

Neighborhood Notes

After deciding to hold the meeting next year in Grand Rapids, the thirty-fourth annual convention of the Michigan State Fireman's Association held at Ludington last week adjourned. The following officers were chosen: President, H. R. Delfs, Lansing, unanimously elected, first vice president, Ed. Bales, Detroit; second vice president, Thomas Scott, Manistee; third vice president, William Spencer, Grand Rapids; secretary and treasurer, A. P. Lane; chaplain, Rev. Edward Collins, Detroit; statistician, William Robertson, Charlotte.

The Agriculture College lands north of Oscoda were looked over last week by a party composed of President Snyder, of the college, Robt. D. Graham, president of the inquiry commission appointed by the state to investigate matters pertaining to the state agricultural board.

A department of the agricultural college course in forestry, including a nursery will be established on the college lands. The location will be somewhere in the neighborhood of the line between Iosco and Alcona counties. The Agricultural College expected that the work would be commenced this summer, but according to a ruling of the auditor-general the funds for the work are not now available. Provision will be made for the necessary funds so as to begin the work next year.

About 50 students of the Agricultural College forestry course will be camped on the reserve during the summer, and will be instructed in reforestation and the work appertaining to it.

SHEEP ON THE FARM.

They Improve the Soil and Return a Good Profit, Says Gilbert.

The sheep and wool trade has come to the front in the last two years in a most vigorous style, and, talk to whom we will, we get the impression that things have taken on a new lease of life, writes W. R. Gilbert in Farm and Fireside. This is largely due to the fact that wool has sensibly increased in value until at last the depressed sheep farmer has plucked up courage and begun business in an altogether different frame of mind. Those who have farmed by the sheep when prices were low have just cause for thankfulness, and no sheep man can find fault with the returns they have received during the past two years.

Taking stock for stock and the amount of money invested in sheep compared with other classes of farm animals, sheep without doubt give an equally good return, while many are of the opinion that the percentage of profit is higher than for cattle.

Sheep on the land are golden hoofed. Where they tread, as a rule, they improve the soil. On the lighter soils, chalks, gravels and sands, treading is literally an improvement, for it assists in the consolidation of the soil, while at the same time the animals are dropping liquid or solid manure, not one particle of which is lost. On the heavier soils the treading of sheep may at some time damage the condition of the soil, speaking mechanically. No man, however, would fold his sheep on heavy clay to cause it to poach. Sheep, then, have two values—first, that of improving the soil, either by manuring it or by treading and manuring combined, and next by providing mutton and wool. How, then, can we increase the profits which they return?

Every agriculturist is aware of the fact that the better the quality of the parent stock, whether it be animal or seed, the better the result in the produce. A great majority of farmers own flocks which are practically mongrel in blood. They may be of the type of the pure breed of the district or they may not be. They are annually mated with rams which are selected at liberal prices from good flocks of pure bred stock, and in this way the character of the flock is to some extent maintained, especially where the best ewes are selected for breeding and the inferior rejected. It happens, however, that nearly every healthy ewe is retained, however imperfect she may be in form, breeding capacity and mutton making character.

The only way to level up to a high standard is to reject every animal from the breeding stock which fails to pass a standard of excellence, and that standard should be rigidly adhered to. The first thing to note, then, is the prime importance of blood, which imparts character, size, quality, prolificacy, rapid fattening and the power to produce the best meat in larger quantity on the best parts.

The quality of the wool produced by sheep is very materially affected by the feeding which the animals receive when the wool is being grown. Whenever sheep are allowed to run down in condition a distinct weakness of the fiber of the wool will at once manifest itself in that portion which is at that particular time in course of active formation. When wool goes on the looms its inferiority at once becomes evident by the fiber breaking up and damaging the quality of the fabric into which it is being manufactured. In the production of wool it has been found that food rich in albuminoids is the best.

Apropos of tuberculosis Hoard's Dairyman advises:

Let every farmer tuberculin test his herd, then thoroughly disinfect his stalls and yards, using lime whitewash plentifully; then never take an animal into the herd that has not a clean bill of health. Get the herd clean and keep it clean. Then use a farm separator and feed no skimmilk that does not come from that farm.

A VAMPIRE SYSTEM.

Socialism Points the Way to a Higher and Better Civilization.

Capitalism is a vampire system. While it absorbs the labor and life of the competitive wage slaves, the competing capitalist masters, preying upon one another, destroy each other until thus we have but a few monster vampires sucking the last dregs of vitality from a vastly increased proletariate, and finally comes the crisis—the sin of wagelsm is death—the collapse of the capitalistic system. Labor unions and fake legislation for the strangling little capitalists (like impotent railroad control laws) may palliate and prolong the present agony for a brief time, but the end is fatally doomed, as is the diseased person who will not cut out a life absorbing cancer. The huge modern plutocratic parasites, inflating with interest and profits, must finally expire with the death of what they feed upon—wagelsm. The vampire patricians of ancient Rome sapped the plebeian and slave basis of their economic system, and the empire fell in 476.

No system of civilization can advance or live when a feasting, reveling class drinks from the toilers' veins. The knell of its own death is now being rung by capitalism which hypocrilises religion, perverts morality, makes the law unjust, prostitutes education, promotes war, corrupts politics, practices robbery, swindling and gambling as business; betrays friendship, sends love out street walking and makes marriage mercenary, calls alms brings, slums cellars, corporation shacks and hole hovels "homes;" offers little children to the Moloch of commercialism and in the mad scramble for its dope incentive—dollars—it materializes the rich, vulgarizes the well to do and brutalizes the poor. Such is the result of the economic determinism of capitalism. And herein this result is the awful indictment of it as an economic system today. Now for tomorrow and Socialism:

As capitalism, by the inevitable law of economics, ruthlessly overthrew feudalism (as feudalism before that displaced slavery), so Socialism is preparing to grasp its opportunity at the near crisis and establish the co-operative commonwealth. Labor, long prostrate and enslaved, is at last arising, enlightened and armed with its collective, intellectual, industrial and political power to save itself and the world.

This is the great mission of Socialists. Their motto is: "Workers of all countries unite." You have nothing but your chains to lose and a world to win."

Labor today, trained in the vast industrial armies of capitalism and disciplined in the unions (Socialists are finishing this education) and given the trusts for a model, together with the political form necessary for the acquirement and operation of industry, is preparing to Socialize the ownership of the land, the shop, the machine, etc., as the operation of these has already been Socialized in economic evolution and will carry the trustification of industry to its ultimate stage of a universal trust in which all the people are partners and their own collective capitalist. First came the single worklag proprietor, then partnership of groups of partners, then the corporation or partnership of groups of partners, then the trust or partnership of corporations, and now finally must come the merging of the trusts into the grand public partnership—the people's trust or Socialism.

Socialism is the ownership and operation of all the means of production and distribution that are social and public in their nature, by the people, for the people. It means the tools of employment shall belong in common to their creators and users, that all production shall be for the direct use of the producers, that the making of goods for profit shall cease, that we shall all be workers together and that all opportunities shall be open and equal to all. Socialism is the democratization of industry—fulfilling our religious, educational, social and political democracy. It means the application of the Golden Rule to business, peace on earth, good will among men, for through it we shall federate the nations into a United States of the World and realize the brotherhood of man.—Rev. G. E. Littlefield, Westwood, Mass.

A Socialist Vicar.

The new vicar of St. Margaret's, Dunham Massey, Cheshire, England, is not only a Socialist, but an enrolled party member. He is described in the magazines as a man of high attainments. He is at present editor of the Interpreter, a quarterly magazine of Biblical studies. As showing his all around character, it is related that while at college he was a leading cricketer and oarsman.

The conscienceless politicians of capitalism in England have tried to make use of the church to stem the rising tide of Social Democracy, but churchmen there seem to have been able to size up political hypocrites, and the attempt is answered by just such announcements as this concerning the vicar Socialist.

Socialism and the Labor Movement.

Socialism is usually regarded as a phase of the struggle for the emancipation of labor, for the complete participation of the working class in the material, intellectual and spiritual inheritance of the human race. This is certainly the most substantial and most prominent part of the Socialist programme. It is the deliverance of the working class that stands in the front of every Socialistic theory.—Encyclopaedia Britannica, Ninth Edition

The Man of The Hour

By ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE.

"Let us about it, judge," interposed Gibbs, seeking to avert any further clash between uncle and niece.

"I—went—to—him," began Newman, "bearing a request from—from"——

The judge paused. It was not wholly easy to present matters to this honest eyed young girl in such a way as to bring her in his way of thinking. But Wainwright felt no difficulty. His shrewd brain caught at a means of turning the affair to account.

"You see, Dallas," the financier broke in, with a warning glance to Newman, "I begged the judge to intercede for me with Bennett, to ask him to bury the hatchet and let us be friends again for the sake of old times. I thought Judge Newman's age and his high office would compel a certain respect even with a man of Bennett's character. But I was wrong, and I am sorry, judge, for the unjust humiliation I caused you."

"I don't understand," said Dallas, looking in bewilderment from one to the other. "Judge, my uncle sent you to make overtures of peace? And Mr. Bennett refused to"—

"He not only refused, but called Mr. Wainwright a highwayman and"—

"But why?" demanded Dallas.

"He pretended to misunderstand what I said about the conditions."

"Oh, it was a conditional offer, then? I thought"—

"Certainly there were conditions," cut in Wainwright, again coming to the emissary's rescue. "I asked that he take a position of neutrality in regard to this Borough bill. Simply neutral, mind you. Not to change his attitude in its favor, or"—

"That was a splendidly fair offer," cried Gibbs enthusiastically.

"So it seemed to me," agreed Newman, "but Bennett would not listen when I tried to point out his proper line of duty. He called me a go-between and"—

"Even after you told him we were granting practically all the concessions he had asked in the bill?" queried Gibbs.

"Yes," said Newman. "He must have some motive behind it all. I can't"—

"Nonsense!" exclaimed Dallas. "What ulterior motive could he have?"

"That is more than I know positively," returned the judge mysteriously.

"But I do," declared Wainwright, pointing at Dallas. "There are the reasons!"

"I?" exclaimed Dallas, incredulous. "Explain, please."

"Willingly," replied her uncle, "if you'll give me a fair hearing. Bennett is in love with you. He knows Gibbs also wishes to marry you. He knows, too, that Gibbs' fortune depends on the success of the Borough franchise. If the bill is beaten, Gibbs will be practically ruined and thus in no position to marry. We've known all along of this reason of Bennett's for fighting our bill, but Gibbs forbade me to tell you. He was afraid you might think he'—

"How dare you, sir?" said the judge.

"I don't believe one word of it!" cried Dallas, her big eyes ablaze. "Alwyn Bennett could not stoop to such a thing."

"No?" said Wainwright. "Then you probably will refuse to believe what I am about to tell you now. I considered Borough stock a safe investment, and I put all your money and Perry's in it. Bennett knows this, and in spite of the knowledge he is trying to kill the franchise even on the certainty of beggaring you and Perry along with Gibbs. If only he can ruin Gibbs he cares nothing about making you and Perry paupers too. That is the sort of man you are defending against your own uncle. I have just learned besides that he has secretly, through his brokers, sold large blocks of Borough stock short. Thus his veto that ruins us will make him a very rich man."

"It isn't true!" affirmed Dallas in dogged certainty. "Mr. Gibbs, do you confirm this story of my uncle's?"

"Please leave me out of this, Miss Wainwright," answered Gibbs gently. "I prefer to say nothing to prejudice you. When I fight I fight fair."

"Even at the cost of all your money," amended Wainwright. "Gibbs, this is carrying your sense of honor to an absurd point. And Bennett will"—

"Pardon me," broke in Alwyn, entering the foyer and going up to Dallas. "I'm a little late for our dance. I was detained by"—

"Alwyn!" exclaimed Dallas in relief. "I'm so glad you came here just when you did. Now we can clear this up in a word."

"Clear what up?" queried Bennett, glancing about in suspicion at the three silent men.

"You know Mr. Gibbs is favored in the Borough Street railway affair," began Dallas. "He told you so at your office that day we were there. Well"—

"Yes, but don't let's discuss business tonight," replied Bennett. "This is our dance, and"—

"Wait, please. You knew his fortune was largely tied up in Borough stock, but here is something you didn't know. My uncle says my money and Perry's is all invested in that stock and that if you defeat the bill we will be dependent on Mr. Wainwright's charity. If that is true, you didn't know it, did you?"

Her voice was almost tremulous in its eager, confident appeal, but Bennett forced himself to answer:

"Yes; it is true, and I knew it."

The eager glow died from her eyes, leaving a look of dawning horror.

"And, knowing this—knowing Perry and I shall be made paupers by your action—you still insist on"—

"On opposing the bill? Yes. I am sorry, but it is my duty."

"Duty!" sneered Wainwright. "Your 'duty' was done when you vetoed the bill. That act made your position clear and showed the public how you regarded the measure, so why go on fighting it after"—

"I won't discuss this with you, Mr. Wainwright," interrupted Bennett. "We already understand one another, you and I."

"My uncle says," pursued Dallas, "that you made your broker secretly sell Borough stock short, knowing the deal would enrich you. Won't you even deny this?"

"No."

Charles Wainwright.

"You realize what all this foolish stubbornness must mean to me—to all of us," continued Dallas, "and you still persist in your opposition?"

"I must," said Bennett. "I can't turn back. Oh, Dallas," he added, dropping his voice till none but she could hear, "can't you trust me—only till Friday? I'll come to you on Saturday morning and tell you the whole miserable story. I only ask you to wait until then. Please"—

"I see no need of waiting for an explanation," retorted Dallas aloud. "I understand everything."

"But you don't understand!" insisted Alwyn. "I"—

"I understand only too well," repeated Dallas. Checking his reply and ignoring the anguished appeal in his eyes, she turned to Gibbs.

"I have kept you waiting long for your answer, Mr. Gibbs," she said, speaking in a level, firm, emotionless voice. "I am prepared to give it to you now—publicly. You have often asked me if I would be your wife. My reply is, 'Yes.'"

"Dallas!" gasped Bennett in horrified surprise.

How to Check a Nosebleed.

When the nose is bleeding, never hold it over a basin or hold the head down in any way. This only causes further rush of blood to the broken tissues in the nose. The head should be held up and back, the flow being caught in handkerchiefs or cloths. One of the most effective and simple means of checking a nosebleed is to press on the upper lip. Near the undersurface of the lip runs the artery that supplies the interior nasal passages where the ruptures occur. If this is pressed, the flow of blood is mechanically checked, thus allowing the blood around the broken tissues to congeal and seal up the opening. If merely pressing the finger does not succeed, place a wad of paper under the lip and fold the lip over it, holding it down tight. Again, if this does not succeed and a drug store is near, get some adrenalin, saturate a piece of cotton with it and apply to the interior of the nose from where the blood flows.

How to Clean a Fan.

To clean a fan place it in a dish and cover with gasoline. Do not attempt to rub the material of the chiffon or lace with it, in all probability tear apart. Press tightly until the dirt comes out, and a fan certainly collects a great deal of dust. After freeing it from dust and all blemishes put it into clean gasoline in which there is a drop of bluing. Spread the fan out on a piece of white cloth, pin the two points to stretch the material and let it dry. After it has thoroughly dried cover with talcum powder highly scented and leave for one day. This destroys the odor of gasoline and makes the fan as beautiful as new. If the edges are the least worn, bind with chiffon ribbon, lace beading or a soft frill of lace or chiffon to match the cover.

Quick Wit.

Mr. Aspinall, a clever and reckless barrister, famous in the last century in Victoria for his fun and audacity, was addressing an election meeting in Ballarat, the "golden city." The lively advocate had come to that time in his career when much whisky and soda had wrought palpable havoc with his complexion. His speech ended, and questions were invited. "Aspinall," bellowed a blatwart digger, "tell us what makes your face so red." "Blushing at your confounded impudence, sir!" was the quick reply. He carried the meeting.

Literary Notes

$150 For Best Article.

The Republican Congressional Committee offers $150 for the best article not exceeding 1,000 words on the subject:

"Why the Republican Party Should be Successful Next November."

The competition is open to all.

In judging the merits of contributions consideration will be given not only to style, arguments and facts presented, but to the convincing power, and it should be borne in mind that members of congress are to be elected as well as president and vice-president.

No manuscripts will be returned, but will be the property of the committee.

The best article will be widely used, both in the newspapers of the country and in phamphlet form.

The award will be made and check sent to successful contestant about August 15th. Manuscripts must be mailed not later than July 15th to Literary Bureau, Republican Congressional Committee, Metropolitan Bank Building, Washington, D. C.

Death Was On His Heels.

Jesse P. Morris, of Skippers, Va., had a close call in the spring of 1906. He says: "An attack of pneumonia left me so weak and with such a fearful cough that my friends declared consumption had me, and death was on my heels. Then I was persuaded to try Dr. King's New Discovery. It helped me immediately, and after taking two and a half bottles I was a well man again. I found out that New Discovery is the best remedy for coughs and lung disease in all the world. Sold under guarantee at F. G. Hines & Co.'s Drug store. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

Growing Business

Last year, without doubt, the Courier Job Department turned out a greater volume of Printing—in quantity, quality, and value—than had ever before been done in any Charlevoix county printing office. During the eight months of the present management the average for the whole of the previous year has been maintained—indicating, with the busy season not yet begun, that this year's business will break last year's excellent record.

The Courier Job Department has grown from small beginnings—away back in 1883, twenty-five years ago—but every addition has been the result of intelligent thought by competent, practical printers, until now—having by far the largest and most complete equipment in the county—it is also one selected and arranged to turn out the greatest quantity of general printing to be obtained from such an investment. This in marked contrast to some offices purchased at haphazard, and lacking intelligent system.

Our Mechanical Force is composed of intelligent, capable and experienced printers; and the result of the combination of brains and material is found in the fact that every large job and every especially fine job comes naturally to this office—if you stop to think of the big jobs and the fine jobs you know of and where they were printed, you personally know this to be true—thus the office has acquired a very

among the business men of Charlevoix and the printing fraternity of the county.

Staking our reputation for quality printing at prices which our superior equipment makes profitable both to us and to our patrons, we figure the cost of every piece of work from a system which must in each case give to both producer and consumer EQUITABLE PRICES, free from the danger of guess-work prices, that loss from a too low price given must be taken from the quality of the work or must be made up at the expense of some future job, yours or some other person's.

Make no mistake—If you want good work at honest prices, combined with courteous treatment and a strict adherence to promises regarding time of completion, stock and material to be used, you will DO AS THEY ALL DO, come to THE COURIER for your printing; not only because it's the proper thing to do, but because it's always good business.

Courier Grange Column

Deer Lake Grange No. 1269.

Meeting of Deer Lake Grange No. 1269 met June 6 and was opened in due form by Master H. C. Barber.

Song by grange.

After several discussions on the constructing of our hall, Brother G. P. Cook made a motion, which was supported by Brother A. Hunt, that we lath and plaster our hall. Motion carried.

A committee was appointed to take charge of dances held at hall. H. J. Korthase and Wesley J. Sudman were appointed. Brother Earl Barber was appointed janitor for the rest of the year.

With four visitors present and twenty members the grange ordered 150 pounds of Paris green.

Total receipts $11.65. Grange closed in ample form.

South Arm Grange No. 815.

South Arm Grange No. 815 met May 30. The attendance was small only nineteen of 101 members being present. Brother Baldwin of Alba grange and Sister Isaman from Wilson, were present.

An account of $17.75, proceeds of the dance, was turned into the treasury.

The program consisted of quotations, songs and recitations appropriate for Memorial Day.

The general discussion on "Why Should We Observe Memorial Day and What Should We Accomplish by so Doing," was discussed at length.

The next meeting will be the regular children's meeting. Ice cream and cake will be served and a program that will interest the children will be rendered.

A Chinese Bunko Game.

"I want to show you," remarked George Wilson of Los Angeles, "how keen the Chinese are at a bunko game. When I was in Tientsin they pulled off a good one. Poor fellow entered a pawnshop. Moment later man came in with package and inquired for him by name. Had a letter. First man handed letter to pawnbroker to read. Said: 'Am sending you ten tael bar of gold as present. Am getting very rich. You must come to me. Your brother.'

"'Then I don't need to pawn my watch!' joyfully exclaimed the poor man. 'But 10 taels is great amount for one like me. No one would believe it was mine. Will you buy it from me?' The pawnbroker took it back and weighed it. It weighed 12 taels. He handed over 10 and said nothing. When the men were gone, he sawed into the bar and found it filled with lead. In a moment a third man rushed in. 'Did you have any dealings with those fellows? They cheated me. For 3 taels I'll lead you to them to get even.' And he did. The two came back, protesting their entire innocence. 'Produce the bar, and if it be not all right I shall return your money.' The pawnbroker returned with the sawed bar. 'Weigh it,' directed the poor man. 'Ah, but this is a twelve tael bar. Mine was 10, and you paid me but 10.' Stung for 13 taels!"—San Francisco Chronicle.

Apple Pie and Justice.

The routine of the criminal court proceedings had been marked by only one unusual incident, and that was the alacrity with which a certain hard character was sentenced for sixty days to the workhouse. "Judge," observed the district attorney at the close of the dreary session, "you seem to relish the privilege of sending that man to the workhouse. Did his case impress you?"

"Now, look here," whispered the judge as he beckoned the attorney aside, "that man is a worthless fellow, always drunk and never contributes a cent to the support of his wife, who is a most deserving woman. I feel sorry for her, and whenever he is in prison she comes to our home and assists my wife in the kitchen. And," chuckled the judge as he tapped the attorney's shoulder cheerfully, "she does know how to bake apple pie."—Argonaut.

The Chauffeurs.

In the last decade of the eighteenth century a band of French brigands flourished in and about the forest of La Muette, close to Mareville. To these "pingres," as they called themselves, the people gave another name. All over France they were known as the "chauffeurs," from their use of fire, applied to the feet of their victims who would not tell where their money was hidden. —Argonaut.

Woman's World

"A STRICT BOSS."

Miss Fay Kellogg and Her Striking Success as an Architect.

Miss Fay Kellogg, who is one of the most prominent women architects in the United States, is a Brooklyn girl, and she began her architectural career under a German tutor who taught her drawing and mathematics. She afterward went to Pratt Institute, Brooklyn, for a year, and she then entered the employ of an architect in order to get a practical idea of the business.

MISS FAY KELLOGG.

Later she was employed by a prominent New York firm of architects, after which she went to Paris. Upon her return she worked with Mr. John R. Thomas until his death. Since then she has been in business for herself.

To the question of "What do you consider the biggest piece of work you have ever done?" Miss Kellogg replied: "The opening of the Ecole des Beaux Arts in Paris to women architects. When I went to Paris there was just one atelier where women were received. Today conditions are entirely different.

"I don't care so much for small pieces of architectural work," continued Miss Kellogg. "I only do big things—as, for instance, the American News company's new sixteen story building in San Francisco, which I successfully built at long distance.

"There is no reason why a woman should not do as well in architecture as a man if she is not afraid of rebuffs. Not but what men have been fine to me, for I meet them on equal lines, but it takes a little time to gain their confidence."

To see Miss Kellogg on "her job" is a unique experience, even to the layman. For instance, she has done all the architectural work for the American News company throughout the United States for the past ten years, which means that she has 150 buildings under her charge. At present she is renovating six old buildings for this company in New York and also erecting a new one. Every morning at 9 o'clock Miss Kellogg appears on the scene and trips lightly up six or seven flights of stairs to superintend her workingmen. She runs up and down unfinished stairs, scales ladders to see how new roofs are coming on and trips lightly across yawning beams that are open to the first floor. A short skirt, stout high boots and well poised nerves are her equipment, and when she is around everything moves.

She knows every detail of her profession, construction, the theory and practical knowledge of plumbing, heating, electricity and ventilation. Then, too, she is acquainted with all her contractors, foremen and plumbers, and as Pete, her superintendent of construction, says, "She isn't afraid of anything," and he added, "She is the most thorough man I ever met in architectural work."

Mr. Louis Hernsheim, the structural iron contractor, who has been accustomed to working with women architects in Europe, says that Miss Kellogg is "more attentive to business than any man I know."

"It's my first job with her," he continued, "but I hope it won't be my last."

"Oh, yes, all the workmen like her. She is so considerate, but she can be, well—emphatic."

Jerry, one of her workmen, when approached said: "Like her? Well, I guess so! She is immense! But she is a strict boss."

Children's Play Clothes.

If mothers did but realize that children spend much more of their little lives in their play clothes than in their Sunday best they would give more thought to the careful making of these little garments than to the more dress up affairs which serve only upon occasion.

Play clothes must be made of material durable in weave and color, for they have hard usage. They should be pretty, but the trimming should be of a nature that will not hamper the child in active, wholesome play. They should be easy to launder, for a child's clothes spend almost if not quite as much time in the hands of the laundress as upon the child.

Be Ready for the Fly Season

We have just opened up a big shipment of Fly Nets and Lap Dusters. No other line of nets or dusters in Charlevoix is like the line we carry. They are distinct from all others, and we offer you more for your money as we buy them direct from the manufacturers. We save you the jobber's commission. Come in and look over our line before you buy.

BENJ. BROWN

linen in natural color and shades or blue is substantial material. So is gingham in plaids or checks or solid color. Percales are good, and galatea which comes in such pretty striped effects—blue and white, red and white, brown and white—is admirable.

For trimming use bands of plaid or stripe or polka dot upon solid colors, or vice versa. Braid (be careful that you shrink it first) is easily applied.

White linen or pique in bands, collars or cuffs adds style to colored clothes.

One mother with forethought sends to the laundry with the little dress the pieces left when making. In this way all is faded alike, so that when new sleeves are in order or a rent must be patched noticeable contrast between new and old is avoided.

It is a good plan to run a tuck by hand or by a chain stitch machine in the bottom of the skirt before hemming. When the little dress becomes short through shrinkage of cloth or growth of child the tuck may be ripped, thereby lengthening the dress and incidentally widening the hem.

A Rich Woman's Closet.

"The nearest approach to a Bluebeard's closet that I ever saw," said a woman the other day, "was in the country house of one of New York's most fashionable women.

"I didn't know her, but in a queer roundabout way I was once shown over the house and saw Mrs. V.'s private apartments. I pretty nearly fainted when I walked into a room where a dozen or more women were apparently hanging from the ceiling.

"When I came to I found that what I had taken to be a choice collection of female corpses was really a lot of manikins. Mrs. V. had them made after her own measurements, and her choicest costumes were kept on them when not in use.

"Her maid would fasten a gown on a manikin, put something over it to keep the dust off and then by means of a rope and pulley draw the whole thing up to the ceiling. It was a fine arrangement, but looked as if Bluebeard had been around."

Clever Mrs. Asquith.

It is many years since so young a woman as Mrs. Asquith has occupied the important position of a prime minister's wife, and it has been remarked that none of her immediate predecessors was so perfectly equipped for the position. The wife of the new premier was described by Mr. Gladstone as "the cleverest woman he had ever met," and he gave her free access to his library at Hawarden. A London paper says that among Mrs. Asquith's treasured correspondence, kept in a book brightly bound in emerald calf, is a letter from King Edward thanking her for a "soulful" novel she lent him. The letter was written on the monarch's return from the first jubilee procession in his honor and was dated "this never to be forgotten day."

To Prevent Tale Telling.

Some time ago, writes a reader of Home Chat, I found that my children were getting into a habit of constantly coming to me to complain of one another. At last I told them that in future I could listen to no verbal complaints. Any one who had a grievance against another must write it out carefully, bring it to me, and I would then go into the matter.

Since then it is marvelous how few complaints I have received. The children quickly settle grievances among themselves, and there is far less quarreling than there used to be.

The Outline Stitch.

Many of the imported lingerie blouses this season have part of the embroidery done in outline stitch. For instance, a running vine will be worked in outline stitch, while a bit of solid embroidery, eyelet work or soutache braiding is introduced to give a pleasing combination.

The present fashion for outlining and braiding is a boon to the woman whose eyes will not permit the execution of the closer and finer needlework.

Shoes In Housework.

If you must do your own housework, see that your shoes are loose and absolutely comfortable. Change them, moreover, in the afternoon, as nothing rests the feet more. If your feet get so tired that you feel you cannot stand up another moment and your feet are swollen, take time to dip them in cold water and give them a vigorous rub.

Spots of cream always spoil the appearance of an afternoon teacloth without actually warranting its dispatch to the laundry. If the spots are lightly touched with household ammonia and the stained portion of the cloth ironed over a piece of clean white blotting paper, all traces of the grease should vanish.

How to Clean Matting.

To clean Japanese matting and linoleum use bran water, which is made by taking two handfuls of bran and boiling it in a gallon of water. After this has boiled twenty minutes strain and cleanse the matting or linoleum with a flannel cloth wet with the bran water. Wipe immediately with a dry cloth.

THEATRE TALK NO. 5.

ONE OF THE IMPORTANT FIRST CLASS PRODUCTIONS OF THE SEASON, "MY BOY, JACK," WILL BE SEEN HERE IN A FEW DAYS. The play was written by Edwin Milton Royle, author of "The Squaw Man," the most famous Broadway success of recent seasons, "Mollie Moonshine," which Marie Cahill found one of her most popular productions, "Capt. Impudence" and other noted plays. The company will have for its head and star EUGENE MOORE, who will be remembered for his brilliant performance of "Monte Cristo!" and his high position among leading men and the cleverest light comedians. MR. MOORE SHINES BRIGHTLY IN THE PART OF JACK, and nothing could be better suited to the taste of American theatregoers than the character of this independent, worthy young son of a typical American business man. THE OPPORTUNITIES IN THE PART TO SHOW THE ACTOR'S ART in delineating a vivacious personality with a keen play of wit and humor, through which is seen true strength and nobility of character, are seldom excelled in any play. MR. MOORE IS ONE OF THE FEW ACTORS IN THE COUNTRY WHOSE WIDE AND COMPLETE EXPERIENCE and high ideals equip them to convey the full excellence of such a role. The other parts in the play are all of unusual interest, including the musician Karje, Margeret the prima donna, her dissipated father, and the landlady of the poet and composer in their poverty. The whole play is full of the best kind of entertainment the stage offers, and presented thoroughly well. There are four acts which carry the story from the poor lodgings of the poet and musician through the handsome apartments of the prima donna and the mansion of her rich admirer to the green room of the opera house. You wont see any thing better is town this season than this production. STAR, PLAY AND COMPANY IS ALL THAT COULD BE DESIRED. Don't wait until the last minute to buy your tickets and then growl if you don't get good seats. WE'RE EXPECTING YOU and will give you the greatest value you have ever had for your money. NO CHEATING WITH THIS COMPANY. Usual prices will prevail.

CARE WILL KILL A CAT.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES CLOSED

By Alumni Reception and Dance Friday Evening.

ADDRESS BY REV. JAMES FRYOR

Class Day Exercises Thursday Night Were of a High Order.

Alumni Reception Was a Very Enjoyable Event, Over Two Hundred Being Present.

The commencement exercises begun by the baccalaureate sermon by Rev. T. N. Harrowell, which we noted last week, were carried to a successful conclusion the past week.

GRADUATION EXERCISES.

Wednesday night occurred the graduation exercises at the Charlevoix Theater, the address being given by Rev. James Fryor, of Cheboygan, music being furnished by a ladies' quartette, composed of Mesdames Hines, Jefferies, Coulter, and Miss Gale.

Mr. Fryor took for his general subject, "The Making of a Man," and delivered an address which can best be described as eloquent, inspiring and suggestive, drawing illustrations from the heroes of history who have chosen rather to do something for the betterment of all mankind than to seek personal gain, citing in particular the cases of Dr. Livingstone, the African explorer and many others. In closing he urged all the members to so conduct their lives that people would be attracted toward them.

Superintendent Woodley presented the diplomas in a few well-chosen words of farewell.

CLASS DAY EXERCISES.

The class day exercises of the class of '08 were held in the Charlevoix Theater Thursday evening.

The members of the class were greeted by a house full of relatives, friends and admirers.

The class, consisting of Ruthe M. Bowdish, M. June Stafford, Earl A. Young, Peter Donald Campbll, Dorothy Winthrop Iddings, E. Doria Kane, Isabelle W. Mitchell, Kathryn Z. LaPeer, V. Mae Feltz, John Lyngklip, Sam Levinson, Cleland Mayne, Henry Partridge, Arvilla Dunham, Irene E. Harsha, Marion E. Jones, Mary Clare O'Leary, Margaret A. Ryan, William David Robinson, Emerald Emory, Charles Plum, presented a fine appearance, being as bright and intelligent, as well as comely, a bunch of young people as one could wish to look upon, the young ladies each becomingly and modestly attired in white, and all bearing an air of dignified composure and graceful ease, indicating that culture and refinement which are essential features of education.

The senior orchestra, Henry Partridge, violin; Sam Levinson, clarionet, E. Doris Kane, piano, had the first number as well as two others, and their music was an important and delightful part of the program.

E. Doria Kane gave the salutatory, an exceedingly well thought out address, well delivered.

A piano duet, "Lustspiel Overture," Keler Bela, Op. 73, by Misses Dunham and Iddings, was artistically rendered and greatly pleased the audience.

The class history, in rhyme, by Irene E. Harsha, was bright and witty and well recited.

Mary Clare O'Leary recited "A Legend of the True" very nicely.

Class prophecy, being scenes from the future, enacted by members of the class incidentally relating the condition of the others, was interesting, and gave opportunity for a display of humor that was as delightful as original and funny.

Margaret A. Ryan recited "A Soldier of the Empire," in a manner entirely pleasing to her hearers.

The class will, read by Arvilla Dunham, and witnessed by the remainder of the class in ghostly garb and fashion, was a delightful piece of nonsense in which teachers and school fellows were victims of good natured witticisms.

Marion E. Jones gave a humorous recitation, exceedingly well delivered, and as well received.

Emerald Emory was valedictorian and bade farewell to high school associations in a fitting manner.

The exercises closed with the singing of the class song by the entire class, and just here the "naughty-nine" got in their mischief. A large bunch of parcels tied together was lowered from above directly between the singers and the audience, a large loaf of bread, together with the familiar appearance of other packages indicating an ardent desire on the part of the under graduates to gratify the appeal contained in the class motto, "We're Still Hungry."

The audience filed out of the building to rousing yells for the faculty, the school board and Charlevoix High School.

No doubt many of the class will go on to secure higher education at college, while some of them will at once begin the life for which they have been fitting themselves, but in any event Charlevoix is proud of the High School class of '08 and we are sure all of our citizens will wish each and all of its members success, prosperity, and the happiness angured by their having made their debut in "the best little city anywhere."

ALUMNI RECEPTION

The annual reception at the Belvedere Casino given to the class of '08, by the Alumni Association Friday night, was the most successful one in the association's history, nearly three-hundred being present, Miss Pleasant Geiken acting as president. After the reception of the guests of the evening the following program was carried out.

Music—Petoskey Orchestra.

Piano duet—Misses Dorothy Iddings and Arvilla Dunham.

Music—Mrs. Davidson and Miss Gale.

Remarks—Hon. H. L. Iddings.

Music—Men's Quartette.

Chorus—Led by Sam A. Marting.

After the program the guests enjoyed themselves dancing, refreshments of ice cream and wafers being served by the Junior girls.

OLD SETTLERS MEETING

At Sutton's Bay Wednesday Was a Success

Association Urged to do More Active Work by President—New Officers.

The Old Settler's meeting at Sutton's Bay Wednesday, was a very successful meeting. The day which opened up very cold and stormy, turning out to be a very pleasant one.

The day was taken up with listening to papers and addresses by several of the old settlers and the talking over of old pioneer days.

Among those present from Charlevoix were Hon. A. Buttars, Capt. Wilbur, M. J. Stockman and Major Green.

The newly elected president, C. H. Estes gave a forceful address upon the necessity of systematic work in the association. He declared that something energetic should be done to put a little more life into the organization and suggested that the vice-presidents inject a little more hustle in their work in the future. He emphasized the necessity of working committees in each county and that energetic work be done in each township to swell the membership and to keep the secretary posted upon deaths and departure of members of the association and to secure additional members to be presented at the annual meeting. President Estes emphasized these points as being vital for the maintainance of the organization and its future benefits.

The newly elected officers together with the vice-presidents named are as follows:

President—C. H. Estes, Bates.

Secretary—E. O. Ladd, Traverse City.

Treasurer—C. J. Powers, Antrim.

Vice-presidents—Emmet county, H. O. Rose; Charlevoix county, Archie Buttars; Antrim county, J. J. McLaughlin; Kalkaska county, A. E. Palmer; Grand Traverse county, Frank Hamilton; Benzie, W. A. Betts; Leelanau, George Cracker.

BOYS PLAY THE GAME

Charlevoix High School Team Put Up Twn Good Games.

Boyne City Defeated Thursday—Traverse City the Victors Friday.

Charlevoix High School has a team of ball players who can get into the game and play every minute of their time. For good, clean honest ball playing, that will make your blood flow faster in honor of your own, go and see the high school team in action.

Thursday they went against the Boyne City High School and a good game was played, the boys redeeming themselves from the defeats they had suffered from the visitors previously. The Boyne City boys were plainly outclassed, but put up a game fight all the way through. The score:

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
Boyne City	0	2	0	0	0	0	0	0	0—2
Charlevoix	1	2	0	3	0	4	1	3	0—14

Batteries—Charlevoix, Powers and Small; Boyne City, Silverstein, White, Wickett and Wickett and Silverstein. Umpire, Wilbur.

Friday they went up against the Traverse City High School, a husky lot of boys, who looked as if they could eat the locals up. A pretty game was played and, barring the unfortunate loss of balls twice when it meant much to the visitors, a very even game was played. The principal feature of the game was the ability of the Charlevoix boys to quickly recover themselves. The score:

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
Traverse City	0	0	5	0	0	7	0	3	2—17
Charlevoix	0	1	0	0	1	2	0	0	4—8

Batteries—Traverse City, Briet and Bowman; Charlevoix, Holmes and Small. Umpires, Baker and Wilbur.

CLARENCE KIDDER KILLED

By Fatal Accident Last Week Near Hitchcock—Lived at East Jordan.

A fatal accident occurred Wednesday at East Jordan Lumber Co.'s camp on section 34 a few miles from Hitchcock, in which Clarence Kidder lost his life.

The young man was driving a team hitched to a pair of big wheels and was coming down a hill with a load when one of the wheels hit an obstruction causing the pole to jolt sidewise suddenly, knocking Kidder down and the heavy wheel with its load of logs passed over his breast and head crushing his life out instantly.

Clarence Kidder was twenty-four years old, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Kidder and leaves besides the sorrowing parents, a sister, Mrs. Kelly, now living in Mississippi, and a step-brother, Frank Tower, to mourn his sudden death. He was an industrious young man, highly respected by all who knew him, and the bereaved family have the sympathy of all in their great sorrow.—East Jordan Enterprise.

REPRESENT UNITED STATES

President Roosevelt Names Commission to French Road Congress

L. W. Page, Director Office of Public Roads Col. C. S. Bromwell and C. Richardson.

President Roosevelt has directed that this nation be strongly and officially represented at the international Road Congress to be held at Paris the week beginning October 11, and credentials have been issued naming Logan Waller Page, director of the office of public roads of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Chairman of the Commission. The other members named are Colonel Charles S. Bromwell of the United States Corps of Engineers, now serving as superintendent of buildings and grounds of the District of Columbia, and Clifford Richardson, of New York, an eminent chemist and one of the world's acknowledged authorities on bituminous road building materials.

This coming congress, which will be attended by distinguished delegates from every country in the world, is regarded by highway engineers and experts as probably the most important ever summoned for the discussion of an economic question. Its need is the direct outgrowth of the advent of the automobile, for while thousands are ignorant of the fact, the soft tires of the modern motor-car are the greatest menace the hard surface thoroughfares of the world have ever been called upon to face. To understand how a pneumatic tire made of rubber could possibly injure a road surfaced with particles of crushed rock, one must have at least a faint understanding of the theories on which first Tresanget of Limoges and then MacAdam of Ayr built that class of highway. They figured that a road composed of crushed stone would not only endure the constant traffic of ironTired vehicles, but would improve because the metal-bound wheels would be constantly crushing the stones and forming rock dust. That dust would, they argued, not merely sift itself into all cracks and interstices, but would fill all surface inequalities and when wet would be rolled into a smooth, impervious, water-shedding, shell-like surface.

They reasoned well, built wisely, and for over a century and a quarter the so-called macadam road did everything that the famous French and Scotch highway engineers claimed it capable of. It came to be the ideal road for suburban sections, and thousands of miles were built. France to date has spent $660,000,000 on her incomparable system of rock-surfaced national routes and the United States has followed to a degree, possessing at the present time approximately 32,000 miles of this class of highway.

Prior to the advent of the automobile the roads improved, but the modern speed vehicle had not been traversing the suburban highways long before a pronounced retrogression of the most generally traveled stretches was very noticeable. Complaints came from farmers and from dwellers along suburban roads that a great dust nuisance had also sprung up and that

How to Soften Water.

If one has an irritable skin and the water for bathing is hard something should be used to soften it. Bran makes hard water very soft and is good for the skin. A couple of quarts of bran put into a bag of cheesecloth will be sufficient for an ordinary bathtub full of water, and its use will make the skin velvety and fine. Oatmeal, barley, rice and other farinaceous substances are often recommended for the same purpose, either alone or in combination, but bran is the cheapest and best of them all. Tincture of benzoin added to the water makes it soft and agreeable. A few drops of ammonia, not too much, will soften water used for the hands or the face.

Boys For the Beef Industry.

Dairying is no easy task and requires considerable labor at best. A great many boys on the farm have no taste for the work. Such boys seldom prove to be good dairy farmers. They would probably find beef stock raising and fattening to be more congenial and under favorable conditions as profitable.

A Record Breaking Cow.

Pinsucial Countess, a Jersey cow owned by C. E. Parfet of Golden, Colo., is said to have already surpassed the present world's record for butter held by Olive Dunn, owned by A. F. Pierce of Winchester, N. H., of 792 pounds in one year, having produced 792 pounds in ten months.

Socialism was impossible 100 years ago, and capitalism becomes more impossible every day.

A BOOK ON WRESTLING

There has just been issued from the press of Richard K. Fox, Franklin square, New York, one of the most valuable and comprehensive treatises on wrestling ever published. World's champion wrestler Frank Gotch has written a book about the art, which contains everything that is of interest to enthusiasts. A special chapter is devoted to training and another to the career of the conqueror of Hackenschmidt. It contains fifty excellent half-tone illustrations, showing all his principal holds, including the famous toe hold. Portraits are shown of the best known mat artists. It is No. 20 of Fox's Athletic Library, and will be sent to any address for 10 cents; postage 3 cents extra.

CHAPTER XII.

ALWYN BENNETT sat in his own study at home in the big Bennett house that remained as almost the last landmark of that solid middle nineteenth century wealth and fashion which had once dominated a neighborhood now given over to office buildings and apartment houses.

The hour was late. An hour and more had passed since the young mayor and his mother had returned from the administration ball. The house was silent, and even the usually busy streets outside were wrapped in the hush that never falls until after midnight and is dispersed by the gray of dawn. Late as it was Alwyn had made no move to discard his evening clothes. Alone he sat, his head resting between his crossed arms on the desk before him.

Motionless, inert, hopeless, he had remained there ever since his arrival from the ball. But if his body was moveless, his brain was awhirl. Try as he would he could see no light in the tangle of events into which his own sense of right had plunged him. He saw the future stretching out before him dreary and barren as a rainy sea.

Through all of his months of battling he had ever struggled forward through increasing difficulties toward one bright goal—Dallas' love. And now that love was snatched from his grasp, through no fault of his own, and bestowed on a man unworthy to kiss the hem of her garment.

At each step in the long climb Alwyn had asked himself, "Would she approve?" And now through trying to be worthy that approval he had forever lost it, for Dallas, he knew, had not only rejected him and engaged herself to Gibbs, but had done so with the belief that Bennett was a heartless, unscrupulous intriguer, undeserving of a good woman's regard.

A rap at the door aroused Bennett from his bitter thoughts. He lifted his head wearily and gave word to enter. A drowsy servant came in with a card.

"He says it's important business, sir," said the footman. "And he wishes to see you at once, if possible."

"Show him up," answered Bennett, dropping his voice so as not to disturb his mother, who slept on the same floor. "I will see him here."

A minute later Horrigan's bulky form blocked the threshold.

"Queer time of night for a call," he observed casually, as he entered uninvited, closed the door behind him and took a chair, "but my business wouldn't wait."

"Then state it as briefly as you can," directed Bennett, making no move to rise or welcome his unbidden guest. "It is very late, and I am tired."

"I've come to see you about our Borough bill."

"So I supposed."

"You won't call off your fight against us?"

"That question is hardly worth answering. No."

"I thought not. Well, Mr. Alwyn Bennett, I've got you! I've got you! Do you understand me?"

"Perfectly. Is that all?"

"No, it ain't all," mimicked the boss. "And I'm in earnest. I've got you where I want you."

"That doesn't interest me. If you've nothing else to say"—

"But I have," chuckled Horrigan. "When it came to a showdown between us two I put a staff of men to looking up your record."

"You found nothing you could use. Is that"—

"No; it isn't even the beginning. Then I remembered about your father."

"About my father?"

It grated on Bennett that his dead father's honored name should be spoken by this low politician, but before he could protest more forcibly Horrigan went on:

"What d'you think if I said your father was a grafter—one of the worst of his time?"

"I'd say you lied," answered Bennett calmly, "and I'd drive the foul lie down your throat with my fist. You'll have to think of some better schema than that."

"Do you think I'd be idiot enough to come here with the story if I didn't have full proof of it?" asked Horrigan in contempt.

And, despite himself, Alwyn saw the man was speaking what he believed to be the truth. He paused in his impulsive forward move, resented himself and asked coldly:

"What so called 'proofs' have you been fooled by your heelers into thinking"—

"Don't believe me, hey? Well, you will fast enough before I'm done. Unless you're afraid of what I've got to say."

"I'm not afraid of anything you can say. The highest tribute to my father's memory is the fact that a cur like you cannot defile it. Go on. I'll listen to you."

"Very good," said Horrigan, quite unmoved. "I'll make it as short as I can. I remembered your father got rich pretty quick. He was a member of the organization, and his firm got the jobs of building the aqueduct and the new library. That gave me my clew. I looked up the specifications for both jobs, and I turned them over to the old engineering firm of Morris & Cherrington. You know the firm, perhaps. If you don't, you can look them up. They don't belong to the organization; they're the best experts in their line, and they can't be juggled with."

"I know them. Go on."

"I paid them a fancy sum to go over those specifications and then examine the library and the aqueduct and see if they were up to the mark or if the city 'd been cheated by the Bennett Contracting company. I had a strong idea I was right, but I wouldn't speak till I had the proof. When I got home after the ball tonight I found the Morris & Cherrington report waiting for me. I brought a copy of it along with me."

"Well," asked Bennett indifferently, "what then?"

"Here's the copy of the report. Look it over for yourself. The crookedest job ever pulled off in this city! Third rate material, when the material called for in the specifications was used at all. Granite shell filled with mortar instead of solid granite; foundations barely half the depth called for; inferior tiles in place of fireproof ones; cheap, crumbly iron and steel instead of first quality—oh, there's fifty such substitutions and frauds! It's the rawest, lamest job I ever heard of. If any of the organization tried it nowadays the men who did it would be wearing stripes in a week. Graft, hey? Why, your father was the boss grafter of the century, the star graft getter of the bunch! He"—

"Hush! For God's sake, hush!" pouted Alwyn. "My mother sleeps only a few rooms beyond I"—

"What do I care?" roared Horrigan in triumph. "Let everybody hear! The whole world is going to hear it unless that Borough franchise bill goes through. Beat that bill and every paper in the country will have that report to publish. Stop your fight against us and the report is buried. That goes! See? Now, do as you please about the bill. You're a fine man to preach about graft, you are! The very roof over your head, the clothes on your back, were bought with graft money!"

"The clothes on your back were bought with graft money!"

Bennett scarcely heeded the coarse insult, nor did he note Horrigan's grunt of goodby and the clump of his departing feet on the stairs. The young man sat, lost, hopeless, horror gripped, his eyes running mechanically over the closely typewritten pages of the engineer's report. Outsider as he was in matters of practical business, Alwyn could see that Horrigan had in no way exaggerated the document's contents. He knew, too, that the firm of engineers who had drawn up the report were the foremost of their sort and above all shadow of suspicion.

Little by little the numbness lifted from his brain, and in its place crept a horrible conviction of the truth. His father—the gallant young soldier who had won a nation's applause in the civil war—the man who, poor and unaided, had built up a fortune against keenest competition and had earned a repute for sterling probity which had ever been the delight and model of his son—this was the man whom a low blackguard like Horrigan now had the right to revile—a man apparently no better than the boss himself—than any dishonest heeler in the organization!

And, as if it were not enough that the idol of a lifetime were hurled, crushed and defiled, from its bright pedestal, the family name must next be dragged through the mire of political filth and ill repute and the dead man's memory forever blasted. Either that or his son must withdraw from the gallant fight he was waging against civic corruption, for that Horrigan would carry out his threat and blazon forth to the world the story and proofs of the elder Bennett's shame Alwyn had no doubt. With all his faults the boss was a man of his word.

"Stop your fight against us," Horrigan had said, "and the report is burned."

Yes, the boss was a man of his word. Even Bennett admitted that. He would fulfill his promise in either event.

Listlessly Alwyn began to review the case. On the one side a perhaps Quixotic fight for an abstract principle—a fight whose reward was political death, loss of the woman he adored, family shame that might crush his fragile old mother to the very grave. On the other wealth, honor, love, the governorship, a future happy and glorious.

Was he not a fool to hesitate? Had he not salved his conscience sufficiently by vetoing the Borough franchise bill? Had he the right to bring this new shame upon his mother's gray head? Where lay his highest duty?

The soft rustling of silk and a hand laid in light caress upon his head aroused the miserable man from his reflections.

Bennett looked up to see his mother standing beside him. She had thrown on a wrapper and in slippered feet had stolen noiselessly into the study.

"I was awakened by voices," she explained. "I thought I heard some one talking excitedly in here. Is anything the matter?"

"Nothing, nothing dear," he answered gently, drawing the little old lady affectionately down to a seat on his knee and stilling manfully into her sleep flushed face; "nothing is the matter. Only a business call."

"A business call at 2 o'clock in the morning!" she exclaimed. "Dear boy, you are working too hard. Your father never brought his business worries and work home. He always left them at the office. Can't you do the same? You'll wear yourself out."

"My father"—began Bennett, but the name choked him.

"You are growing to be so much like him," went on Mrs. Bennett fondly. "And it makes me so happy that you are. Your splendid fight against that infamous Borough bill, for instance. How proud he would have been of that! It is just the sort of thing he himself would have done in your place. He was surrounded with wicked and dishonest men just as you are. But through it all he remained true, honorable, incorruptible. What a grand heritage for my son! He—Alwyn!" she broke off, alarmed, "why do you look at me that way? I never saw such a look in your eyes before. Are you ill? Has something happened that you are keeping from me?"

"No, no," evaded Bennett. "I only"—

"You had a caller here before I came in," pursued the mother, refusing to abandon the clew to which her womanly intuition had led her. "He brought you bad news? Tell me, dear! I'm your mother, and I love you."

"You are making my course more difficult for me by asking such questions, mother," he answered wretchedly, "and I"—

"I only want to help you, Alwyn. I can't bear to see you miserable. A woman's wit and a mother's love are often a combination that can solve problems beyond even the wisest man's powers of logic. Let me help you."

"I was trying to make up my mind," vaguely replied Bennett, sorely distressed by her pleading, "whether a man ought to follow his conscience, even if it leads to heartbreak for those he loves, or whether he ought to let conscience go by the board for once and protect the happiness of his loved ones."

"Alwyn! How can you hesitate a second over such a question. One must do right, no matter what the consequence."

"I don't know about that," he said moodily.

"You know it perfectly well. It is what your father would have advised and— But, Alwyn, you surely are not making yourself unhappy over a mere supposititious case?"

"Well," he continued, "let us take a 'mere supposititious case' if you like. Suppose, for instance, that a man holding a position of trust had had a father whose memory he honored and revered as I do my own father's"—

"Yes?" prompted Mrs. Bennett as he paused.

"Suppose some one tempts him to betray his position of trust, even as I have lately been tempted, and threatens in case of his refusal to make public certain facts which would prove his dead father to have been a scoundrel. Now, what should the man do? Should he let his father's sacred memory be trampled in the mud, let his duty go by default and save"—

"It would be an awful responsibility to decide such a question," said Mrs. Bennett, with a little shudder, "but there could be only one reply."

"And that is?"

"He must do his duty, be the results what they may."

"You really think so?"

"There can be no doubt. Right is right and"—

"It shall be as you say," groaned Alwyn.

"What?" queried Mrs. Bennett, alarmed at the despair in his voice. "Do you mean it is an actual case? Some friend of yours, perhaps?"

Bennett nodded.

"Oh, the poor, poor fellow!" she sympathized. "What a terrible position for him! It was he, perhaps, that I heard talking to you in here just now. No wonder he seemed excited! The sins of the fathers shall be visited upon the children even unto the"—

"It is something less hard on the children than on the wives," mused Bennett, half to himself.

"The wives? Your friend has a mother living? That makes it doubly hard. Oh, my son, every day I thank God in all humility that my husband lived so blameless a life, and left so honored a name! How grateful you and I both ought to be for"—

"It is easy enough to decide for some one you have never seen," retorted Bennett almost rudely, "but suppose the dishonest man in my story had been father and"—

"I refuse to suppose anything of the sort!" interrupted his mother indignantly, rising to her feet. "I wonder that you can speak so! How can you suggest so horrible a thing?"

"Just a thoughtless, tactless speech of mine. That's all," lied Alwyn. "It's Making Church Pleasant.

After all, those old Puritans had the right idea of making the church pleasant. Now, in Brunswick, Me., the first church had a powder magazine in the garret, the stocks in front, the whipping post behind, the graveyard to the north and beyond that the pound. What more could one desire? Yet the town had to be fined in 1810 for having gone without a competent pastor for more than six months. And not far away from there twenty-one poor Maineites were sent to jail for not paying their church taxes.—New York World.

WHAT appeared strange at the last meeting of the council was the fact that although Alderman Fowler took an active part in the discussion of the questions, which came up, when the time came to vote on the acceptance of the report of the finance committee on the budget for the coming year, he did not answer to his name on roll-call.

We have not commented on the peculiar position which Mr. Fowler occupies before, because we believed that if no one made any objection he was as fully competent to act as a member of the council, now as he was before the question of his right to so act was raised, and he has given the city as good service as any member of the board, in fact, more work than any other member of the present council. However, by his action the other night, he admits that a doubt exists in his own mind as to his right to vote as a member of the board, and having that doubt, he is not giving the people of his ward what they are entitled to—full and complete representation.

WE BELIEVE that a newspaper should, in its news columns print all the news, suppressing only that which may cause an injury and do no public good. That its news columns should be absolutely unprejudiced, stating news only in a fair, impartial manner.

The editorial columns of a newspaper should be reserved for the comments of the editor on public matters. Here too, he should at all times state fairly and impartially his views on matters of public interest, never letting the same be influenced in any way by reason of personal friendships or dislikes. Here it becomes a duty to criticize freely. Where criticism is needed and silence is maintained, for personal or business reasons, it becomes a betrayal of the trust reposed in the press by the public.

ALDERMAN GEIKEN hit the nail squarely on the head at the last council meeting when he said that if the city had any money to expend on park improvements it should be used on the city's property. That the time had come when something should be done to have our park keep pace with the rest of the city improvements. Holding these views we believe that the choice of Alderman Geiken as chairman of the committee on public buildings and grounds was a happy one.

Mr. Geiken also announced his belief that the city engineer should be put under bonds. The COURIER believes that all city officials and contractors should be bonded, and holding that belief, made a part of its bid for the city printing, its willingness to give the city any reasonable bond.

ALDERMAN GLASSFORD has informed us that the expense of the city stone crusher is less by far than last year. While he is unable to give any definite figures as yet, he thinks the saving will amount to at least one-third. A portion of this reduction of expense is due to the work of the old committee, so we are informed, as well as to the present one, both having done efficient work.

Mrs. R. C. Kellogg arrived from Escanaba for a visit with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Price, yesterday.

Mrs. Rev. Whitman of Boyne Falls and Mrs. Hosea Moore of Norwood, were the guests of Mrs. George Eagleton the past few days.

General Manager Culler of the Pere Marquette, arrived today in his private car, accompanied by Division Superintendent Theo Engel.

Resorters on the Charlevoix resort are complaining again this year of the dog nuisance. After 3 o'clock in the morning hounds and other dogs chasing rabbits make sleep practically out of the question to anyone not in perfect health, and many of those who come early are here for the express purpose of recuperating their health. Last year, after notice had been given of this matter, many of the dog owners kept their canines at home, and life was thus made much more enjoyable on the resort. It is hoped that this notice will have a like effect, as present conditions in this respect are, to say the least, unpleasant and the complaints are fully justified.

emerald lawns were taking on the hue of London fog and that box hedge was dove grey rather than green. Fruit farmers noted their products becoming gritty and prices fell off.

Investigation proved at once that the new conditions had been created by the automobile and highway engineers in every civilized land began studying the new condition and seeking for a remedy. In this country, Director Page conducted a series of interesting experiments in which various choice bl automobiles were sent at varying rates of speed over selected stretches of road, while expert photographers pictured their progress and produced proof that the tractive force of the rear tires did the damage. While he was watching that work and was experimenting with various dust laying liquids, France was doing the same on an even larger scale. That country, which expends vast sums annually on maintaining the well-nigh perfect system of highways it has been building since the days of the first Napoleon, made a most complete set of measurements and learned that the automobiles had caused the roads of the Republic to retrograde fully forty percent. It was decided to summon the thought, skill and intelligence of the world to combat a condition which means great financial losses and the official invitations to the Congress were sent out, the French Government formerly requesting the U. S. Government to participate in the Congress.

That President Roosevelt is personally so deeply interested in the coming gathering as to send the Director of, Roads and his distinguished associates to France may by some be regarded as evidence of a National awakening to the vast importance good roads are to the nation.

Invitations have been transmitted through the Office of Public Roads to State Highway Commissioners, City Engineers and Park Commissioners to attend the Congress and already a number of delegates have been selected.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured.

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the Mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give one hundred dollars for any case of deafness caused by catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free. F. J. CHENEY & CO.

In district number two, Bay township, Charlevoix county, the unbroken record of attendance of two pupils deserves special mention. In eight months of school, representing 160 days, Miss Maggie Spura, aged thirteen, and Earl Barkley, aged nine, have not lost a fraction of a day. The former has not been tardy and the latter only twice. There should be more of this regularity and less truancy. Petoskey Independent.

Last Sunday, Henry Wilson, who lives on the Ferguson farm, stirred up the officials by an account of a robbery, which he claimed he had suffered that afternoon, the loss amounting to several hundred dollars. Under Sheriff Weikel, after an investigation, decided there was something off in the story, as all he could find out was that two boys had entered the house and got something to eat. Wilson now admits that his loss was an imaginary one and will pay the costs.

The Cause of Many Sudden Deaths.

There is a disease prevailing in this country most dangerous because so deceptive. Many sudden deaths are caused by it—heart disease, pneumonia, heart failure or apoplexy are often the result of kidney disease. If kidney trouble is allowed to advance the kidney-poisoned blood will attack the vital organs or the kidneys themselves break down and waste away cell by cell.

Bladder troubles most always result from a derangement of the kidneys and a cure is obtained quickest by a proper treatment of the kidneys. If you are feeling badly you can make no mistake by taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and sold by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sized bottles. You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful new discovery and a book that tells all about it, both sent free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co. Binghamton, N. Y. LEGAL NOTICES

Mortgage Foreclosure.

Whereas, Default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage dated the tenth day of April, 1903, executed by Adolph Kirchner and Mary A. Kirchner, his wife to Citizens' State Bank of Whitewater, Wisconsin, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Charlevoix, Michigan, in liber thirty-seven of Mortgages on pages forty and forty-one, on the 27th day of April, 1903 at nine o'clock in the forenoon. And Whereas, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of one thousand four hundred thirteen and sixty-five one-hundredths (1,413.65) dollars, the principal, interest, taxes and insurance, and the further sum of fifty dollars as an attorney fee, stipulated for in said mortgage, and which is the whole amount claimed to be due on said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted either in law or equity, to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises thereby described at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the east front door of the court house in said county of Charlevoix, on the twenty-third day of July next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon on that day; which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to-wit: The south half (S½) of the north-east quarter (NE¼) of section eighteen (18) town thirty-two (32) north, of range six (6) west; and the north-west quarter (NW¼) of the south-east quarter (SE¼) of section eighteen (18) town thirty-two (32) north, of range six (6) west.

THE TOWN HE LOVES BEST

Essay Submitted by Byron O. Smith In Press Contest.

In Praise of The Best Little City Anywhere—Charlevoix The Beautiful.

The Grand Rapids Press has been conducting a contest for the best article written by its readers on the subject, "The Town I Love Best." Among the papers to receive honorable mention is found the following by Byron O. Smith, a Charlevoix boy now employed in Grand Rapids.

That all who have ever lived in Charlevoix are enthusiastic over its beauty and general desirability goes without saying, but the following published evidence of loyalty is none the less gratifying for that:

"Every city, town and village has its lover and some one can always be found who is willing to shout its beauties to the four corners of the earth, but I venture to assert that nowhere in the entire state can he found a city whose natural charms and advantages have the universal recognition that is given to the pearl of the Grand Traverse region, "Charlevoix the Beautiful." Nestling as it does on the shores of Lake Michigan, Round lake and Pine lake and stretching back over the hills and into the country north and south in a graceful, easy manner, its coziness appeals to the traveler at once and he feels that Nature must have been in her kindliest mood when she created this garden of health, happiness and prosperity.

"Charlevoix is doubtless better known as a resort town than anything else and few are they indeed, who have not heard of it in this respect at least. Men of wealth and national renown make this their Mecca and take their families every summer where their children may spend so many golden hours in the country or on the water, filling their lungs to the fullest extent with the purest and freshest of air and taking in stores of strength and vigor to last them through another winter in a smoky, crowded city. Their homes are no longer being built as mere summer cottages, but are substantial, strictly modern homes, which would afford comfort the year around if they chose to occupy them. All through the summer months the waters of Round and Pine lakes are fairly alive with boats, large and small, and regattas, boat races, swimming contests, etc., are the order of the day, while here and there may be seen the graceful outlines of some millionire's private yacht. I mention these things merely to show that those who can enjoy the best of earth find nothing better than Charlevoix.

"But its advantages are by no means limited to the fact that it is a resort town, nor are they appreciated only by the summer visitors. In fact the latter only see one side of Charlevoix life. The winter season is not as so severe as our fathers would lead us to believe it used to be, but it still brings plenty of skating, sleighriding and coasting, all of which mean health and vigor. The social side of life in this charming place is an important factor at all times of the year and everyone knows there is a certain sincerity and good fellowship in the society of a small place that is not always found in a large city.

"Commercially speaking Charlevoix is thrice blessed. It has one of the best harbors on the great lakes, which gives it an unexcelled passenger and freight service, the safety of which is carefully guarded by a well equipped, thoroughly efficient lifesaving station. The business places of this model little city are wide awake and bustling and they supply your wants with a quickness and thoroughness not to be excelled. Surrounded as it is by an excellent farming community its business is a positive factor, while the richest dairy products, the choicest fruits and vegetables are brought to your door in all their wholesome freshness by the producers themselves.

"And so when speaking of the town we love best I am indeed proud to speak for the town that is the joy and pride of so many people every year; the city of pretty churches, excellent schools, well paved and shady streets; the city of beautiful homes, beautiful scenery and beautiful sunsets; the city with a history made by courageous men and the possibilities of a wonderful future; the center of good fellowship, hospitality, health, happiness and prosperity; the best little city anywhere—"Charlevoix the Beautiful." Byron O. Smith."

Neighborhood Notes

Mrs. Catherine Murray, 55 years old, hung herself with a rope to a window blind in Mercy hospital sanitorium last week. The white robed figure was in plain view from the street and was first noticed by pedestrains passing the hospital and they notified the hospital authorities. There was still life when the body was cut down, but the woman died ten minutes later. Her home was at Mazomanie, Wis. She was suffering from extreme nervousness.

Suspension from the ministry was the verdict of the Cheboygan Congregational association in the case of Rev. J. W. Noble, former pastor of the Congregational church at Lewiston, being charged with unministerial conduct. Rev. Mr. Noble appeared before the trial body to answer the charges touching his moral conduct and to which he entered a vehement denial. The action of the association was based on the charged that he entered the ranks of the Congregational ministry under misrepresentations. He expressed his intention of going to Washington state and making a new start.

Several small girls made a ghastly find in a lane near Albert Guernsey's farm, half way between Wexford and Buckley Wednesday. Hearing the pistol shot they ran to the lane and saw the body of Arthur Abbott, aged 47, a woodsman, lying by the roadside. The man had been sick for some time, was out of money and grew despondent. He purchased a box of 38 caliber cartridges in Wexford Wednesday morning and shot himself through the right temple. He was unmarried and formerly lived in Carlson City.

June 7, Paulus Haller Jr. and Frank Thornton, of South Milton, were drowned in Elk Lake. In the morning they made the trip from Rex Terrace to Elk Rapids, leaving there on their return about ten o'clock in the evening. Not returning, a search was made, some of their clothing, oars and the boat were found at different points on the shore the following day. At last account the bodies had not been recovered.

The following dispatch from Cadillac to the Grand Rapids Herald will be of interest to Northern Michigan.

"George F. Williams of the Williams Brothers company, which operates factories in this city and Manton, has found iron ore on his land in the vicinity of Manton. Mr. Williams sent a specimen of the ore away and had it analyzed. It was found to contain 23 per cent iron and a little over 1½ per cent manganese. This ore was found almost on the surface of the land and it is believed that the product further under ground will show a sufficient percentage of iron to make it of commercial value.

"Mr. Williams will employ an expert to investigate his findings. Mining experts and geologists have often claimed that the chain of hills that extend north of this city as far as Antrim county, a distance of about 75 miles, contained mineral. About a year ago a company of Pittsburg captalists caused drillings to be made into one of these ranges of hills near this city, but so much quick sand was encountered that the work was abandoned at that time. They are now arranging to again sink drills in Clam Lake township north of this city. Mr. Williams' discovery will result in much drilling being done in this range of hills which are termed the "Hog Back." His find is the first real evidence that there is mineral in the range of hills."

Reflecting the return of normal conditions and prosperity, the reports of the condition of the 338 state banks and six trust companies of the state for the three months ending May 14 show a total increase in deposits of $2,042,237.99, of which more than $700,000 is in savings deposits and the remainder in commercial. Loans, discounts, mortgages and securities increased $705,331.91. The cash reserve is $14,851,130.23, a gain of $368,134.36.

Members of the Reorganized church of Jesus Christ of Latter day Saints of the Northern Michigan District will hold their semi annual district conference at East Jordan June 26-27-28. The town hall has been secured for their several sessions to be held in social service convening at 8:30 Friday morning and the balance of the day will be held for religious and Sunday school conventions including an entertainment in the evening at 8:00. Saturday morning social service at 8:30, business session opening at 10:00, with preaching in the evening. There will also be several preaching services during Sunday. Elders J. W. Wright, of Lamoni, Iowa, Mission president of said church and Elder J. J. Cornish, Reed City, sub-mission in charge, E. K. Evans, of Grand Rapids, and other good speakers are expected to be present. Everybody invited to attend. For further particulars see small hand bills.

THE VETERINARY.

Lampers may be overcome by applying to the affected parts a mixture of one ounce of alum in a quart of water once or twice each day.

When an Artery Is Wounded.

A man saved his horse from bleeding to death from a wounded artery by a mixture of equal parts of wheat flour and salt bound on with strips of muslin. He used about three pints of the mixture and left it on for several days until it worked off.

Warts on Horses.

To cure warts on horses rub the wart well with soft soap, and in a few days a scab will appear. Pick the scab off when it gets loose and rub again with soft soap, repeating the operation until the wart is gone. It will not leave a scar and will not return.

Blistering For Lame Joints.

Blistering is an effective remedy for nearly all the different kinds of joint lameness. Mix two drams of Spanish flies with one ounce of lard and apply to the lame joint. Let it remain for twenty-four hours and wash off with castile soapsuds. Wait three weeks and repeat if lameness still exists.

To Cure White Scour.

When white scour makes its appearance it will be found advisable to take the affected calf off milk at once, and, after giving it one or two doses of castor oil or salts mixed with a little warm, sweetened gruel, for thoroughly clearing the stomach, follow on with a mixture of beaten up eggs and port wine, made by beating up two eggs thoroughly, shells and all, and mixing them with a glass of port wine and giving it to the calf about three times a day. This will be found to sustain the calf and counteract the acidity in the stomach and will generally effect a cure in two or three days. The calf should not be allowed to have any milk until all the symptoms of scour have disappeared.

Remedy For Pink Eye.

The following is advised as a good remedy for pink eye: Give bran mash and green feed or laxatives if needed. For this a dram of aloes two or three times a day will do. Also give tonic, as nux vomica one dram and gentian three drams, three times a day. If eyes are badly inflamed, wash three times a day with 3 per cent solution of boric acid.

The Pig Is a Bundle of Protein.

It is so easy to throw out a few scoops of corn to the bunch of brood sows, and it is the way many of them are fed. The brood sow must be looked upon as a pig factory, and the pig is a bundle of protein, as it were. The sow developing a litter of pigs must have this protein supplied in her food. Her system fairly craves it, and she ravenously devours the chance flesh or carcass which comes her way. The few wisps of alfalfa or clover hay falling from the load are eagerly licked, and if she is allowed to go to farrowing time undergoing this protein starvation she is feverish and constipated, and the conditions are all there to produce a pig eating sow. Even if this does not occur the pigs are lacking in vigor and vitality, and oftentimes the mother does not have a proper supply of milk.

Miss Fanny Crosby, the blind hymn writer, was eighty-eight the other day. Though sightless from her birth, there is probably not a happier woman in the country, due in no small part to what she has done to give happiness to others.

TO GIVE MAN DOMINION.

Capitalism Has Performed Its Mission and Must Retire.

Socialism is the name of an epoch of civilization—the next epoch, if our civilization is to continue.

We must not expect that the Socialist era will come all at one stroke. Neither capitalism nor feudalism arose "at a certain date," nor can the Socialist form of society have its beginning on any fixed day.

Besides, although capitalistic society has already passed its zenith, yet even at the present day feudalism holds a very important place in modern society. This is the case not only in Germany in spite of its high economic development, but also in England, the "classic land" of capitalism.

Many industries today are not concentrated and therefore are not ripe for collective production. Some will become so in time; others perhaps will not.

But it is not necessary nor possible that all industries should be immediately taken over by the Socialist government.

Every branch of production controlled by a trust as well as all industries which could be conducted on a similar scale, besides railways, telegraphs, mines, etc., will, of course, become collective public property and will be managed by the national government.

But there is a whole class of industries—for instance, farming—which are not yet ready to be worked on this large scale or which are liable to be decentralized by the technical perfection of the methods of transmitting power.

In other cases the Socialist society can give the opportunity for the formation of co-operative associations, which, together with the model industries conducted by the state, will raise the level of the working class to a degree hardly credible at the present time.

The trusts show how a regulated business can be done. The management of the co-operative workingmen's association of the future will find out what the demand is and determine the amount and method of the production. During the transition period the sale of products may take place exactly as at present, only subject to regulation by the state.

In the trusts the capitalist class even now plays the most superfluous role in the world.

Indeed, in the trusts the capitalist class is already expropriated to a certain extent.

The smaller investors, who are the great majority, no longer have anything to control and only draw their profits. Their industries are apparently the property of the shareholders, but what sort of property is that of which one has not the free disposal? They can no longer produce what they will, nor at what price they will, nor with what workmen they will. All is prescribed to them by the management of the trust. Properly speaking, they are only profit receivers.

The trusts are ready now for a change of ownership.

Of course all industries of national magnitude would be carried on by the government. For smaller industries, wherever necessary, the government could make some agreement with the co-operative associations of workers. We speak of the transition period.

In this transition period the Socialist government can of course lend the necessary capital to the co-operative societies and furnish suitable guarantees. The government in this transition period will have at its disposal quite different powers from the present ones. For instance, it will have a monopoly of all water power, coal mines, railroads, rivers, electrical plants, etc.

So perhaps for a time a state of affairs may arise which will combine at the same time three forms of production—that is, the capitalistic form in petty industries, where goods will be produced for the market; the co-operative form, in which the products will be for use and also for sale, and the purely Socialistic, where the government will carry on production for use only and the production will not take the form of wares at all.

Capitalism was necessary to give mankind dominion over the forces of nature, which is now assured by our scientific attainments.

But from a civilizing force capitalism has already become a menace to civilization. But that does not affect its vitality. However, the tendencies which oppose it have now gathered such great strength that a thorough change must not, indeed, but can, take place if the working class understands its mission.—Victor L. Berger.

The Freedom of the Press.

Thomas Cooper said several generations ago, "Grant to our rulers the right of controlling the press, and the empire of mystery, of political tyranny, of ignorance and bigotry will remain forever unshaken."

Again, "Every new generation is obliged to rescue the most precious of its principles—the freedom of the press—from the insidious encroachments of power."

Over a century ago Lord Erskine said: "The press, my lords, is one of our outsentries. If we remove it, if we hoodwink it, if we throw it in fetters, the enemy may surprise us."

"What did you think of that cigar I gave you yesterday?"

"Not much. It cost me $4."

"How so?"

"Well, it gave my wife the idea that the gas was leaking somewhere, and she sent for a plumber."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

her, saw that her eyes were riveted on a bit of pasteboard lying on the corner of his desk directly beneath the reading lamp.

It was Horrigan's card.

Slowly the mother's gaze shifted from the card to her son. From her face the color had been crushed by some swift emotion that left it very old, pale and sunken.

"Mr. Horrigan!" she murmured. "It was he who was your visitor tonight? Surely he isn't the sort of a man to care about his father's reputation for honesty. He"—

"You're tired, mother," interrupted Bennett in haste. "Won't you"—

"Wait!" she panted. "His visit here—Alwyn!" her voice rising to a wail of panic stricken appeal. "Did—did that man dare to hint anything against your father? Tell me the truth! I have a right to know. Did he?"

Alwyn bowed his head in silence.

"Tell me what he said!"

"He said," muttered Bennett, almost incoherently, "he said my father made his fortune—by—graft!"

"And you thrashed him and threw him out of the house?" she cried, her old eyes ablaze.

"No."

"Alwyn!"

"He—he proved what he said!"

"It is a lie! A wicked, abominable lie!"

"It is the truth, mother. Would I have told you such a thing—would Horrigan have left this room alive—if it were not true?"

A silence—dreadful in its intensity—fell over the room. Alwyn dared not look at his mother. At last she spoke:

"I must know more. I refuse to believe one word. You spoke of proofs. What are they?"

Without a word, Bennett handed her the report left by Horrigan. For a time silence brooded over the study, broken only by the occasional turning of a page of the report. Then, after what seemed to Alwyn an eternity of waiting, the document slid to the floor. Bennett glanced at his mother. She was standing rigid, her face cold and hard as granite.

"I do not advise, I command. Do right!"

"Horrigan has ferreted this out," he said, not daring to draw nearer or proffer comfort to the woman whom the boss' disclosure had turned to stone. "He has secured the proofs and says he will publish them broadcast unless I withdraw my opposition in the Borough franchise matter. If I let that bill pass, Friday he will burn the report, and"—

"There is only one thing to do," interposed the mother, speaking with slow decision, her voice as cold and colorless as her face. "Right must prevail, no matter what"—

"Mother!" cried Alwyn, trembling. "You advise me to— You advise me"—

"I do not advise, I command. Do right!"

CHAPTER XIII.

THE momentous Friday had arrived; the day whereon the famous—or infamous—Borough Street railway bill in its amended form was to come up for the aldermen's consideration.

Every paper in the city devoted columns to the situation. Everywhere it was known that the "boy mayor" was fighting with all his might the bill he had already vetoed. Equally well was it understood that Horrigan was making the battle of his whole career in behalf of the measure. If he could but induce his "solid thirteen" aldermen to stand firm and could maintain his hold on Roberts for the fourteenth, all would be plain sailing and the bill would pass by a two-thirds vote in spite of the mayor's veto.

More than the mere bill and his price for it were included in Horrigan's reasons for his present activity. He recognized that his prestige as boss was at stake—that in case of failure his hold on the organization would be considerably weakened, perhaps almost so much shaken as to permit Phelan to fulfill his once absurd threat to tear him down from his eminence. For the whole organization was viewing with breathless interest the duel between Horrigan and the youthful mayor the boss had "made." In such circles a beaten man commands scant respect.

* * * * * * *

The board of aldermen were in session in the city hall. Off the antechamber of the great room where they met was a small, snugly furnished apartment, first of a series of similar rooms that stretched away, with connecting doors, to the far end of the main corridor. This place, with the room adjoining, had once been the comptroller's office. Of late, however, that official had changed his quarters and the room nearest the antechamber had been appropriated by Horrigan himself as a sort of unofficial snuggery, where he could sit at ease and transact business at close quarters whenever the organization's secret interests demanded his presence at the city hall.

Here, his whereabouts known only to his intimate and personal lieutenants, the boss was wont to sit at ease, like some fat, ruddy spider in the center of a web of intrigue, and issue his orders or plans of campaign. Some of these were carried by word of mouth through the anteroom into the aldermanic chamber. Others be transmitted by means of a telephone that stood ready on the center table, before which his great easy chair was always placed.

Around this table as the board of aldermen were about to convene on the fateful Friday of the Borough bill's final consideration sat three men—Wainwright, Gibbs and Horrigan. The former, in spite of his habitual steady coolness, was plainly uneasy. Gibbs made no effort to deny his anxiety. His eyes were bloodshot, his manner abstracted and his nerves evidently strung to breaking point. Horrigan alone of the trio had abated not one jot of the colossal calm and brutal power that were part and parcel of the man's mighty character.

"When will our bill come up, do you suppose?" asked Gibbs, breaking a brief silence.

"In half an hour or so probably," answered Horrigan, glancing at his watch. "I thought it was better for us to get here ahead of time."

"Half an hour," fumed Gibbs, "and neither Ellis nor Roberts here yet! Suppose they don't get here on time?"

"They will," grunted Horrigan placidly.

"Do you think it is possible either of them has come yet?" went on Gibbs, with a glance at the antechamber door.

"No."

"How do you know? Perhaps"—

"Williams would have told me. He knows where I'm to be found."

"You're sure Ellis and Roberts will show up?"

"Yes."

"How soon?"

(To be continued next week.)

DELICIOUS SUMMER SALADS.

How to Make Attractive Dishes With Vegetables and Fruits.

How to prepare a pretty summer salad is thus told by Caroline French Benton in the June Delineator: Select some green peppers and open them at the top and take out the seeds. Make each one stand on a lettuce leaf, cutting a tiny bit off the bottoms if necessary. Then prepare some small cooked green string beans, the smaller the better, by mixing them with French dressing. Fill the peppers with these and on top of each one put a little ball of cream cheese. The combination is quite unusual in flavor and very good. Fruit salads are the daintiest and most refreshing of all we have in summer, and they are almost no trouble to make. Several kinds of fruit should not be put together as a usual thing, however, for that is apt to make a messy dish. One or two kinds mixed, or one alone, is quite enough. Then, too, it should be remembered that mayonnaise rarely combines with fruits. There is one exception at least, for pineapple is particularly good with it, but with most other fruits French dressing should be used, and this should have little vinegar in it. Lemon juice is much better.

Strawberry salad is made by arranging for each person six or more very large, fine berries in a cup shaped lettuce leaf. These are laid on a platter, and French dressing is put on last. Like all salads, to be good this must be cold.

Cherry salad is made with either California cherries or the large ox hearts, and both red and white ones are used, or the two are prettily mixed. The cherries are stoned without breaking them, and in place of each pit a bit of nut is pressed in, or a small hazelnut is put in entire. They are laid on lettuce, and French dressing is poured over. This is rather an elaborate dish when finished, but simple enough to make if one has time and is willing to take the trouble to put it together.

To ascertain if water is free from organic pollution place a lump of sugar in a bottle nearly full and cork it up, and if after thus excluding the air and keeping the bottle in the light for two or three days no milky cloud is apparent, but the water remains clear, it may be considered free from the phosphates with which sewage water is impregnated.

Report of Delegate to Convention.

At the meeting of the W. C. T. T. held Friday, Mrs. Jennie Allcox presented her report of the State Convention at Bay City, which she attended as delegate from the local union, which was one of the chief features of the meeting. As the press has already given the main features of the meeting we will simply give some of the things Mrs. Allcox gave in the report, which will cause the convention to be remembered. The demonstration meeting was one of the most interesting features being very unique.

The medal contest work was demonstrated by a little girl with her dress fairly covered by the different forms of medals. The press department presented a number of ladies adorned with newspaper clippings and temperance literature. Purity and mother's meetings by a little child dressed in white and holding in her hands a bunch of white carnations. Sunday school work by a model committee meeting, who planned for temperance Sunday by sending for literature and pledge cards and for songs and recitations. Medical temperance was demonstrated in an amusing way by Mrs. Francis Heston.

Mud That Is Valuable.

Healing mud is found in Sweden and on the shores of the Black sea and in various other parts of the continent of Europe. Speaking generally, a mud bath is composed of peaty, boggy turf which contains stimulating chemical properties and which after being carefully prepared is mixed with the mineral waters of the locality where it is used. The mixture is not adhesive, but leaves the skin easily under the warm douche which precedes the cleansing bath. The period of immersion ranges from half an hour to five hours.

The Origin of Algebra.

If Diophantus of Alexandria, fourth century of the Christian era, was not the inventor of algebra, then it is not known to whom the honor belongs. To Diophantus the honor is generally given. The Arabians claim that the invention belongs to one of their countrymen, Mohammed Ben-Musa, who flourished about the middle of the ninth century. Certain it is that the Arabians introduced algebra to Europe by way of Italy through Leonardo, a merchant of Pisa, who had lived among the Arabs of Barbary. Leonardo's treatise was written in 1202.

Printing Papers

This office wishes to call the attention of users of Printed Matter to the fine line of stationery, book and poster papers, cardboards and covers, which we carry in stock. You have all, no doubt, experienced the annoyance of having to accept a paper stock for your printed matter that was not what you wanted, but—"it will do," or else submit to an exasperating delay while a special order for stock was being filled in Chicago. Now, these delays are just as annoying to the printer as to his customer; and besides, they are expensive for him; therefore, we aim to have in stock a line of papers from which any ordinary demand may be filled and with the "just right" kind.

There are very few country offices anywhere that carry the assortment we do; and none in this part of Michigan.

The next time you want Printed Matter—the good red corpuscles of any business—call on the COURIER, and be sure that an otherwise good piece of work will not be robbed of a large part of its effectiveness through being printed upon an inappropriate paper stock, through lack of assortment from which to select.

Wilson Grange No. 719 met Saturday evening, June 13 and was opened in form with nearly all present. Master filled vacancies by appointment.

In business session it was decided to order at once four bales of binder twine.

Master appointed a committee of three to draft resolutions on the death of Brother Bergmau.

Number members present twenty-three, visitors two.

The lecturer's hour was taken up by a spelling match, Sister Prudence Smith carrying off the honors.

A fishing excursion and a dance at Deer Lake Grange hall is accountable for the small attendance.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED.

Whereas, it has pleased the Divine Master to remove from our midst our beloved brother, August Bergman, be it

Resolved, that Wilson Grange sincerely mourns the loss of one whose name has ever been associated with the noblest works and highest aims of our order, and as a token thereof our charter will be draped in mourning for a period of thirty days.

Be it further resolved, that we deeply and sincerely sympathize with the bereaved family, that a copy of these resolutions be sent the relatives of the deceased brother and that a copy shall be sent for publication to all local newspapers.

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

The following resolutions were adopted at the state convention of the W. C. T. U.:

Resolved, that at this time of proposed constitutional changes we deem it very essential that women everywhere make political economy a special study.

Resolved, that recognizing the hand of God in all the victories of the past year, we lift our hands in gratitude and thanksgiving and pledge our continued allegiance and service to Him, who will continue to lead our hosts on to victory.

Resolved, that we extend our thanks to the people of Bay City, who have taken us in to their hearts and homes to those who gave us the auto ride; to the reception committee; to the decoration committee, the press, and to all who in any way have aided in making our convention pleasant and profitable.

Resolved, that recognizing the demoralizing effect of the Sunday newspaper, we enter our protest against its publication and sale.

Resolved, that being keenly conscious of the power of the press in moral education, and recognizing that we have a strong state law touching impurity in printed word and picture, this convention urges upon the local unions the vigilance in the enforcement of that law.

Resolved, that whereas Michigan is one of the optional states with regards to the reading of the bible in the public schools, that we emphasize the duty and the necessity of vigorous efforts, by means of the school ballot and in every other proper way to secure again the introduction of the daily reading of the bible in our public schools.

Resolved, that whereas the women of the state of Michigan are in many respects under the old common laws, that we make extra effort to secure the ballot for women.

Resolved, that realizing that the intelligent worker is the effective worker, we urge upon our unions the duty of holding frequent institute days whereby we may study our principles, parliamentary law, and the wisest methods of promoting our work.

Resolved, that in the interest of art and of morality as a protection to our children, we protest against the crude and demoralizing illustrations to be found in the pages of our newspapers.

Resolved, that as during the next year hundreds of young men will cast their first ballot and to the end that they may vote more intelligently, we pledge to push forward with increased diligence the Loyal Temperance Legion and medal contest work.

Most of the above resolutions met with animated discussion before adoption.

We hope to be able to give other extracts from a very valuable and interesting report in future issues.

FIVE REASONS WHY

CALUMET BAKING POWDER

has obtained the confidence of the public.

1. It complies with the Pure Food Laws of all states.
2. It is the only high-grade Powder sold at a moderate price.
3. It is not made by a Baking Powder Trust.
4. Food prepared with it is free from Rochelle Salts or Alum.
5. It is the strongest Baking Powder on the market.

$1,000.00 given for any substance injurious to health found in Calumet

Calumet is so carefully and scientifically prepared that the neutralization of the ingredients is absolutely perfect. Therefore, Calumet leaves no Rochelle Salts or Alum in the food. It is chemically correct.

All Grocers are Authorized to Guarantee this.

Calumet Baking Powder costs little. Costs a little more than the cheap, injurious powders now on the market, but is a big saving over the trust powders.

TAFT ON THE FIRST BALLOT

Easily Nominated Over All the Favorite Sons

JAS. S. SHERMAN FOR VICE-PRESIDENT

Completes a Ticket Which Will Win Approval of Voters

Both Candidates Are Men Who Have Long and Creditable Records of Public Service Well Performed—Burton's Speech.

Taft and Sherman was the ticket nominated by the Republican National Convention last week, both candidates being named on the first ballot.

Secretary Taft was placed in nomination by T. E. Burton, of Ohio, Fairbanks by Governor Hanley, of Indiana, Hughes by General Woodford, Cannon by Boutell, LaFollette by McGee, Foraker by McCay, Knox by Murphy.

Immediately after the speeches a ballot was ordered with the following result.

Taft 702, Roosevelt 3, Foraker 16, LaFollette 25, Fairbanks 40, Cannon 61, Hughes 63, Knox 68.

For Vice-president the names of Sherman, of New York, Guild, of Massachusetts and Murphy, of New Jersey, were placed before the convention, Mr. Sherman winning by the following vote. ...

Sherman 816, Murphy 77, Guild 73, Sheldon 10, Fairbanks 1.

Secretary Taft resigned as Secretary of War immediately after the convention and Luke E. Wright, of Tennessee, was appointed his successor. No better description of Mr. Taft and the qualifications, which he will bring to the high office, for which he has been named, could be given than to quote portions of Mr. Burton's speech placing him in nomination.

"No one has ever yet assumed the presidential chair who had received a more ideal preparation for the duties of that great office. As judge in state and federal courts, as solicitor general, as governor of the Philippines, as secretary of war, which has included the work of colonial secretary and director of national public works he has received his training and has always shown himself master of the situation and competent to make more honorable and beloved the American name. There have been no years of inaction in his career. He has been continuously engaged in weighty tasks and each successive service has been characterized by an increasing influence upon most vital questions.

"In our domestic affairs, in whatever position he has held, he has displayed the rare union of a judicial temperament with an unsurpassed gift for administrative management. To him belongs the extremely valuable faculty of eliminating the non-essential from complicated problems and going directly to their substance. His capacity for work is enormous, yet quite as helpful in his equable temperament which will not allow the annoyances of life to distract or hamper him. Although of an aggressive personality, he possesses an infinite good nature, a charm of manner and poise which have made him a model for exalted station. In the final analysis even the highest officials must be judged as men and under this criterion Secretary Taft is now and will ever be known for his broad sympathies with every grade of humanity and as one invariably actuated by that democratic spirit, which should characterize a progressive American. And yet no one can for a moment hesitate to recognize his severity in dealing with wrong-doing. While no honest enterprise need fear him, no dishonest scheme could hope to hide its face from the light or to escape punishment.

"More than any other of our public men he has had to do with our outlying dependencies and colonial relations. It was he who took in charge the prosecution of that colossal enterprise on the Isthmus, the canal uniting the lesser and the greater oceans, and under his directing hand the completion of this most stupendous of public works is no longer a vague and distant hope but an imminent reality. With his ever-ready skill as a pacificator, he restored tranquility in the fertile Island of Cuba, so often distracted by civil strife. In the far-off Philippines, under a blazing tropical sky, he found a people of many races and tribes, degraded by centuries of misrule and oppression; and there too he had not only established the rule of law and local control in place of confusion and bloody strife, but showed the way to self-government, and a new recognition of the rights of man. For peoples and races, like individuals, under the inspiration of a friendly guide, may lift their faces heavenward and seek to climb the great world's altar stairs to nobler heights of liberty and opportunity. It is to his lasting honor that his desire was not to be known as "Taft, the Pro-Consul," but as "Taft, the Father of the Philippines," who brought to them the light of modern civilization.

"In the larger sphere of world politics, we are entering into new and closer bonds with all the nations of the earth. Who is better qualified than he to lead America to her true position in this later day when the boundaries established in the centuries past are becoming less distinct and kingdoms and races are beginning to realize that they have all one common destiny?"

J. W. MILLIKEN DEAD

Suddenly Stricken by Apoplexy on Train Near New York Friday

One of Traverse City's Lesding Merchants, a Pioneer and Former State Senator.

J. W. Milliken, one of the most prominent business men of Traverse City and a former state senator, from this district, died suddenly last Friday on the train from apoplexy, while on his way to New Haven, Connecticut, to attend the commencement exercises of Yale College.

Mr. Milliken was born in Maine, May 20, 1848, coming to Traverse City in 1868, and entering the employ of the Hannah & Lay Mercantile Company. In 1874, in company with Frank Hamilton, who had come from Maine with him, he formed a partnership for the purpose of carrying on a dry goods and clothing business under the name of Hamilton, Milliken & Co., which was continued until 1893, when Mr. Milliken took over the dry goods business, Mr. Hamilton continuing the clothing part.

Mr. Milliken was married in 1881 to Miss Callie Thacker and they were the parents of one child, James, whose graduation from Yale, he was on his way to attend.

A strong Republican from boyhood, Mr. Milliken was in 1897, elected state senator, from this district, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of George G. Covell and in 1898 was re-elected for the full term, making a splendid record but he could not be induced to accept further political honors.

Mr. Milliken was three times elected president of the Michigan Sunday School Association, an honor enjoyed by no other man.

The body arrived at Traverse City Sunday, being met by the Sunday school children. The funeral will be held today at the Congregational church Traverse City, Rev. D. Cochlin officiating.

WAS IN CHARLEVOIX

Forger Was Here Sunday and Left Reminder Behind Him.

Sunday a stranger, who from descriptions, is evidently the same man who worked Boyne City merchants recently, struck town and registered at the Fountain City House under the name of Fred Wooden. Sunday night he visited the Cottage restaurant and called for a meal, paying for the same in a check drawn on the Charlevoix County Bank to the order of Frank Barnes and signed Charlevoix Lumber Co. by J. V. Green foreman. The check was also indorsed on the back by Frank Barnes. On presenting the check it was easy to decide it was forgery, as the lumber company have no foreman of that name. The man took breakfast at the Fountain City House and left there with his bill unpaid.

Up to this date no trace has been found of him.

ATTENDANCE WAS SMALL

At the Pythian Picnic—Ball Game was Great Attraction.

While the attendance on the day of the Pythian celebration in Charlevoix was disappointing, the arrangements made by the Charlevoix Pythians were nearly perfect, every boat and train being met by committees appointed for the purpose, and the speakers' stand at the grove being finely decorated. The chief feature of the day was the ball game between picked teams from East Jordan and Boyne City, players being restricted to members of the order. The game was by no means an errorless one and full of surprises. Postmaster Kenyon, of East Jordan, was captain for East Jordan, Sheriff McWain for Boyne City, and the chief feature of the game was when Captain Kenyon caught Captain McWain out and fell down while performing the feat.

WERE AGAIN DEFEATED

Boyne City Reds are the Winners of Friday's Ball Game.

Charlevoix's Re-Organized Team Showed Up Well—No More Games Until July 4.

Friday the Charlevoix ball team was defeated in a hard fought game with the Boyne City Reds. Charlevoix has strengthened her team in many ways, but still lacks a catcher. Withers being too apt to make errors at critical points in the game, the playing done by the outfielders, which consisted of Holmes, Wilbur, Davidson and Lewis in Friday's game was nearly perfect and shows that the boys are getting in shape with practice. Stacks pitched high class ball and is a valuable addition to the pitcher's staff.

One of the features of the game was the fine work done at the bat by Wilbur, he knocking out two three base hits.

We are informed by the management that no more games will be played until the Fourth, when with the improvements which the boys are showing and with a new battery, prospects are good for a Charlevoix victory.

The score:

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7
Boyne City	2	2	6	2	1	3	0	—16
Charlevoix	6	4	1	1	1	0	2	—15

DROPPED DEAD TUESDAY

Chris Johnson, a Sailor From Racine, Wisconsin, Leaves a Family.

Chris Johnson, aged fifty-seven, a sailor on the schooner J. B. Nowland, whose home is at Racine, Wisconsin, dropped dead Tuesday morning about two o'clock, while the Nowland was off Lighthouse point, on her way out. The schooner put back and the body was removed to the undertaking rooms of S. M. See & Sons where an inquest was conducted by Dr. Lewis and a verdict of death by heart failure given. The body was shipped to Racine today, where he leaves a wife and four children.

New Business Firm.

C. S. Dodge and son Harry have formed a co-partnership under the firm name of C. S. Dodge & Son, which will carry on the business formerly conducted by Mr. Dodge on Mason street, of tailoring, dyeing and pressing. Mr. Dodge, who has had years of experience in the business, and Harry, who has long been the popular clerk at Madison's, combined will undoubtedly make a strong team.

Proclamation

The attention of all persons is hereby directed to the provisions of Ordinance Number 76 of the City of Charlevoix, Michigan, relative to the use of fire-arms and fire-works in said city and the sale thereof.

In such ordinance it is provided, among other things, that no person shall fire or set off any squib, firecracker, gun-powder or fireworks, or fire any gun, revolver, pistol, toy-pistol cap or cartridge of any kind in any street, lane, alley or other public place within the city of Charlevoix, and that no person who shall set off or discharge any of said articles from private premises, shall not allow any missles therefrom to fall upon any other private place or upon any lot, street, alley or public place in said city. And further, that no person, firm or corporation shall sell or offer for sale within the limits of the city of Charlevoix any toy-pistol, toy-gun, dynamite crackers or an article, appliance or contrivance to be used in connection with the explosion or discharge of any of the foregoing articles or fireworks.

S. M. ROSE, Mayor.

FOOTE NEW COMMANDER

Elected by the Michigan Department G. A. R. Last Week.

C. E. Foote, a patent attorney of Kalamazoo, was elected department commander of the G. A. R. department of Michigan, at the state meeting held at Detroit last week. He defeated Burton Parker of Monroe, by a majority of 108, receiving 273 votes to Parker's 165. The name of W. G. Gage of Saginaw, was not presented.

The other officers elected are: Geo. L. Holmes, Detroit, senior vice commander; J. J. Drake, Jr., St. Joseph, junior vice commander; and the Rev. William Putnam of Lansing, chaplain. Rev. Mr. Putnam has served in this capacity continuously since 1901.

Commander Foote reappointed Fayette Wyckoff of Lansing, assistant adjutant general and appointed Capt. James E. White of Kalamazoo, assistant quartermaster general to succeed Mr. Conklin of Adrian. Dr. Solman, Howard City, was chosen medical director.

It was decided to hold the 1909 encampment in Kalamazoo.

Mr. Foote is a man well known in grand army circles and is well informed on all matters pertaining to his office. He served in Co. D., Third New York cavalry during the war.

FULL BOARD PRESENT

At Meeting of Council Held Thursday Night.

A Business Session—Permit to Erect Building—Cost of Bridge Painting $232.

At the meeting of the council Thursday night a full board was present, Mayor Rose being in the chair. The principal business before the council was the adoption of an ordinance providing for the raising of the necessary money for the expenses of the city, the amounts of which we published last week.

Frank G. Spencer appeared before the board and requested permission to erect a temporary wooden building to be used as an Electric Theater on the lot next to the Young building, stating he had the consent of the adjoining property owners. The matter was referred to the committee on fire and prevention with instructions to investigate the consent obtained and to further secure a proper bond from the owner of the property that the building would be removed at the end of the season, with these restrictions the permit to be granted.

The resignation of W. Herschel Miller as a member of the police force was accepted and Thomas Taylor appointed in his stead. The mayor also appointed William H. Johnson and Leslie Giddings as members of the city police. All appointments were confirmed.

The Chief of Police was instructed to collect all licenses on July Fourth and turn the same over to the celebration committee, they to fix the price and with the committee on licenses and privileges to have control.

The matter of the purchase of a boiler at the stone crusher was referred to the street committee.

The liquor bond of The Inn was received and accepted.

The city attorney, on request of the officials interested, defined the duties, powers and responsibilities of the street committee and street commissioner, which were, in substance, the same as previously published.

The rubbish around the bridge was ordered cleaned out.

Bills amounting to a trifle over $2,100 were allowed. The total cost of painting the bridge was stated to be about $232, all considering that a good job had been done at a very reasonable price.

Will Undoubtedly be Winner.

Hon. Geo. G. Covell was in the city Thursday attending the K. P. picnic. Mr. Covell informed us, that from all indications, he will be the choice of the Republican voters, of this district, for the congressional nomination, assurances of support coming to him every day from strong men in the southern counties and the northern counties all standing loyally by him.

Be sure and attend the grand opening of the new "Laf-a-Lot" Electric Theater Saturday night, June 27th. 26-tf

WILL ECLIPSE FORMER EFFORTS

Fourth of July Celebration Committee are Working Hard.

SOMETHING DOING ALL THE TIME

Addresses by Eminent Speakers—Grand Industrial Parade.

Free Vaudeville—Sports—Base Ball Games—Baby Show and Fine Decorations and Music.

Since last week the committee having the arrangements in band for the celebration of July Fourth have been diligently at work, and while all arrangements have not been perfected as yet, enough has already been decided upon so the people can be promised the greatest, grandest celebration in the city's history.

Two games of base ball have been arranged, one in the morning, between the fast East Jordan team, and the re-organized and strengthened Charlevoix team, and in the afternoon between Charlevoix and the Petoskey teams, who have two victories over Charlevoix to their credit.

A grand industrial parade will take place led by a company of mounted men, which will represent the industries and fraternal life of the city.

Sports, for which liberal prizes are offered will take place, both on land and sea.

Speeches by eminent men will be heard on Bridge street, as well as vaudeville, free to everybody.

The city will be in gala attire, liberal prizes being offered for the finest decorated place of business.

Bands of music led by the famous Petoskey Military Band will be heard all day.

Excursions will be run from all points and in addition to these many attractions a splendid opportunity will be given to all to come and see Charlevoix-the-Beautiful when at its best.

Asparagus Omelet.

Cut four or five tender pieces of asparagus into pieces about one inch long. Boil in salted water until tender, about fifteen minutes. Drain and stand in warm place while you make the omelet. Beat four or six eggs slightly, not enough to make them light, but simply to thoroughly mix. After you have beaten slightly add to them four tablespoonfuls of boiling water and a piece of butter the size of a filbert. Now stir in carefully the asparagus. Melt two ounces of butter in a perfectly clean, round frying pan. Pour in the omelet at once, shake and with a knife separate the thickened part of the frying pan, allowing the liquid part to go underneath. It must never stick, but move as you shake the pan from one side to the other. As soon as the eggs begin to set dust with salt and pepper and with a timber knife roll and fold the omelet and turn it out on a heated plate. Send to the table at once.

MORE CONVENTION REPORT

W. C. T. U. Work Among Lumbermen and Miners.

The report on work among the lumbermen and miners was especially interesting. Mrs. Lonisa Peterson, of Stevenson, Mich., superintendent of the department, told how the big, burly fellows of the woods and the grimy underground toilers came to the W. C. T. U. meetings, often came walking miles; how they appreciated the little attentions and how in many striking instances these rough, hardworking men, completely transformed their conduct and methods of life. She showed a comfort bag and what it contained: Bible, tablet, pencil, button bag and needle book, needle and pins, court plaster, bandages, piece of soft white cloth, piece of flannel for sore throat, thread, salve, Francis Willard's cards, pledge cards, temperance leaflets and last, most important of all, a kind motherly letter.

The afternoon session proved highly interesting through the presence of Mrs. Lucy Broad, of London, England, a missionary, and Miss Maggie J. Walz, of Calumet, representative of the upper peninsula. Miss Walz came to this country possessed of her clothes, $7 in cash and a determination to live and help others. That she has succeeded may be inferred from the fact that she is owner of a $40,000 block in Calumet and has invested in copper stocks that pay dividends as regularly as the sun rises. She said to the delegates: "Part of my work, the work I felt I should do, was to get after those Finish girls in the copper country and spur them on to labor and work; to uplift themselves; to help their fellows instead of standing around with folded hands waiting for some man to marry them. This folding of hands and wailing for the man isn't what helps them to become good mothers and we mothers.";

Miss Walz is in favor of equal suffrage and referred briefly to the fact that in Finland, a Russian dependency, 19 woman have sents in parliament.

Miss Lucy Broad appeared in native Korean outer garments, presenting picturesque appearance. She has been a missionary in Korea, Fiji and other places. She told briefly of the Korean women and also showed one of the "comfort bags" or "Housemaids" which the W. C. T. U. women of Japan made for the Japanese and Russian soldiers in the hospitals during the Russo-Japanese war. Each contained a small testament, tooth brush, bottles, needles, thread, brush and comb and one or two other useful articles.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured.

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the Mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give one hundred dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

DOGWOOD CULTURE.

The Garden Varieties Among the Most Valuable Shrubs.

The garden varieties of the dogwood are among the most valuable shrubs in use, being especially adapted for moist and shady places. Some of them have richly colored twigs, which produce a fine color effect in the winter. All are hardy and adapt themselves readily to a variety of soils and climates.

Flowering dogwood (Cornus florida) is very showy in flower and also beautiful in autumn when the leaves change color before falling. The plant is of tree form, rather slow in growth and ordinarily from ten to fifteen feet high. It has branches spreading almost horizontally. The flowers appear early in spring, and in full bloom the shrubs have a striking appearance owing to the whorls of leaves that surround the blossoms. It bears a bright scarlet fruit.

Red osier (Cornus stolonifera) grows freely in marshy ground in Canada and the northern states. Its main stem is prostrate, and from it many shoots grow six to ten feet high. These shoots are green in summer, but scarlet in winter. The flowers are white or cream and are followed by white fruit. A variegated leaved variety can be obtained and in some respects is best, having leaves that in summer are broadly and irregularly margined with yellow and white.

Cornelian cherry is a small tree or large shrub, reaching a height of fifteen feet. Small, bright yellow flowers appear in early spring before the foliage, giving the plant a very striking appearance at that time. There are two variegated forms, which are beautiful.

The Value of Water.

The daily consumption of water should be from four to five pints. The functions of the body are carried on only in the presence of suf by the aid of water. Digestion, assimilation, tissue changes and elimination are dependent on a sufficient supply of water, and any amount less than normal impairs these functions. Without free drinking of water there can be no free removal of objectionable material from the body. With the free use of water the removal will often take care of itself. Drinking cold water increases arterial tension, reduces bodily temperature, increases the action of the intestines, biliary secretion and aids digestion.—Family Herald.

The Cause of Many Sudden Deaths

There is a disease prevailing in this country most dangerous because so deceptive. Many sudden deaths are caused by it—heart disease, pneumonia, heart failure or apoplexy are often the result of kidney disease. If kidney trouble is allowed to advance the kidney-poisoned blood will attack the vital organs or the kidneys themselves break down and waste away cell by cell.

Bladder troubles most always result from a derangement of the kidneys and a cure is obtained quickest by a proper treatment of the kidneys. If you are feeling badly you can make no mistake by taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and sold by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sized bottles. You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful new discovery and a book that tells all about it, both sent free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co. Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper.

Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

CHAPTER XIII—Continued.

"In good time."

"But suppose they don't?" insisted Gibbs nervously. "What then?"

"Why, if they don't, then they won't. What do you suppose?" snapped Horrigan. "What's the matter with you, anyhow? Are you looking for a museum job as the 'human question mark?'"

"Gibbs is naturally nervous," explained Wainwright. "He's not so old at this game as you and I, Horrigan, and we must make allowances."

"Nervous?" grunted the boss. "I should say he is! Just look at that cigar I gave him. He's been chewing it as if it was a sausage. That's no way to treat a fifty cent cigar, man! Here, try another, and see if you can't smoke it instead of eating a free lunch off it. Nothing like a good smoke to steady your nerves. If"—

The antechamber door opened, and Williams hurried in.

"I got Ellis!" he reported. "He's here, and"—with significant emphasis—"he'll vote right!"

"Good!" assented Horrigan. "I thought he'd come to time. Now, for Roberts and the thing's done."

"The gallery in there is jammed," reported Williams, jerking his head toward the aldermanic chamber. "I never saw such a mob in this place before."

"That's what comes of all this newspaper publicity," growled Horrigan. "If it wasn't for the papers the people 'd never make any trouble for us. But they read the news and then they get silly ideas about their 'rights,' and a lot of them come here to see they don't get swindled. Lord! If the papers would only suspend publication for one month, I'd guarantee to put the whole state in my vest pocket. They're always butting in to spoil the organization's honest profits. How are the crowd in the galleries behaving?"

"They're quiet," answered Williams uneasily. "Too quiet. That's what bothers me. They seem to be waiting for the Borough bill to"—

"If they raise any row, rush a motion through to clear the galleries," ordered Horrigan.

"Nothing short of the police could clear away that big crowd."

"Then we'll have the police in to help."

"But," argued Williams, "that would mean a riot, and a lot of people would get hurt. All the newspapers tomorrow would"—

"Never mind that. Go ahead and do as you're told. At the first sign of disapproval from the galleries have the motion passed and turn the police loose. Understand?"

"All right," acquiesced Williams dubiously and withdrew.

Wainwright opened his mouth to protest, but Horrigan was already busy at the telephone.

"Hello!" he called. "I want 900 F—900 F. Yes—yes. Is that the captain?" he went on a moment later. "Then send him to the phone. Tell him Mr. Horrigan— Hello, captain!" after another pause. "Yes, it's Horrigan. At city hall. In the aldermanic chamber there's a mob, and we're likely to need the police to quiet 'em. Yes. No, not 'diet' them, you fool! 'Quiet' them! Yes. Send us a squad at double quick, and let the sergeant report to Williams. Let the boys bring their night sticks, and tell 'em they're to take no back talk and not to be afraid to slug if it comes to that, and I guess it will. Pick out the right sort to send. Yes. Of course I'll back up anything they do. Sure. Rush 'em. Goodby."

"But"— began Wainwright as Horrigan hung up the receiver. The boss cut him short. "I'll let that gallery crowd see it ain't safe to interfere with my work."

"But," protested Wainwright, "surely it will not be necessary to"—

"To break heads? It probably will. Why not?"

"I'd rather use diplomatic tactics."

"Diplomacy's a game I never took the trouble to learn."

"But those people you're about to antagonize control votes"—

"Yes. The people may control the votes, but we count them. See the difference?"

"But doesn't the law permit the public to attend these meetings?"

"Only so long as they behave themselves. If a few of 'em get clubbed they won't be so ready next time to butt in where they aren't wanted. They"—

The tinkle of the telephone bell cut short the boss' public spirited remarks. Horrigan unslung the receiver.

"Hello!" he hailed. "Who's— Oh, Roberts, eh?"

"Is it Roberts?" cried Gibbs excitedly.

"No," snarled Horrigan in ponderous sarcasm. "It's the czar of Russia telephoning to borrow a nickel. I called him 'Roberts' just to flatter him. Go on, Roberts! What's that? Yes, this is Mr. Horrigan. Want to see me; do you? What for? No, there isn't," he went on angrily after a moment's listening. "You and I settled all that. Come and do your share of the— Yes, I tell you it's up to you to make good."

Another pause, during which Gibbs and Wainwright glanced at each other in suspense. Then the boss continued, in a louder voice, over the wire:

"Well, come to my room in the city hall, then, if you've got to see me. But there's no need for it. It's all settled and there's nothing more to be said. I'll be here. Don't keep me waiting. I— What's that? No! I won't come to you! You'll come to me, and you'll come on the double quick! Jump now! If you don't— No, that's all. Hurry up!"

"Wouldn't it be wiser," suggested Gibbs, "to humor the man by going to him, as he suggests?—Then"—

"No, it wouldn't!" retorted Horrigan as he kept the telephone. "If I'd gone on the principle of 'humoring' folks, I'd still be working at eighteen per selling ferry tickets. Take my tip, friend! Never go to a man. Make him come to you. That's business. And it gives you a 90 per cent better chance with him. Now, then," pulling a paper from his pocket, "I told you about the report I had Morris & Cherrington dig out showing up Bennett's old man. Here it is. Like to look it over while we're waiting?"

"Little enough good it seems to have done!" returned Wainwright as the three heads bent over the document. "He's still fighting us, tooth and nail."

"Yes," agreed Horrigan grimly, "but it's a satisfaction to know it isn't only us he's fighting. He's cutting his own throat too."

CHAPTER XIV.

THE first committee room that lay to the right of Hurrigan's office—in the same relation to it as the antechamber to the left—was usually given over to dry official business, and its musty walls must almost have experienced a distinct shock about this time as Dallas Wainwright entered from the corridor behind. She was accompanied by Perry and by Phelan, who, passing through the corridor toward the aldermanic chamber, had collided with the brother and sister at the committee room door.

"Here's a good sight for sore eyes, Miss Wainwright," the alderman was saying with his best air. "But is it fair to ask what brings such a bunch of sunshine into an old political shell like this? I'd as soon think of seeing Horrigan at mass as to find you here."

"I want to attend the aldermen's meeting," exclaimed Dallas. "I have a special reason. So I made Perry bring me. But at the door they told us the gallery was so crowded that we couldn't"—

"Never you mind the gallery, miss," interrupted Phelan. "It isn't meant for the likes of you anyway. You just sit here a few minutes, an' I'll catch an attendant somewhere an' make him hustle up a couple of good chairs for you on the main floor, where you can pipe everything just like you were in your own opera box coppin' off a wad of high C's."

"Thank you so much, alderman," replied Dallas. "I hope we're not putting you to too much trouble."

"No trouble at all. An' even if it was I'd come a-running to meet it. I'm the original trouble eater. Besides, the best in the house is none too good for the lady who was so int'rested in my doings. So long! I'll be right back."

"What a queer chap he is!" mused Perry, as Phelan hastened away on his mission. "If I could take a six weeks' course in slang and hot air from that man I'd be able to sew buttons on the whole English language."

"I don't think you need very much tuition," observed Dallas. "But it was kind of Mr. Phelan to look after us. I like him be"—

"Because he's standing by Bennett so pluckily in this fight?"

"Mr. Bennett is nothing to me."

"No?" asked Perry in innocent amaze. "Then I wasted a lot of good cigarette money rubbing to you about his campaign when you were across the big wash last summer. For a man who was 'nothing' to you you sure took large swads of intelligent interest. Look here, little girl," he went on, less flippantly, "what's the matter? Has anything"—

"No!" she broke in, with a miserable effort at courage. "Nothing's the matter. I'm perfectly happy. Why shouldn't I be? An engaged girl is always"—

"An engaged girl!" he shouted in high glee. "You don't mean to say you and Alwyn"—

"Of course not. I am engaged to Mr. Gibbs."

"Good Lord!" gasped the lad in honest dismay. "If that's meant for a joke, it's the plunkest ever! Did"—

"It isn't a joke, Perry, and it's very rude of you to talk so. I am engaged to Mr. Gibbs, and"—

"But—how—when did the atrocity come off, and"—

"I became engaged to him the night of the illumination ball. I didn't want to tell you yet, because I knew you don't like him. I'm—I'm"—

"You're happy?"

"Certainly I am!" she retorted defiantly. "So happy that I"—

"That you are having a fight to keep from crying this blessed minute!" he finished. "Say, Dallas, it breaks me all up to have you so miserable. I think a whole lot of you. More'n of any one else but Cynthia. And I want to help you out of this measly mixup. Won't you?"—

"There is nothing any one can do," she murmured sadly. "I have chosen my course and I"—

"Cheese it!" whispered Perry in hurried admonition. "Here comes Bennett, and Phelan's with him."

The young mayor came in, talking to the alderman as he came.

"This room's disengaged," he was saying. "I'll write it here and give it to—oh, I beg your pardon," he broke off, recognizing Dallas and Perry. "I didn't know"—

"I've got two good seats for you," announced Phelan. "Right where you can see an' hear the whole shootin' match. An' I guess before the meetin's over it's liable to get as interestin' as a double "Uncle Tom" show in a tent. I'll show you the way as soon as you're ready. There's no rush. Things ain't begun to sizzle up yet."

Bennett had crossed to where Dallas stood irresolute and, under cover of Phelan's talk with Perry, said to her, with a certain unconscious stiffness:

"I fear I was too taken aback by to remember to congratulate you, but please believe me when I say I wish you every happiness in the new life you have chosen."

"Thank you very much," faltered Dallas.

There was an awkward pause; then she said:

"You came in here to write something. I'm afraid we are detaining you. You must be busy with your fight against the Borough bill. You are quite determined to continue it to the end?"

"To the bitter end!" he answered miserably. "Even though that end can hold nothing but bitterness for me."

The set anguish in his face moved Dallas more than she dared confess even to herself.

"I am sorry," she said softly.

"It is the course I have chosen," he answered, with a shrug, "and if it leads to eternal darkness instead of the sunlight I expected I must follow it none the less."

"That is sheer obstinacy," she cried, battling against her own heart's passionate plea. "You have laid out a plan to ruin Mr. Gibbs, to deprive Perry and me of my own fortune, to enrich yourself by selling Borough stock short and then voting the bill so that the stock would collapse. You have done all this, and yet you talk of following your abominable course to the end!"

"Dallas," he said very quietly, "you don't understand."

"Dallas," he said quietly, "you don't understand, and you refused to trust me to explain, so I can say no more. But one day you may learn the cruel mistake you are making."

"Mistake?"

"I don't mean that you are mistaken in choosing Gibbs instead of me, but that you are wrong in your judgment of what I am doing. I hope you will understand some day. It will be too late to change anything then, but at least I shall be set right in your eyes. And that means more to me than you can ever know. Goodby."

He left the room abruptly, and Dallas stared after him, her brain awhirl with conflicting thoughts.

"There's a man in ten million, miss," volunteered Phelan, breaking in on her reverie, "an' from the looks of that brand new dinky, three-k spark on your finger I guess you're wise to the fact."

"I am engaged to Mr. Gibbs," replied Dallas coldly.

"What the"— gasped Phelan, checking himself just in time. "I'm sure sorry for you, miss," he went on, with a sincerity that precluded any offense, "for frien' Gibbs is going to have something so heavy fall on his hands roll by the time we're through with this Borough bill that he'll be able to use his wad for a book mark without crinklin' any of the leaves. Why, he'll"— "Come, Perry," interrupted Dallas. "Shall we go to the meeting now?"

Confused, she turned to the door leading into Horrigan's room instead of that opening on the corridor and found herself face to face with her uncle, the boss and Gibbs.

"I beg your pardon," she began, surprised. "I didn't know"—

"Dallas!" exclaimed Gibbs and Wainwright in the same breath, Horrigan scowled at the interruption as all three men rose to their feet.

"What brings you to a place like this?" asked Wainwright in displeasure.

"Perry and I," indicating her brother, who had followed her into the room, "are going to attend the meeting of the board of aldermen."

"But," protested her uncle disapprovingly, "it is hardly the sort of"—

"My fortune and Perry's and that of the man I am to marry are all bound up in the Borough bill," she answered fearlessly. "I have a right to be present when that bill's fate is decided."

"Good nerve!" applauded Horrigan. "You're a thoroughbred. If there were more women like you"—

"Mr. Horrigan," reported Williams, hurrying in from an antechamber, "the police have come, and"—

REPUBLICAN PLATFORM

In Full Accord With the Progressive Spirit of the Day.

Declares For Tariff Revision—Anti-Injunction and Postal Savings Banks.

The platform adopted by the National Republican Convention is as follows in its main features:

It lands President Roosevelt as the greatest statesman since Washington and Lincoln and declares the party's unfaltering adherence to the policies he has inaugurated and pledges its continuance under a Republican administration.

The platform declares for the principle that, in the development and enjoyment of wealth, there shall be equal opportunity for all.

The platform lauds the party for the country's safe passage through the recent financial disturbance.

On the tariff question it says:

"The Republican party declares unequivocally for a revision of the tariff by a special session of congress, immediately following the inauguration of the next president, and commends the steps already taken to this end. We favor the establishment of maximum and minimum rates to be administered by the president under limitations fixed by law, the maximum to be available to meet discriminations by foreign countries against American goods entering their markets and the minimum to represent the normal measure of protection at home; the aim and purpose of the Republican party being not only to preserve without excessive duties, that security against foreign competition to which American manufacturers, farmers and producers are entitled, but also to maintain the high standard of living of the wage earners of the country and the Philippines, we believe in a free interchange of products with such limitations as to sugar and tobacco as will afford adequate protection to domestic interests."

Here is the currency plank:

"We approve the emergency measures adopted by the government during the recent financial disturbances and especially commend the passage by congress at the last session laws designed to protect the country from a repetition of such stringency. The Republican party is committed to the development of a permanent currency system responding to our greater needs, and the appointment of a national monetary commission by the present congress, which will impartially investigate all proper methods, insures the early realization of this purpose."

The platform favors the establishment of postal savings banks, urges the strengthening of the anti-trust laws, approves the enactment of the railroad rate law and asks that interstate commerce law be amended so that railroads may be allowed to publish traffic agreements, subject to the approval of the interstate commerce commission.

It pledges the party to "lighten the burdens and increase the opportunity for happiness and advancement of all who toil."

The anti-injunction plank reads:

"The Republican party will uphold, at all times, the authority of the courts, state and federal and will ever insist that their powers to enforce their process and to protect life, liberty and property shall be preserved inviolate, we believe however, the rules of procedure in the federal courts with respect to issuance of the writ of injunction should be more accurately defined by statute and that no injunction of temporary restraining order should be issued without notice, except irreparable injury would result from delay, in which case a speedy hearing thereafter should be granted.

The platform pledges the party to condemn all advices that have for their real aim the disfranchisement of the Negro and indorses the administration for the conservatism of natural resources and favors the deep waterways from the lakes to the gulf.

TAFT ON THE FIRST BALLOT

for vice-president is not as familiar as the name of the candidate for president, the following description proves him to be a man who had schooling for the position.

James Schoolcraft Sherman, of Utica, N. Y., was born at Utica Oct. 24, 1855, and received an academic and collegiate education, graduating from Hamilton college in the class of 1878. He was admitted to the bar in 1880 and is a practicing lawyer. He is also president of the Utica Trust & Deposit company and president of the New Hartford Canning company. Mr. Sherman was elected mayor of Utica in 1884 and was a delegate to the Republican national convention of 1892. He has been for years a prominent man in the Republican councils of New York, serving a number of times as chairman of the state conventions, and was chairman of the national Republican congressional committee in the McKinley-Bryan campaign of 1896. He was elected to the fiftieth congress and successively re-elected to all subsequent congresses up to the present (the sixtieth) congress, except the fifty-second. Mr. Sherman is a member of the important committee on rules of the present congress, also a member of the committee on interstate and foreign commerce, and chairman of the committee on Indian affairs.

THEATRICAL

Western shows have proven to be a big financial success of the past season and "A Texas Ranger," which will be seen at the Charlevoix theater Tuesday night, June 30, is no exception to the rule. The scenes are of a most realistic and interesting nature and are sure to create the utmost enthusiasm. A competent cast is engaged to exploit the show and the scenic effects are of the best. Watch for the Cow Boy band at noon.

The Laf-a-Lot Electric Theatre

This new theatre which has been in the process of construction for the past few days, will be opened to the public on Saturday night, June 27th.

The theatre is complete in its every appointment and has all the conveniences and facilities which experience could suggest.

The management assures us that it will be a clean, cool and comfortable place of amusement and a credit to our city in every way.

The ladies of the M. E. church will serve a dinner in the church parlors on July 4. Prices 25c for adults and 15c for children under ten years. 26-t2

ACCIDENT WAS FATAL

James Delaney Died Soon After His Injury Last Week.

Bellaire Independent Gives Particulars of the Accident—Was Very Popular.

From the Bellaire Independent we clip further particulars of the death of James Delany, which occurred Tuesday of last week:

James Delaney, roadmaster of the East Jordan & Southern Railway, was fatally injured June 16, near Hitchcock. His work train was backing a car's length, and Mr. Delaney stepped onto the brake chain to climb onto the lead (the portion to which the draw-bar is attached) when he missed his footing and the slowly moving car passed over his legs at the knee.

He was at once rushed to East Jordan, where surgical attendance was ready for him. Mr. Delaney was conscious until put under the influence of chloroform, but his heart failed and he did not revive from the influence of the anaesthetic.

Mr. Delaney was about 39 years of age. He leaves a wife, a daughter seventeen years of age and a baby son born Saturday night.

Mr. Delaney had been road master of the E. J. & S. for about five years, coming to that road from the Pere Marquette. He was roadmaster of the Petoskey division when the road was the C. & W. M., then going to the Muskegon division before the lengthening of the divisions and consequent reduction in the number of roadmasters which threw the younger men back to the sections. He then had the Traverse City yards. Mr. Delaney was a first-class foreman and manager, and on the Pere Marquette had successfully handled extra gangs of 125 men. He had the reputation of being one of their swiftest men in clearing up a wreck.

Mr. Delaney was a member of the Masonic and Odd Fellow fraternites. The funeral services were in East Jordan June 19.

ASKS FOR AN INJUNCTION

John J. Fagan Seeks to Prevent Erection of New Electric Theater.

The council at its last meeting authorized its committee on fire and prevention to grant a permit to Frank G. Spencer to erect a wooden building on Bridge street to be used as an Electric Theater if he complied with certain requirements.

Mr. Spencer did so, the committee authorized him to go ahead, and he immediately commenced construction of the same. John J. Fagan, through his attorney, Lisle Shanahan, asked for an injunction stopping the building, claiming the same was in violation of the city ordinances and was a menace to the proper safety of property owned by him on Bridge street.

The ordinance, which was passed in 1894, provides that buildings on Bridge street must be constructed of other material than wood. However, by an amendment passed in 1897, the council was given authority to permit the construction of wooden buildings and have exercised that right.

The matter was argued Monday before Judge Mayne, Mr. Shanahan appearing for Mr. Fagan and A. L. Fitch for Mr. Spencer. The judge took the matter under advisement and asked for briefs, which are being heard today.

In the meantime the work on the building is being rushed with the understanding that it will be torn down if its erection is an illegal act.

Long Sentences.

Ruskin, it is said, has written more sentences of inordinate length than any other classic writer of modern English prose. Frederic Harrison some years ago counted the words in a number of typical sentences, finding that in the earlier books it was no uncommon thing for Ruskin to run beyond the page before permitting himself and his readers the relief of a full stop. But in every case the sense is clear as day. Wordsworth's poem on the "Character of the Happy Warrior" is a notable example of sustained connections. Apart from the opening and closing couplets the poem consists of two very long compound sentences almost entirely comprised of adjectival clauses. The longer of the two sentences contains fifty-seven decasyllable lines. This is probably a record in English verse.—Argonaut.

The Retort Courteous.

Street Railway Superintendent—I don't think we can use you any longer. Your cash register doesn't ring often enough. Conductor—I have got rheumatism and can't reach up to the register cord. Superintendent—All right. I think you need a long vacation. Conductor—I am much obliged to you for allowing me to run the car as long as you have. Superintendent—Don't mention it. I'm much obliged to you for bringing the car back.—Judge.

A few days ago young Ford, of Big Rapids stole almost eight hundred dollars from the post office there on which to get married and was thrown in jail and it was remarked that the marriage was indefinitly postponed, but a revision of that remark is now in order, for Ford was Wednesday married to the girl. Whatever else may be said about that girl, she is a sticker.

Frank L. Shuter, of Traverse City, was badly burned at Honor while repairing a gasoline lighting plant in the millinery store of Catherine Little. A gasoline tank exploded, and he was covered with oil, which caught fire. He rushed into the street, and before the flames were extinguished, was badly burned about the face, hands and feet. His recovery is doubtful. The millinery store was destroyed by fire.

Shuter is a candidate for sheriff of Grand Traverse county, and is widely known.

Forest fires are now raging in the upper part of the lower peninsula the village of Case near Ouaway and Rondo near Wolverine being wiped out Saturday night. Kentucky was also wiped out and Fouch in Leelanau county.

"The best method of preventing forest fires is to enforce the law," says Charles W. Garfield, president of the state forestry commission.

"The state forest fire and game warden has full authority in the matter and I should like to see him exercise the same interest that he has shown in the prosecution of violators of the game law. But I suppose he has not had experience with forest fires, and that he has been busy learning the provisions of the game law and is not familiar with the quick formation of a constabulary to check incipient blazes.

"I should like to see the establishment of a patrol system such as we have on the forestry reserve, where one man patrols two townships and has authority to call for help when needed. A patrol to warn campers and hunters against throwing away burning cigar stubs or leaving camp fires burning in the woods would soon put an end to fires started through carlessness. Fires started by locomotives form a problem for the state and the railroad companies to consider, the use of spark arresters that will be economical and effective. The report of the commission of nine, now ready, will recommend legislation which will effectively deal with forest fires."

Friday morning, June 5, the residence of Amos Durocher near Kewadin burned to the ground with most of its contents. One of Mr. Durocher's daughters had attended the commencement exercises at Elk Rapids and did not reach home until nearly midnight, and when she retired took a lamp with her to her room in the upper part of the house. When she retired she left it turned down on a table. About an hour later one of the three children sleeping in the upper part of the house was awakened and found the bed afire. She awakened the others and called her father, who was sleeping in the lower part of the house. Mr. Durocher got the children down in safety and then made a second trip to the upper rooms but was compelled to make his escape on his hands and knees. Mrs. Durocher was overcome by fright, but Mr. Durocher and the children, assisted by a few neighbors, saved some of the furniture and clothing from the lower rooms. The building and contents were insured in the Farmers' Mutual, which will partially cover the loss. The family are living for the present in the old school house.

Some of the doctors in Cadillac have been so bothered with people wanting them to write out prescriptions for whisky and intoxicating liquors that one of them has had signs posted in his office to the effect that he will not write out a prescription for whisky for anyone. "I simply had to do something to stop the people bothering me with writing out prescriptions for whisky. They offer all kinds of excuses. The one most generally offered is that the wife is sick and needs whisky. Even women come to my office for a prescription and some that I know are not sick. But I am through with this kind of business."

Woman's Home Companion for July.

The current issue of Woman's Home Companion has a Fourth of July cover by James Montgomery Flagg, which is attracting a deal of attention. This is a Fourth of July number, with many bright stories not at all too heavy for mid-summer reading. "The Runaway," "Dear Amaryllis," "The Garden of Forgotten Kings," "Sowing Seeds in Danney," give some idea of their titles and the stories themselves are just as charming as the titles indicate.

Edward Everett Hale makes a strong plea for Americans to travel in America and visit at least a few of the wonderful places that exist in our own country, which most of us have never seen. Mrs. Sangster writes on the American woman and the simple life, asserting that they are getting much too far apart. "People who stop," told by one behind the counter, will make every woman, who reads it, much more considerate of the poor shop girl from whom she buys her laces and silks and ribbons.

The so-called "Emmanual Movement," which was started in Emmanual church, Boston, has been so successful that it is being taken up by churches in other cities.

The Rev. Dr. Robert MacDonald, a Brooklyn pastor who has adopted the Emmanual Method of treating at his church nervous and other kindred diseases, tells just what the Emmanual Movement is and what it hopes to accomplish.

Mrs. Anna Steese Richardson explains what a "welfare secretary" does in a big department store, showing how much help the right sort of woman can be to the hundreds of girl clerks who labor day in and day out behind the counter.

The mid-summer fashions are described and illustrated by Grace Margaret Gould, and Fannie Merritt Farmer, America's greatest teacher of cookery, tells how to get satisfactory meals when far away from market. There are other good things, too, that will interest many women of many tastes.

He Got What He Needed.

"Nine years ago it looked as if my time had come," says Mr. C. Farthing of Mill Creek, Indian Territory. "I was so run down that life hung on a very slender thread. It was then my druggist recommended Electric Bitters. I bought a bottle and I got what I needed—streegth. I had one foot in the grave, but Electric Bitters put it back on the turf again, and I've been well ever since." Sold under guarantee at F. G. Hines & Co.'s drug store. 50c.

Steer Feeding.

Here is some Canadian experience in feeding for beef:

Experiments in feeding for a long period compared as to profits with feeding for a short period have shown that if roughage be relatively more plentiful and cheaper than meal then the "long feed" is the more profitable, but where meal is plentiful and roughage scarce then the "short feed" is likely to be more profitable.

Experiments in feeding lots of an inferior class of steer in comparison with lots of a medium class of steer and lots of a superior class of steer go to show that the superior class give greater returns for feed fed, make greater gains in a given time and sell for a higher price than do the inferior class.

Feeding steers twice a day rather than more frequently has been found advisable. Feeding a succulent ration has been found to be cheaper and more wholesome than an all dry feed ration. Mixing roughage and meal seems to give better results than feeding them separately. It is advisable to feed some long hay after each chopped feed portion.

A Nail Puller.

Postmortem examination of a mare that died in Jefferson county, N. Y., disclosed a bunch of threepenny nails the size of an egg and a scrap of zinc two and one-half inches long in the intestines, which were lacerated. It was concluded that she pulled these in the stable of a former owner, says Country Gentleman.

The most comfort some people get is in worrying over the extravagance of their neighbors.—Youngstown Telegram.

[The matter under this head is printed at the request and expense of local Socialists and does not necessarily indicate the opinions of the editor or the policy of the paper.]

COMPETITION IS WAR.

Socialism Offers Peace and Friendship Instead of Conflict.

Our present system of society is based on a state of perpetual war. Do any of you think this is as it should be? I know that you have often been told that the competition which is at present the rule of trade is a good thing and that it stimulates the progress of the race, but the people who tell you this should call competition by its shorter name of war if they wish to be honest, and you would then be free to consider whether or no war stimulates progress otherwise than as a mad bull chasing you over your own garden may do. War or competition, whichever you may please to call it, means at the best pursuing your own advantage at the cost of some one else's loss, and in the process of it you must not be sparing of destruction even of your own possessions or you will certainly come by the worst in the struggle.

You understand that perfectly as to the kind of war in which people go out to kill and be killed—that sort of war in which ships are commissioned, for instance, "to sink, burn and destroy"—but it appears that you are not so conscious of the waste of goods when you are only carrying on that other war called competition. Observe, however, that the waste is there all the same.

Well, surely Socialism can offer you something in the place of all that. It can. It can offer you peace and friendship instead of war. We might live utterly without national rivalries, acknowledging that, while it is best for those who feel that they naturally form a community under one name to govern themselves, yet that no community in civilization should feel that it had interests opposed to eey other, their economical conditioe being at any rate similar; so that any citizen of one community could fail to work and live without disturbance of his life when he was in a foreign country and would fit into his place quite naturally; so that all civilized nations would form one great community, agreeing together as to the kind and amount of production and distribution needed, working at such and such productioo where it could be best produced and avoiding waste by all means. Please to think of the amount of waste which they would avoid; how much such a change would add to the wealth of the world!—William Morris, British Manufacturer and Socialist.

Right Relations Required.

The Socialist party proposes that there shall be one capitalist in the country, and that that capitalist shall be the collective people. Then there shall be employment for every man in the republic; then there will be a reduction in the hours of labor proportionate with the improvements in the mechanic arts. This will settle the hour-day question.

Today there are millions of people in the country who are without work and other millions who are working from ten to fourteen hours a dey for a bare subsistence.

Professor Bertzka of the University of Vienna estimates that the working population of Austria over sixteen and under fifty years of age could under Socialism produce the necessaries and comforts of the kingdom at the rate of 1 hour 20 minutes work per day. Our machinery is idle seven months in the year, and one-third of our working population is looking for work. Fifty years ago these things were unheard of. Then tools were simple, and every man could own the means of production. Not so with the gigantic machinery of present day production. But these are machines that are social in their operation. They should be socially owned if we would restore right relations.

City Corruption.

Denver is pointed out as a city most shamelessly corrupt so far as the conduct of elections by the capitalist parties is concerned. It is estimated that in the election of 1903 more fraudulent votes were cast than were ever cast anywhere else in the United States. The vested interests were imperiled and were desperate. They bought the election. A reform charter was defeated with the money, the vote brokers plying their trade almost openly. In 1904 the interests picked the Democratic candidate for governor as likely to be easiest handled and bought of the vote brokers between 7,000 and 8,000 votes, which elected their man. The reformers threatened wide exposures, and the interests got the gambling trust of that city to pay over $11,000 to the reformers, and the exposure threats ceased. The crookedness in Denver consists in stuffing enough fraudulent ballots into the boxes to equal the fraudulent names that have been registered.—Cosmopolitan Magazine.

At Least One Reason.

Every single man has one reason for being a Socialist. If one has a wife, he has two reasons. If a child, three reasons. As the family grows the reasons multiply. These reasons are that Socialism insures the best for all. The single individual or the family are only units in the larger family that we call society. The larger the family the more complex the relations. This line of thought leads finally to the largest family. That is the whole race. The best way to get the best for each is to get the best for all. None should be left out. Socialism is working under the impulse of that idea for the universal good.—Common Sense.

The New Mayor

Based on G. H. Broadhurst's Successful Play

The Man of The Hour

By ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE.

Copyright, 1907, by George H. Broadhurst.

"All right," answered the boss. "Give the sergeant his orders."

"I—I hardly like the responsibility," muttered Williams, "and"—

"But you'll take it. I'm backing you. By the way, get seats for Miss Wainwright and her brother. Get them close to the anteroom door, so if there's a row she can come back here. If there are no vacant seats there, clear a couple of people out and make place for"—

"But we have seats," protested Dallas as Williams sped on his errand. "Alderman Phelan"—

"Alderman Phelan will have trouble finding a seat in this city when I'm done with him," snarled Horrigan. "Better take the seats I offer, Miss Wainwright. They're safer."

"But," protested Wainwright, "if there's to be any danger she mustn't be there. I can't have"—

"I will be on hand to help her if there is," Gibbs answered him.

"H'm!" grunted Horrigan in somewhat uncomplimentary doubt.

"I will, too!" spoke up Perry.

Horrigan nodded approval.

"You'll be all right then," said he. "And now"—

"You spoke of the police being in the aldermanic chamber," said Dallas. "What for?"

"To check any trouble the gallery may make," answered Horrigan. "This man Bennett's stirred the people up with a lot of his anarchistic reform ideas till they're crazy. Some one's liable to get a broken skull, and then Bennett will have himself to thank. Maybe when the police have hammered a little sense into folks' heads with their nightsticks, the victims will begin to understand just what sort of a man Alwyn Bennett is. Remember now, Gibbs, and you, too, young Wainwright, if there's any sign of a row bring Miss Wainwright back here at once."

"All right," agreed Perry, a little rueful at the prospect of missing a free fight. "Let's go in there now. I've never been to an aldermen's meeting before, but I ran up against a car strike riot once, so I guess I'm on to most of the subtle rules of elegance that govern such shows. Come on, people, if you're coming."

"Your niece is a thoroughbred," repeated Horrigan, with rare approbation, as the anteroom door closed behind Dallas and her two escorts. "So she's to marry Gibbs, is she? I'm sorry for them both."

"Why?" asked Wainwright sharply.

"Because it won't take her a year to find out that he's a yellow cur. And when she does she'll either kick him out or lead him around on a chain. Now, the fellow a girl of that sort ought to have married is Bennett. He's an obstinate fool, but he's a man. I thought you said once he was stuck on her."

"He was. He still is."

"And she took Gibbs instead?" cried Horrigan, a world of incredulity in his rough voice. "Women are a queer lot! Why'd she shake Bennett, if it is a fair question?"

"I let her see Gibbs was a heroic martyr," said Wainwright, with quiet significance, "and that Bennett was"—

"Oh, I see!" chuckled Horrigan. "Still, there might be something made out of Bennett's love for her even yet."

"What do you mean?

"I'm not quite sure. I'll have to think it over."

"Roberts has come!" exclaimed Williams, entering from the corridor. "He's asking for you. Shall I bring him in here?"

"Yes," replied Horrigan. "By the way," he added to Wainwright as Williams departed, "I'll have to ask you to clear out for a few minutes. I've got to see Roberts alone. Now for the tussle that'll decide the whole fight!"

CHAPTER XV.

WILLIAMS entered with Roberts in tow. The latter wore a haggard, troubled look, and his natural nervousness had visibly deepened, so much so that he had not even noted Phelan's appearance in the corridor as he passed into Horrigan's private room.

"Good evening, alderman," said Horrigan civilly.

"Good evening, sir," answered Roberts palpably ill at ease.

"I understand there's a full meeting today. Even Ellis came back from the south to be here. You're the only man missing."

"I couldn't get here sooner. I"—

"I see. That's all, Williams. You needn't wait. Roberts and I want a little talk before he goes in. Now, then," went on the boss, with a complete change of manner as Williams left the room, "what's the matter with you?"

"I—I can't"—

"Can't what? Speak out, man! Don't stand there and mumble at me!"

"I can't vote for the Borough franchise bill."

"Can't, hey?" roared Horrigan. "Why not?"

"Because—because"— faltered Roberts; then, with a rush of hysterical emotion that blotted out his fear, he cried:

"Have you heard what that man Bennett has done? He organized a voters' committee in my ward and sent them to ask me at my own house what I was going to do about that bill. They had been stirred up by Bennett till they looked on me as a crook and on the bill as a personal robbery. They told me if I voted for it they'd know I was a dirty thief and grafter and that they'd kick me out of the ward."

"Well, well!" rumbled Horrigan soothingly, as though trying to calm a fractious drunkard. "What do you care? When they've forgotten all about the bill you'll still have the dough, won't you? Folks won't ask 'How'd he get it?' All they'll care to know is 'Has he got it?'"

"That isn't all!" Roberts blundered on, scarcely heeding the interruption. "Bennett's next step was to organize a committee of voters' wives, and they came to see my wife this morning when I was out and told her they'd heard I was going to sell myself and vote for a dishonest bill. My wife—my wife thinks I'm the squarest, noblest man on earth. Oh, you needn't sneer! Her trust means everything to me. She told the women I wouldn't stoop to any deed that wasn't honest, and they answered: 'Our husbands believe Mr. Roberts is a crook. If he is really honest he'll vote against that bill, as he did before.' Then on my way home this noon I met my little boy. He was crying. I asked him what the matter was. He said that some boys had told him I was a grafter. I tell you," his voice rising almost to a scream, "Bennett's made my life a hell. I'm no crook. I'm honest and"—

"Sure you're honest!" Horrigan exclaimed, as though to a cross child. "Honest as the day! That's why you're voting for our bill. Because the crooked clauses have been cut out of it, and in its present form it's a benefit to the city."

"That isn't why I promised to vote for it," contradicted Roberts, with a despairing dash of courage. "It was because I—because"—

An Asset.

The financial prospects of Washington Lafayette Johnson were decidedly clouded, but he still preserved a sanguine spirit, which his friends did not always appreciate.

"I'd like to borrow jes' a little money ob you," said Mr. Johnson confidentially to a friend. "I—I wouldn't ax you fo' it, but I sin' got a slugle cent left in de worl'."

"What secu'ity can you gib me?" asked his friend without any enthusiasm.

"Why, I gib you my note ob hand!" said Mr. Johnson looked pained and amazed at such a question. "I reckon you don' know what a good, clear handwriting I got in 'de ebening school."—Youth's Companion.

Tempting Fate.

"Dost hear that?" asked the fair maid mentioned by the Atlanta Journal. There was a sound of a heavy step.

"'Tis father. Fly, sweetheart, fly!"

"You mean flee," corrected the lover.

"As you like," said the maid, "but this is no time for entomological distinctions."

HANDLING HOGS.

Useful Article That Is Handy In the Hog Lot.

A number of breeders use a crate for handling hogs and find it a very useful article. It should be made as light and strong as possible, 2 by 2 inch posts and 1 by 4 inch white pine strips being used. The most useful size is fifty-four inches long, thirty inches high and sixteen inches wide, inside measurements. The bottom is made one inch smaller each way than the inside measurement in order to allow the crate to slip down over it. Two pieces of half inch gas pipe twenty-four inches long can then be slipped through the holes in the lower side pieces, which will hold the bottom up and also serve as handles when lifting it.

After the crate is finished keep it in the yard where the hogs will get used to it, and when you want to pick out a hog place the bottom of the crate where it will be handy; then pick up the crate, with the right hand holding the upper crosspiece and the left hand holding a side slat near the opposite end, and after you have the "swing of it" approach the hog from the rear and a little to the left side and pitch the crate lengthwise over him, letting go with the left hand, that the front end may strike the earth first.

Hold fast with the right hand and pull the crate backward, and you will find that you can in this manner take the hog anywhere you choose. Do not speak, and keep out of sight of the hog as much as possible. Do not try to hold the crate still or to back him on the bottom of the crate until he quiets down a little. You will be surprised to see how quiet he will become after he has walked backward a few rods. To put him into another crate or through a door, says the Twentieth Century Farmer, raise the front end a little, and he will go in like a shot.

Sir Frank Lockwood's Wit.

Sir Frank Lockwood once began cross examining a lady with a few irrelevant questions to put her off her guard. This would have been very well if, like most witnesses, she had meekly submitted, but she upset everything with "Don't you think that is a very silly question, Sir Frank?"

"Upon my word," he replied, "I think it is."

In a breach of promise case he once rallied the jury with: "You, gentlemen, cannot seriously think that this charming lady's matrimonial prospects are forever blighted. Surely not one of you could be ungallant enough if single to be averse to the acquaintance of so attractive a lady. I myself am no longer available, but you!"

Taking Chances.

"Mister, ain't you afeered to sick yer dorg onto me?"

"Nix. Why should I be?"

"How do you know I ain't representin' some magazine, investigatin' de standin' of dis community as regards horspitiality to strangers? Why, man, I might go an' write an article on dis affair dat would hold back yer miserable hamlet fer 200 years!"—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Galileo discovered the use of the pendulum. In 1639 he published a work dealing with the use of the pendulum in clocks.

Printing Papers

This office wishes to call the attention of users of Printed Matter to the fine line of stationery, book and poster papers, cardboards and covers, which we carry in stock. You have all, no doubt, experienced the annoyance of having to accept a paper stock for your printed matter that was not what you wanted, but—"it will do," or else submit to an exasperating delay while a special order for stock was being filled in Chicago. Now, these delays are just as annoying to the printer as to his customer; and besides, they are expensive for him; therefore, we aim to have in stock a line of papers from which any ordinary demand may be filled and with the "just right" kind.

There are very few country offices anywhere that carry the assortment we do; and none in this part of Michigan.

The next time you want Printed Matter—the good red corpuscles of any business—call on the COURIER, and be sure that an otherwise good piece of work will not be robbed of a large part of its effectiveness through being printed upon an inappropriate paper stock, through lack of assortment from which to select.

Prosperity Persuaders Properly Promulgated Proclaim Progress

A part of our business which none but our patrons know, is the assistance we give by suggestion and demonstration, in the preparation of the matter used in booming the business of our customers.

If you are too busy to prepare your copy just as you would like it, let us help you out by writing it according to your ideas and then show you how it will look when properly printed on an appropriate stock; and you will

Three Great Sales of Pianos

A list that is the biggest that has ever been compiled, comprising fine pianos, has just been issued by Lyon & Healy. This list contains the names of the hundreds of fine, new pianos just bought by Lyon & Healy from the Thompson Music Co., the Healy Music Co. and the big F. G. Thearle Piano Co. when those concerns retired from the retail business. Moreover the particulars of each instrument are given, so that the buyer may judge for himself whether or not the piano is a bargain.

The figures quoted are phenomenally low. Lyon & Healy are making a determined effort to close out all these great stocks of instruments within the next 30 days, and the prices have been reduced with this object in view.

Send for a copy of this list. If you do not wish to pay all cash for a piano, you can arrange for monthly payments. Address Lyon & Healy, 77 Adams street, Chicago.

Lyon & Healy exhibit the largest and most varied stock of pianos in the world—over 1,000 instruments.

GRAND CIRCUIT RACES

Will be Held on State Fair Grounds This Year.

More than one hundred trotters and pacers are taking their daily work at the Detroit fair grounds, where the annual opening of the grand circuit will be held July 27 to 31. Everybody who comes is pleased with the work on the track, the new surface making it one of the best in the country, and assuring plenty of speed when the Blue Ribbon events are held.

Scott McLane, of Coldwater, one of the best trainers in the business has four head, including Octoo, 2:03¼ (trotting) and Auto, 2:07¼ (pacing). A few days ago Octoo stepped the stretch quarter in 30¾ seconds, or at a rate of a mile in 2:03, which shows the excellence of the new soil.

Applications for stable room have been received from all over the country and it is expected that by July 1 there will be 200 high class harness performers at the grounds.

Reports from Peoria, Columbus, Terre Haute, Memphis and other places, where horses are being trained for the Detroit stake events, are to the effect that they are coming along finely and showing plenty of speed. The field in the M. & M. stake promises to be the largest in years and in it will be half a dozen evenly matched trotters that have shown ability to beat 2:10. The absence of a speed marvel like Sonoma Girl lends to the attractiveness of the race, which this year should be one of the best contests on the American turf.

LEGAL NOTICES

Mortgage Foreclosure.

Whereas, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage dated the tenth day of April, 1903, executed by Adolph Kirchner and Mary A. Kirchner, his wife to Citizens' State Bank of Whitewater, Wisconsin, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Charlevoix, Michigan, on liber thirty-seven of Mortgages on pages forty and forty-one, on the 27th day of April, 1903 at nine o'clock in the forenoon. And whereas, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of one thousand four hundred thirteen and sixty-five one-hundredths (1,413.65) dollars, the principal, interest, taxes and insurance, and the further sum of fifty dollars as an attorney fee, stipulated for in said mortgage, and which is the whole amount claimed to be due on said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted either in law or equity, to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the east front door of the court house in said county of Charlevoix, on the twenty-third day of July next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon on that day; which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to-wit: The south half (S½) of the north-east quarter (NE¼) of section eighteen (18) town thirty-two (32) north, of range six (6) west; and the north-west quarter (NW¼) of the south-east quarter (SE¼) of section eighteen (18) town thirty-two (32) north, of range six (6) west.

NINTH ANNUAL COUNTY CONVENTION

Held at East Jordan Tuesday and Wednesday of Last Week.

OF THE COUNTY S. S. ASSOCIATION

Attendance Was Good and Meetings Very Interesting.

New Officers Elected—Place of Next Meeting Left to Executive Committee—S. C. Smith Elected Delegate.

The ninth annual convention of the Charlevoix County Sunday School Association held at the Episcopal church, East Jordan, Tuesday and Wednesday of last week was well attended, over one hundred being present at the opening session.

In the absence of the county president, S. C. Smith, of Boyne City, the meeting was called to order by Mrs. M. E. Hraton, county secretary, and Rev. A. D. Grigsby, of East Jordan, was chosen chairman, and gave the address of welcome, which was responded to by Rev. Frank Blair, of Boyne City.

Rev. George A. Weaver, of Petoskey, representative of the American Sunday School Union, had the first place on the program and discussed, "Our County Sunday School Work, Its Conditions and Needs."

Miss Agnes Rodger, of Charlevoix led in the discussion, "Home Department Work," followed by Mrs. John Burns, of Charlevoix, on "Primary Work" and Mrs. A. E. Grigsby, of East Jordan, on "Temperance."

On Tuesday evening Rev. H. A. Putnam delivered an address on "The Commissioned Life" and Wednesday morning on "The Book We Read. How to Study It," followed by Rev. James G. Young on "How to Bring Members of the Congregation to Sunday School." An interesting paper by S. C. Smith was read and after discussions of other subjects, the business was taken up. Throughout the sessions music was given by the convention and different persons.

The following officers were elected at the business session:

President, M. H. Robertson, Supt. East Jordan Methodist Sunday school; first vice president, A. F. Bridge, Supt. Charlevoix Congregational school; second vice president, E. A. Ruegsegger, chorister of Boyne City Presbyterian school; secretary and treasurer, Mrs. M. E. Heston, East Jordan Presbyterian school.

Superintendents of departments: Home department, Miss Agnes Rodger, of Charlevoix; missionary department, Mrs. W. H. White, of Boyne City; organized adult bible class, A. B. Clark, of Barnard; primary, Mrs. E. R. Sly, Bay Shore; temperance, Mrs. P. D. Campbell, Charlevoix.

It was voted to hold a convention some time next spring, the place to be selected by the executive board.

S. C. Smith, of Boyne City, was elected delegate to the state convention at Detroit in November. The alternate was left to be appointed by the executive board.

WILLINSON-HESSE

Charlevoix Boy Happily Married Wednesday, June Twenty-fourth.

A pretty wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Murray W. Hesse, of Napoleon, on Wednesday, June 24, at 4:30 p. m., when their daughter, Harriet Louise, was united in marriage to James Byron Wilkinson of Charlevoix, Mich. At the appointed hour Dr. Allen Wilkinson of Charlevoix, brother of the groom, sang "Thy Sentinel Am I." To the strains of Lohengrin's Bridal Chorus, played by Miss Grace Warner of Doster, the bride descended the stairs, preceded by the ring bearer, Miss Hildegard Wilkinson, a niece of the groom, the brides-maid, Miss Inez Fay of Jackson, and the maid of honor, Miss Nina Andrews of Williamstown. The bride was attended by her father to her place beside the groom under a beautiful arch of ferns and daisies. The groom was attended by his brother, Charles Wilkinson of Charlevoix. The impressive Episcopal marriage service was performed by Rev. C. M. Brodie of Delaware, Ohio, in the presence of about eighty guests.

The bride and groom received the congratulations and best wishes of their many friends and after the wedding supper left on the evening train for Cleveland, Ohio, where they will make their home.—Jackson Patriot.

ACCIDENTS WERE MANY

Secretary Shumway, of State Board of Health Gives Warning

Law in Regard to Sale of Toy Pistols in State of Michigan.

Secretary Shumway, of the state board of health, has issued the following warning in regard to the selling and use of fireworks the coming holiday:

"While celebrating the glorious Fourth of July and recounting the deeds of our illustrious dead we should think of protecting the living from unnecessary suffering and death."

Last year there were seven or more deaths in Michigan traceable to fire-works. In the state fifty-one accidents were reported to the state board of health as follows:

Firecrackers	22
Cannon	11
Revolvers and toy pistols	7
Powder	6
Blank cartridges	1
Dynamite caps	4
Torpedoes	1
Roman candles	3
Sky rockets	1
Total	51

For the benefit of those who do not know that a state law exists prohibiting the sale of toy pistols to children under 13 years of age we quote the act.

An act to prevent the sale and use of toy pistols.

Section 1. That no person shall sell, give, or furnish to any child under the age of thirteen years, any cartridge of any form or material, or any pistol, gun, or other mechanical contrivance, specially arranged or designated for the explosion of the same.

Sec. 2. Any person, violating any of the provisions of the foregoing section, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, be punished by a line of not less than ten dollars, nor more than fifty dollars, and costs of prosecution, or imprisonment in the county jail not less than ten days nor more than ninety days, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

Sec. 3. It shall be unlawful for any person under the age of thirteen years, to have in possession, or use any of the articles named in section one of this act.

Mammoth Strawberries.

The COURIER was made glad Saturday by the receipt of a quart of strawberries, twenty-eight of which filled the box.

They were of the Manchester variety and were grown by J. T. Oldham on Lake View farm Marion township, and if they are a sample of what Marion can produce we wish we had a chunk of Marion land.

HAD NARROW ESCAPE

Two Men Nearly Drowned in Pine Lake Last Week.

By Capsizing of Sailboat—Rescued by Telephone Lineman.

What came near being a fatal accident to three young men of Boyne City occurred Tuesday afternoon near Horton's Bay. Louis Morehouse, his brother "Useless" and Elmer Nesson were on Pine Lake in a small sailboat. It appears that a sudden puff of wind came up and before they could properly pay out the rope for the big sail to right the boat it capsized and the three men were thrown suddenly in the water. They drifted around helplessly, clinging to the overturned boat, until finally they struck a sand bar and the boat became fastened and their feeble efforts could not loosen its hold.

Tony Joslyn and W. G. Torrey, two lineman, employed by the Michigan State Telephone Co., who were searching for trouble after Monday's storm in that vicinity, discovered their plight. The men first thought it was a big log, but the signals of distress finally attracted their attention, and Joslyn fastened one end of a coil wire to his body and swam out to the helpless men. He fastened the end of the wire to the upturned craft, swam back to shore, and with the aid of his companion pulled the boat with the three men clinging to it into shallow water. On account of being in the water so long they were utterly exhausted and had it not been for the timely aid of the two linemen undoubtedly would have gone to a watery grave.—Boyne Citizen.

BUSINESS CHANGE

S. M. Rose & Son the Designation of New Diving Firm.

Mayor S. M. Rose has taken his son Mason H. Rose into partnership in his diving business. Captain Rose being on duty with the state patrol steamer Chase S. Osborn, Mason will attend to the bulk of the diving work employing an assistant to work with him, and only calling on his father when necessary.

Captain Rose has acquired an enviable reputation in this line of work and has a fine business, being constantly called upon for jobs of this nature from far and near.

Mason Rose graduated from the Charlevoix high school last year and has since been working with his father and has gained much valuable experience under this tutelage.

The firm will make specialties of laying and calking pipes, calking vessels, wrecking and searching and dynamite blasting.

Both father and son have many friends in Charlevoix who wish the new firm success.

A GREAT ORGANIZATION

F. A. Butler Returns From M. W. A. Meeting—Items of Interest.

F. A. Butler and family returned home last Wednesday. Mr. Butler has been attending the head camp M. W. A. at Peoria, Ill., and Mrs. Butler visiting at Chicago. Mr. Butler met his mother from Lansing and his sister from Huron, South Dakota, at Chicago and they enjoyed a family reunion at the home of his brother.

The meeting of the head camp brought before the people the vastness of the Woodman organization, the clerk reporting 1,308,000 members in good standing June 1, 1908. The parade, the big event of the meeting, had 6,000 in line. A per capita tax of 20 cents per member was fixed to erect a sanitarium in Colorado. All the old officers were re-elected, the board of auditors being increased to seven. Next meeting will be held at Butfalo.

Next Time at Boyne Falls.

Wednesday night, of last week, was Maccabee night in Charlevoix, the Cummings bringing over a large excursion from Boyne City, accompanied by the band.

Two candidates were initiated by the Boyne City team. The next meeting will be at Boyne Falls the last Thursday in July, when all the tents in the county will gather for another good time.

WAS LAUNCHED SATURDAY

At Petoskey The New Boat Commanded by Mayor Rose

The Chase S. Osborne Will go Into Commission After Inspection.

At exactly 8:25 Saturday morning, Miss Elizabeth White, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. N. White, broke over the bows of the new state fish department patrol boat, a bottle of champagne, saying "I christen thee Chase S. Osborn." The supporting blocks were knocked away, and with a heave from the tug, the ship started down the ways. With an easy gliding motion and without a hitch to mar the progress of proceedings, the momentum increased to quite a rate of speed when the stern first splashed into the water. A little further and the craft was clear of the ways, riding the light seas as lightly and gracefully as could be wished for.

On board the "Chase S. Osborn" was the sponser, Miss White, Commodore A. L. Hamill, General State Deputy J. B. Eddy, of the Soo, Capt. Rose and the crew of the boat and a few guests. As the boat lay clear of the ways Commodore Hamill received a number of congratulations from different ones on the graceful appearance of the craft. The general sentiment of persons interested and of the crowd present was that the new craft was a beauty, while those who had had anything to do with the building had the added impression of her ability for service.

C. S. Pierce, of Lansing, state game and fish warden, came down from a trip north yesterday afternoon, intending to go south last eveoing, but waited over to witness the launching. He expressed himself, as did Mr. Hamill, Chief Deputy Smith of this city, Capt. Rose and others, as being entirely satisfied with the boat and the launching.

The boat will be put into commission immediately after inspection.

The boilers and engines, with all the main equipment, is all ready installed, so that the craft could start in the patrol service immediately after inspection if necessary.

The crew will be: Captain, S. M. Rose of Charlevoix; engineer, George Tager, Petoskey; fireman Harry Smith; and cook, W. Gilmore, East Tawas.

CAPTURE OF ALLEGED PIRATE

Tuscarora Has Exciting Chase After Yacht Wanderer.

John Seavy the Owner Arrested Near Frankfort Charged With Piracy.

Chicago dispatches of June 29 tells the following story:

After a thrilling race on Lake Michigan between the yacht Wanderer and the United States revenue cutter Tuscarora, in which the yacht was finally brought to a standstill by a cannon ball shot across her bow, John Seavy, the owner of the yacht and an alleged lake pirate was captured and brought to Chicago today.

The warrant for Seavy's arrest was secured by Capt. McCormick from United States Commissioner Foote on June 17. McCormick, who is captain and owner of the lumber schooner Nellie Johnson, alleges that while he was ashore at Montague, Mich., on May 11, Seavy with two other men boarded his schooner and sailed out of port. The schooner he declares had a load of lumber aboard which they sold.

The warrant was given to Deputy Marshal Currier to serve, and with the aid of the revenue cutter Tuscarora he started on a search for the men. He visited Michigan City, South Haven and Frankfort, Mich., and at the latter place he found the schooner waterlogged and abandoned with a load of lumber on board. Here it was learned that Seavy had left port in his own yacht the Wanderer, some time before.

The revenue cutter set out in pursuit and overtook the yacht some miles north of Frankfort, sailing north. It took a shot from the goverment boat to bring the yacht up, after which Seavy was captured and put in irons and brought to Chicago. His two confederates were not found and it is believed that they have escaped.

DEATH OF LOUISE GENETT

Well Known Norwood Resident Dies After Long Illness.

Louise Genett, daughter of Maxim and Rosa Genett, was born in Norwood in 1855, being thirty-three years of age at the time of her death, which occurred Wednesday, June 24. Miss Gennett had been a sufferer for a number of years, being confined to her bed since last December.

She was a member of Norwood Grange No. 1291 in which she held the office of worthy lecturer. She was also a member of Charlevoix County Pomona and Lady Maccabees. She was an active member both in her church and the grange when health would permit. What is our loss is her gain.

The funeral obsequies which were held in the Catholic church of Atwood last Saturday brought out a large concourse of friends, a tribute of sympathy by the community to the bereaved.

In Honor of Her Thirteenth.

Miss Claribel Chaloupka gave a party to six of her young friends in honor of her thirteenth birthday, Tuesday.

The afternoon was spent in playing games, dainty refreshments being served by the little hostess, who received many beautiful presents.

ANOTHER PIONEER DEAD

Judge McLaughlin of Elk Rapids, Died Suddenly Friday

Had Been a Resident of Grand Traverse Region Since 1840—Age Was 75.

Judge James J. McLaughlin, one of the oldest settlers of the Grand Traverse region, died suddenly of heart failure Friday morning.

Judge McLaughlin was one of the best known figures in the Grand Traverse region and claimed to have resided continuously longer in Grand Traverse country than any other living white man. He was a native of the state of New York and at the time of his death was in his seventy-fifth year. He came with his father to the mission at Northport in 1839, his father being sent by the government to teach the Indians farming.

In 1851 James J. McLaughlin settled at the mouth of Elk river, where the present village of Elk Rapids is now located and has resided there continuously since, except during the time he was with his regiment during the Civil war. Judge McLaughlin had been a life long Republican. He had been supervisor of Elk Rapids township most of the time since 1880 and a justice of the peace since the close of the Civil war. He served Antrim county one term as judge of probate. He was county agent of the state board of corrections and charities for many years. During the Harrison administration he was postmaster of Elk Rapids and resigned on the inauguration of President Cleveland.

He was an Odd Fellow and member of the G. A. R. and vice president and ex-president of the Old Settlers' association of the Grand Traverse region. In fact he was one of the association's most active members.

He was also a prominent church worker and for many years has been a trustee of the Methodist Episcopal church of Elk Rapids. Judge McLaughlin's wife died a number of years ago and all his children are dead. He leaves two adopted children, Bert McLaughlin of Northport and Mrs. Allan Harwood, wife of one the chemists at the plant of the Elk Cement & Lime company. The funeral was held Sunday.

Farm and Garden

GATEWAYS AND FENCES.

How the Farm or Garden May Be Cheaply and Picturesquely Inclosed.

The appearance of a farm means a great deal to the owner if he ever wishes to sell it. Good fences, fresh paint, orderly yards and neat farm buildings count for profit. Buyers are more likely to take an attractive looking place than an ugly one and are willing to pay more for it that for one which is run down. A well-kept farm has an appearance of prosperity which cannot but make its impression on the prospective buyer. Even when there is no question of a sale an air of thrift is a good investment, for it adds to the consideration in which the owner is held in the community.

Farm fences should be kept in good condition for reasons of economy, if nothing else. The most picturesque fences for farm or garden are of rough posts. They may be made attractive enough to serve for the house and garden, as may be seen by examining the illustrations, which suggest a new style for a gate and fence.

This rustic gateway, which was built at a small cost, may be worth imitating, modified, of course, to fit the surroundings. This one is between two cedar trees, and from it a winding path leads to the house. The cuts give an idea as to how the gate is made. The two uprights and the crosspiece on the top are of locust. All the rest is of cedar. Parts of the smaller branches have been left on the pieces that go to fill up the gate. A gateway like this would not prove effective against pigs or chickens, but would turn larger animals. It is not only cheap and durable, but decidedly attractive because so perfectly in harmony with its surroundings.

Soaking the lower ends of posts in crude petroleum and then burning it off, thus driving the hot oil into the wood while charring the outside, has given the best results in preserving pitch pine posts. Posts which were treated sixteen years ago before setting and were recently taken up were in good condition. Those treated as above were all in practically sound condition and good to last fifteen to twenty years longer. If properly done this treatment seemingly would make good posts last indefinitely.

Various methods of treatment were tried. Posts merely soaked in crude petroleum gave next best results while those treated with tar in a similar manner to petroleum stood next. In each case the posts were set two feet deep and were treated to a height of two and a half feet.

RUSTIC GATE AND FENCE.

Points In Gardening.

There is little danger of making the soil too rich for a vegetable garden.

The use of hand tools is unnecessary in the preparation of a seed bed if the soil is worked at the proper time.

The labor of hand weeding may be reduced to a minimum by planting in freshly worked soil only, filling close to the rows early in the season and permitting no weeds to ripen their seed.

The use of a wheel hoe saves labor in the care of a garden even when much of the tillage is to be done with a horse.

Dodder In the Clover.

A dodder infested stand of clover or alfalfa may safely be allowed to produce a crop of hay or be used for pasturage or for soiling provided the crop is removed before the dodder produces seed. Plowing should follow immediately after the removal of the crop, otherwise mature dodder seeds will be turned and, possibly prove troublesome on again being brought to the surface.

Give a boy a garden patch all his own and a few tools, and he will take pride in making it a success if he has ground worth anything.

"I have seen so much of the evils of the liquor traffic in the last few years, so much of its economic waste, so much of its physical ruin, so much of its mental blight, so much of its tears and heartache, that I have come to regard the business as one that must be held and controlled by strong and effective laws. I bear no malice toward those engaged in the business, but I hate the traffic. I hate its every phase. I hate it for its intoderance, arrogance, hypocisy, cant and craft and false pretense, commercialism, its greed and avarice, its sordid love of gain at any price, its domination in politics, its corrupting influence in civic affairs, its incessant effort to debauch the suffrage of the country; for the rewards it makes of public men. I hate it for its utter disregard of law, its ruthless trampling of the solemn compacts of state constitutions; for the load it straps to labor's back for the palsied hands it gives to toil, for its wounds to genius, for the tragedys of its might-have-beens. I hate it for the human wrecks it has caused, the dram-houses it peoples, for the prisons it fills, for the insanity it begets, for its ruthless graves in potter's fields; the mental ruin it imposes upon its victims, for its spiritual blight, for its moral degradation; the crime it has committed, the homes it has destroyed, the hearts it has broken, the malice it has planted in the hearts of men for its poison, for its bitterness for the dead sea fruit with which it starves their souls. I hate it for the grief it has caused womanhood—the scalding tears, the hopes deferred, the strangled aspirations, its burden of want and care. I hate it for its heartless cruelty to the aged, the infirm and helpless, for the shadow it throws upon the lives of children, for its monstrous injustice to blameless little ones."

DO YOU GET UP WITH A LAME BACK?

Kidney Trouble Makes You Miserable

Almost everybody who reads the newspapers is sure to know of the wonderful cures made by Dr Kilmer's Swamp-Root the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It is the great medical triumph of the nineteenth century; discovered after years of scientific research by Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, and is wonderfully successful in promptly curing lame back, kidney, bladder, uric acid troubles and Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is not recommended for everything but if you have kidney, liver or bladder trouble it will be found just the remedy you need. It has been tested in so many ways, in hospital work, in private practice, among the helpless too poor to purchase relief and has proved so successful in every case that a special arrangement has been made by which all readers of this paper who have not already tried it, may have a sample bottle sent free by mail, also a book telling more about Swamp-Root and how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. The regular fifty cent and dollar sizes are sold by all good druggists.

CHAPTER XV—Continued.

"Never mind why, theo, but just go ahead and do it."

"I won't! I dare not"—

"You'll do it, I say!" stormed Horrigan. "You can't welch on me at this stage of the game. Those Sturtevant Trust company notes of yours were sent to you and"—

"And I won't take them!" declared Roberts, slamming two slips of paper down upon the table. "There! Take them back!"

"What do I want of them?" argued Horrigan craftily. "They belong to you."

"They don't. I won't keep them."

"You'll have to. I keep you to your promise."

"What promise?" asked a voice behind them.

Bennett, hastily summoned by Phelan, had entered the room unobserved by either of the excited men.

"What promise?" he asked again. "A promise to"—

"What are you doing here?" bellowed Horrigan in fury. "You called me down once for coming into your private office without knocking. What d'you mean by coming into mine?"

"Yours?" queried Alwyn. "I had an idea it was the city's. The time is past when the words 'Horrigan' and 'city' meant the same thing. Well, Roberts, how are you going to vote? I want to believe you honest, and—Why, what's all this?" his eyes falling on the forgotten notes on the table.

"Nothing of yours!" shouted Horrigan, making a futile, furious grab for the documents which Alwyn was picking up. "Drop them! Drop them, I say, or you'll—

"Why should I?" asked Bennett calmly, his quick eye taking in the nature of the slips of paper even as his alert brain grasped in full the meaning of the transaction in which they figured. "Do they belong to you?"

"They don't belong to you anyway," retorted Horrigan, "and if you dare read them"—

"I've already read them, Roberts," he added in a kinder voice, turning to the shaking alderman, "these were to have been your bribe, weren't they, for voting for the Borough bill?"

His quietly compelling tone and glance forced from Roberts a frightened "Yes" before Horrigan could interfere.

"I thought so, Be quiet, Horrigan," he commanded as the infuriated boss sought to speak through his choking wrath. "This is between Roberts and me. Now, then"—

"I demand the notes to him!" pleaded Roberts in panic. "He gave 'em to me just before you came in. I could have kept them, and he could'n have prevented me even if I voted against the bill. But I'm square and"—

"You are square!" affirmed Bennett, gripping the alderman's cold, moist hand in friendly reassurance. "I knew all along you were honest at heart. Horrigan wanted to bribe you, and you wouldn't be bribed. Now, I want you to go into the council room and vote as your manhood tells you to."

Roberts, comforted, yet still trembling, obeyed, not venturing a second look at Horrigan.

"Now, my friend," said Bennett pleasantly when he and the boss were alone together, "what are you going to do about it? It seems to me your game is up."

"I want those notes!" panted Horrigan, finding coherent speech with an effort through his red mist of rage.

"Why? They're not yours. They aren't made over to you, and there is no cancellation stamp on them. They are the property of the Sturtevant Trust company, and I'll send them back there tomorrow—after I've had them photographed."

"You'll give them to me!" shouted Horrigan, his mighty body heaving with fury "or you'll never leave this room alive!"

"You're a fool, Horrigan," remarked Bennett, with condescending calm. "For you don't even know the right man to bully."

He gazed mildly into the maddened little eyes of the boss, and so for a moment they stood—Horrigan and protagonist in the world old struggle of the two for supremacy.

Then ensued the battle of wits, both men standing motionless, tense, vibrant with dynamic force.

Horrigan's face was scarlet, distorted in murderous; Bennett's pale, cold, deadly in its repose.

Slowly, little by little, Horrigan's eyes dropped. His waved awkwardly to one side from his position in front of the door and Bennett, without so much as a backward look, passed out.

The boss, like a man in a daze, sank heavily into a chair and gazed straight ahead of him—his usually red face gray and pasty.

But he was not to enjoy even the scant boon of solitude. From the anteroom Gibbs strolled in.

"They're going over some unimportant preliminary business," remarked the broker, "so I came out for a breath of fresh air. How are things going?"

"We're beat," grunted Horrigan, not looking up.

"Beat?" screamed Gibbs, ashen and inert at the news. "You don't mean it! You can't mean it! Great heaven!"

The sight of the other's cowardly emotion seemed to rouse Horrigan from his apathy.

"If I can stand it, you can!" he snarled. "You only lose your percentage on the deal, while I"—

"A percentage?" echoed Gibbs, too panic stricken to heed his own indiscretion. "Every cent I had in the world! I"—

He checked himself an instant too late.

"So?" drawled Horrigan, his keen little eyes searing the other with boundless contempt. "So it was you who were secretly buying up the stock and talking in on to our game, hey?"

"I'm ruined! Broke! And"—

"And you've got it coming to you, you whining traitor! The man who goes back on his partners deserves all the kicking he gets."

"I—I didn't mean any harm!" mumbled the crushed Gibbs. "It couldn't hurt you people to have me buy Borough stock for myself, and I'd have cleared up a million and more. Oh, don't glower like that, Horrigan, but try to think out some way of"—

"Of what, you cur?"

"Isn't there any way even now to make Bennett let up on his fight?"

"If there was you couldn't be of use to us, so why should I talk about it to you?"

"But I'd do anything in the world—anything"—

"You would?" cut in Horrigan sharply.

"Yes, yes! Only give me a chance! I'd"—

Horrigan considered, then said reflectively:

"No chance is too slight to take at a time like this, and nobody's too rotten to be of use. I've found there are three things, one of which will always buy any man a woman, ambition or cash. We've tried Bennett on ambition; he doesn't need money, so only the first of the three remains."

"A woman? I don't understand."

"Miss Wainwright."

"But"—

"Listen here. Bennett's in love with Wainwright's niece. You've got him out. Go and tell him if he'll let our bill alone you'll smash the engagement and leave her free to marry him. See?"

"I can't! I hold on, though! Afterward I could deny the whole thing, couldn't I? It'd be his word against mine, and she'd never believe I could do such a thing. I—I might try."

"Yes," growled Horrigan, "you might. A cur that's lost all his nerve can try things that even an ordinary crook would balk at."

But Gibbs did not hear. He had returned to the corridor in search of Bennett. The man scarcely deserved the opprobrium heaped on him by Horrigan. A fortunate, daring operator, he was, unknown to himself, a timid coward at heart. For the first time in his life the cool office boy had ignored, and, to do Gibbs justice, it had driven him temporarily insane. In his normal senses he would never have stooped to the path he was now so eager to carry out. It was a pitiful bit of jetsam at which a perfectly drowning man did not scruple to catch.

Horrigan followed him from the room, his own splendid nerve quite recovered from the cowardice which his lesser lieutenant had revealed. He had struck heavily on the alert. Moreover, Bennett, as he knew, hated the whole of the Borough deal—perhaps he had so long and vociferously talked up it might even do it. Alwyn felt all his threat about the notes, and even personal consequences. All the bulldog pluck that had earned him the sobriquet of Horrigan the Game left the boss of political power did not desert him now. He'd show the boys of the club his customary unconcern.

Scarcely had Horrigan quitted the room when Perry and Dallas entered it.

"You could cut the atmosphere in there with a cheese knife," Perry was saying. "Winona doesn't think the Borough bill will come up for half an hour or so. We'd better spend the time till then in here than to run up and butt our lungs into a quorum."

Dallas did not answer. She sat down by the table and rested her head dejectedly on one little gloved hand. The sight of Bennett, his grave, hopeless appeal to her, the calm, utter despair of his brave face, all these had affected her deeply. Perry noticed with brotherly concern her look and attitude.

"Feeling funny?" he asked.

"No, I'm all right, thanks."

"You look pretty near as blue as Alwyn does"—

"Don't let's talk of him, please," she begged.

"Why not? He's the whitest chap this side of Whitechile."

"That's what I used to think, but I know better now."

"Then, miss," broke in a voice from the doorway, "you're entitled to another 'know'."

Phelan, who, passing down the corridor, had heard her last words as he reached the threshold, turned into the room.

"Excuse me for buttin' in on a family chat," he remarked, coming forward, "but I'm pretty well posted on his honor's character, an' when I hear any one knockin' him it's me to the bat. What have you got against Mr. Bennett? 'None of your measly business,' says you. 'Quite so,' says I, an', that bein' the case, let's hear all about it."

Something that underlay the seeming impertinence of the alderman's bluff speech touched Dallas. On impulse she spoke:

"Mr. Bennett," said she, "is opposing the Borough bill, knowing we shall be paupers if he defeats it. He also sold Borough stock short before he announced his veto. What can one think of a man who enriches himself at the expense of his friends?"

"Gee," cried Perry, "that's a terrible thing! Bennett's the original man higher up, I'm afraid. I wonder he isn't afraid to wear the clothes of such a wicked geezer as himself!"

"Oh, Perry! Don't joke about it!" begged Dallas. "Can't you see the serious side of anything? We shall be penniless and dependent on"—

"Fear thou not, sister mine!" declared Perry in his best melodramatic manner. "Paupers, sayest thou? Far be it so! Little Brother Perry will guard thee from the cold, shivery swats of a wintry wind. Maybe we can sell violets or start a fight club or"—

"Don't!" she urged, jarred by his flippancy. "You don't understand. I"—

"As for that story of his honor's sellin' stock short and makin' a pile of cash on his own veto," put in Phelan genuinely worried, "Horrigan's looked it up an' got enough facts to make him think he can prove it. He's goin' to make Williams tell the whole story to the aldermen tonight. It's a lie, of course, but it'll hurt his honor a lot, an' the worst of it is Bennett refuses to deny it."

"He does, eh?" remarked Perry. "Then I'll do some talking about it. I'll have to fracture a promise I made Alwyn, but I guess it's worth while."

"What do you mean?" queried Dallas in wonder.

"I mean Bennett lent me the money to sell enough stock short to make up for what you and I would lose if the bill was quashed, and he gave me a letter to his own broker. We carried it through, and now you and I stand pat to win whichever way the cat jumps. We're on velvet, thanks to Alwyn."

"He did this for us?" gasped Dallas in amaze. "But why didn't you tell me? Why did you let me misjudge him?"

"He made me promise not to let you know a thing about it, and"—

"Say, youngster," broke in Phelan, tingling with excitement, "you come chasin' along with me into the aldermen's meetin'. I'll have you get up there an' tell what you know. It'll knock that bit of Williams' and Horrigan's so hig't it'll forget to hit groun' again. Come on, son! There's sure liable to be a hot shoin's in the meetin' in about eleven seconds. Come along!"

CHAPTER XVI.

DALLAS, left alone by Horrigan's private room, sat at the big table, making no effort to follow her brother and Phelan. A messenger, searching for Horrigan, lessened in, looked inquiringly at the motionless, white faced girl, then passed on to the committee room beyond and engaged in his search until the sound of his footsteps died. And still Dallas sat, inert, dumb.

Later—When she was piecing together the facts of the long, miserable conference in the light of what Perry had just told her. It was absurdly easy now that she held the key of the situation. She could understand everything—how Wainwright had put her fortune into Borough stock to induce Bennett to back, failing to move the latter he had used Alwyn's knowledge of the fact as a weapon against the young man; how Bennett had sought to save her fortune and why he had forbidden Perry to let her feelings be betrayed by the generous act.

"Poor, dear old soul," she murmured in whimsical contrition, "he has acted honorably and as he thought I would have wanted him to, and for my happiness. And I, after the wretched little fool I was, couldn't understand and publicly humiliated him. Oh, if only it weren't too late for"—

A vision of Gibbs flashed before her mind, and she shuddered, realizing all that hung on his next steps had entailed.

"It is too late," she confessed to herself, fighting back the hot tears that seared her eyes. "But at least I can be glad I know, and beg his forgiveness as I thank him."

The sound of voices in the corridor roused her from her bitter reverie. She sprang up hastily, unwilling that any should see her tear stained face. Then the speakers, though they drew near, did not enter Horrigan's office. Instead, they stepped into the adjoining committee room. The messenger had left ajar the door between the two rooms. Realizing this and not wishing to be seen, Dallas shrank back toward the wall, fearful of detection. Then

WHILE Grand Rapids will take no hand in the election of a successor to Congressman Darragh of the Eleventh district, the fight between George C. Covell, local district attorney, and Frank H. Dodds for the honor of representing the Eleventh district in congress is of great local interest. This is because of Mr. Covell's wide acquaintance here and his election will leave open one of the best federal positions of the district.

At the beginning the Dodds interests in the Eleventh or so-called "shoestring" district looked upon Mr. Covell's candidacy as a joke. Today they are facing what is generally believed in the district to be probable defeat. District Attorney Covell is one of the best speakers in western Michigan and a man who makes a distinct hit in a personal campaign. He has made it a personal campaign and with the several first class lieutenants who are guarding his interests in the several counties he is able to call the roll today and show to his own satisfaction where he has a majority of the power.

Dodds if his affiliations may be taken as a criterion is depending upon the oldfashioned machine methods and organization to win him the nomination at the primaries. Mr. Covell recognizes that the primaries lend a different atmosphere to campaigning and is making his fight along up-to-date lines. In the upper trio of counties, Grand Traverse, Charlevoix and Antrim, where Covell met opposition before, there will be no trouble this time. Before he was opposed, not because there was any personal objection, but because the leaders in those counties were under obligations to Congressman Darragh. This year all political debts have been paid and the upper tier is for Covell. Mr. Covell's lieutenants figure him in the lead in Kalkaska and Missaukee by a close margin and claim an even break in Osceola. It is admitted by the Covell forces that Clare county is in doubt, while Mecosta and Montcalm are claimed to be almost solid for the district attorney. The original claim of 1,500 for Montcalm, which was laughed at as the best political joke of the district by the Dodds people, has been shown to be only a conservative estimate. Gratiot is claimed by the Covell organization and Isabella is admittedly a Dodds stronghold.

In Montcalm county the remarkable showing for Mr. Covell is admitted to be due to the work of Attorney Ed Bowman, of Greenville, assisted by Mayor Jim Haskins, of Howard City. Both are admirers of the district attorney as well as his personal friends and took upon themselves the rather responsible task of running up better than 1,300 majority in their county. Mr. Bowman, one of the best known men in state politics, will be one of Mr. Covell's speakers when the bell taps for the final lap of the race for the nomination. Grand Rapids Press.

MAY STREET SIDEWALK

Street Committee Will Meet those Interested July 8.

Boiler Purchased—Spencer Makes formal Application. Two Sidewalks ordered.

Nothing much was doing at the last council meeting, although it was quite a lengthy session. All members were present but Alderman Geiken.

The matter of the May street sidewalk was brought up, and Wednesday evening, July 8, was fixed as the time when the committee on streets would meet with the people interested and give them a hearing.

Sidewalk petitions were received from A. M. Burdick and Frank M. Glassford and walks ordered.

The committee also reported the purchase of a boiler for fifty dollars, all approving of the purchase.

Frank G. Spencer appeared before the council and made formal application for a permit to construct a wooden building on Bridge street. The application was started on its regular course. Judge Mayne asked a license to erect a boat house at the foot of Antrim street. Matter refered to street committee.

The city attorney was instructed to represent the city in the suit brought against it by John and Martha Baker regarding the Antrim street paving and the council adjourned.

THEATRICAL

The Laf-a-Lot Electric Theater opened last Saturday night, the house being packed at all times with satisfied patrons, and it bids fair to be a popular amusement place.

Thursday night the management advertises the arrival of the American fleet under "Fighting Bob" Evans at San Francisco, and Saturday, July 4, will present three of the most popular vaudeville artists before the American public, the Carri sisters and Johnny Freer.

Mrs. Spenders—I wonder how you would like it if I ever got "new womanish" and insisted upon wearing man's clothes?

Mr. Spenders—Oh, I haven't any fear of you ever doing that. Man's clothes are never very expensive.—Catholic Standard and Times.

"You was in the minstrel business, wasn't you, Mr. Marigold?"

"Why, no, Johnny. What makes you ask that?"

"Pa said that if you could only be corked up you wouldn't be such a bad sort of fellow."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The American fleet entering San Francisco bay will be shown at the Laf-a-Lot Thursday night. 2tfl

Spring Truants

By W. F. BRYAN.

Copyrighted 1908 by Associated Literary Press

"Where are you going, Buster?" Halvord looked down upon the sturdy figure of "Dick" Bennington, otherwise "Buster," with a twinkle in the kindly gray eyes.

"Playin' hookey," explained Buster promptly. "Wanter come fishin'?"

For a moment Brian Halvord regarded the boy with judicial gravity.

"You know very well," he began, "that after such a confession it is my bounden duty to see that you are delivered into the tender clutches of Miss Spofford," he concluded. "And yet here I am seriously considering sharing in your crimes and your pleasures, Buster. It's not only schoolboys who play hookey. I think I shall become your accomplice and play hookey myself."

Buster looked up in surprise. Halvord was a grown man! Men did not play hookey. Halvord read the question in the big blue eyes.

"There is a report that I shot to get out today," he explained. "Not to fulfill business promises is playing hookey just the same as staying away from school."

"The fish are little fine, Jimmy Morrow got 'leven yesterday," said Buster defensively. "I got two fines I brought one for Rod Schenck, but Bud was 'fraid."

"Clearly this is the intervention of Providence," declared Halvord laughingly. "Lead on, my youthful tempter! But suppose we stop for lunch first."

"BUT IT WILL BE NEXT SATURDAY, WILL IT NOT?"

Halvord's boarding place was just around the corner, and soon he had an ample lunch put up to supplement Buster's well-filled box. Together they turned their steps from the village across the fields to where the "river," scarcely more than a brook, tumbled over the rocks in its haste to join the larger stream beyond.

They found a little nook in the rocky wall where the gray rocks widened slightly to form a grassy lawn fringed with trees just unfolding their leaves. There was still sufficient hint of chill in the air to lend sparkle to the sunny warmth, and to Halvord, long buried at his desk and the intricate analysis which formed his work, it seemed as though he had become a boy again as he dug angleworms with a bit of broken branch and placed them in a box.

Never on his fishing trips during vacation time had he enjoyed half the sport with costly rods and reels that he found in the grimy length of line which Buster extracted from his pocket. It required some surgical tailoring to remove the barb of the hook, which had fastened itself in the lining, and Halvord watched the proceeding with eyes suddenly grown young.

It was too early in the season for the fish to be lavish as to fare, so the worms were more eagerly accepted than the fanciest flies would be later in the season. By noon the two had caught a goodly string, and Halvord, finding a suitable place of slate in the stream, decided to add some of the fish to their picnic fare. So he built a rude stove with the flat slab of slate for the broiler.

Buster, delighted with this novelty, assisted with a will, and they were so engrossed with their task that neither noticed the approach of a slender girlish figure until a laughing voice demanded an explanation of Buster's presence so far from the schoolhouse.

"We're playing hookey," explained Halvord shamelessly. "Won't you play hookey, too, Miss Bennington? If you will you may have some of the fish."

As he spoke he pointed to the contents of the doubled lunch boxes spread upon a stone and proffered a well broiled fish upon a bit of clean birch bark. Margaret Bennington looked, hesitated and was lost.

"I suppose that I should make Dicky go right to school," she said severely, "but I haven't the heart."

"I should be at work," Halvord admitted, "but, like Buster, I have the fishing fever, and I am a worse truant than he. The morning has been well worth it, though, and there is still the long afternoon."

As he spoke he deftly lifted other fish from the flat top of the improvised stove and announced that lunch was served. The salt packed for the hard boiled eggs also served to season the fish, and to two of the trio at least the exertions of the morning gave added zest to appetite.

Margaret, too, seemed to fall under the spell of the day, and after lunch Halvord resigned his line to her, well content to merely superintend her fishing.

Ever since he had come to Chester he had worshiped Margaret Bennington from afar, but he had absorbing work in hand and had not been able to contest with the younger members of her court. Margaret, on her part, finding Halvord at first decidedly entertaining, had in time decided that he was an old man and oblivious to her many charms. And here she found him as much a boy as her ten-year-old brother. His unexpected enthusiasm and obvious capacity for enjoyment captivated her. It was all so different from the affectation of world weariness which was the approved pose among the wealthy youth of Chester.

The sun was dropping toward the west before Buster reluctantly wound up his lines and thrust them, all dripping, into his long suffering pockets. Even then the trio lingered to gather flowers, and it was twilight before they reached the road at last and came to a parting of the ways.

"It has been a most pleasant afternoon," said Margaret as she extended her slim, cold hand to Halvord. "I am very grateful to you."

"It is I who should be grateful," said Halvord softly, forgetting to relinquish her hand. "May I hope that some time again"—

"It sets a bad example to Dicky," she said laughingly, "but some Saturday when he does not have to play truant we may come again."

"Saturday is a long way off, four days," Halvord said dismally. "But it will be next Saturday, will it not?"

"Next Saturday," she promised as she withdrew her hand.

"Gee," exclaimed Buster as he and Margaret swung down the tree arched lane, leaving the chemist-author standing, hat in hand, "but I've had a bully day! Aren't you glad you came?"

He held up his string of fish, thrilling with pardonable pride.

"I've got a fine catch too!"

The girl looked straight ahead into the purple twilight.

"Yes, Buster, dear; I'm glad I came. And I think we made a fine catch."

What is the Vudor

Patented
RE-ENFORCED
HAMMOCKS

The Vudor Re-enforced Hammock, as its name implies is a hammock made extra strong where the most strain and wear comes on hammocks.

Ordinary hammocks give out first in the middle of the bed of the hammock, and in the supporting cords at the ends. In ordinary hammocks the fabric is no heavier or stronger in the middle of the bed than at the sides. The bed of the Vudor Hammock is woven with a gradually increased number of warps to the inch from the sides to the middle, so that the hammock is strongest where most strength is needed. This is a patented feature and can be found in no other hammock.

The old dam at Leland, which has been in existance for the last 35 years was purchased of D. E. Chandler a few days ago by Francis E. Hatch, superintendent of the Pellston Electric Light and Power company, and steps will be taken at once to form a stock company. It is the purpose of Mr. Hatch to build a dam at once, and furnish electric lights for Leland, Provemont, Sutton's Bay, Omena and Northport.

At a meeting of the Northport council held last week, it was voted to make a contract with the new company to furnish electric lights for the village of Northport, and it is expected similiar action will be taken by the council of Sutton's Bay. The company already has the right of way from Leland to Provemont.

Work will be begun at once to push the new dam and build a power house. A contract has already been made to furnish poles for the company.

T. B. Tompkins, Aaron Schwartz, A. C. Fessenden, William Benedict, H. W. Worden and Elon A. Losie, prominent merchants of Boon, were in Lansing Thursday, to be present at a hearing of the Ann Arbor company before the state railroad commission. For several years the people of Boon have been trying to get the Ann Arbor to build a new depot in that village and to have the company place an agent there. The company has ever refused, claiming that the receipts from that station would not warrant the expense. Tiring of being refused what the town people thought a reasonable request, the merchants finally appealed to the railroad commission.

No sooner had the commission set the date for the hearing than the company asked the Boon merchants to withdraw their complaint, assuring them that the request would soon be granted. This the Boon merchants declined to do and on invitation of Chairman Glasgow they went to Lansing. If Boon comes out ahead in its efforts for improvement about the depot, Cadillac will take courage and make a similiar demand. The Ann Arbor depot in that city, next to the Grand Trunk depot at Pontiac, is generally conceded to be the worst on the whole road, regardless of the size of the place.

The Council at Manton is considering a plan to run the municipal electric plant by water power from Cedar creek. A civil engineer has been employed and it is said that more than enough power can be generated to furnish the village with light and power. In case the plan is adopted it will mean the flooding of Lake Billings, until recently one of the most beautiful in this section.

The United States Steel corporation has practically let the machinery contract to develop its immense stone quarries in Alpena. The steel corporation owns 2,500 acres of stone land near the city of Alpena and will build a million dock in Thunder Bay at which to load the vessels that will carry the stone from Alpena to Gary, Ind. Alpena stone is a piece of pure lime and will be used in the manufacture of steel and Portland cement at Gary, Ind. The contract for the steel corporations plant to be built there will reach several million dollars.

The following officers were elected at the state assembly of Companion court I. O. K. held at Grand Rapids last week

President, Mrs. J. H. Skinner, Muskegon; past president, Mrs. Frances Slemer, Grand Rapids; vice president, Mrs. Salina Carey, Jackson; orator, Mrs. Edoena Flory, Grand Rapids; secretary, Mrs. G. Patterson, Muskegon; treasurer, Mrs. J. Thornton, Muskegon.

Muskegon was selected for the next assembly. The meet will be held in June, the date to be left to the decision of the court in that city and to be announced later.

The assembly was the most successful of any in the history of the organization and came to a close with a grand ball and drill contests at Internrban hall. First prizes in drills were won by Court Battle Creek, Nos. 61 and 97, Widewake court, No. 59, and Cadillac Court Dewey. The only second prize awarded went to Traverse City companion court. Comic and flower drills formed a formed a feature of the evening's entertainment.

A DAINTY TRIFLE.

Whisk Broom Holder Made From Wall or Crinkled Paper.

A useful little article which may be made from paper, either flowered or plain, is a whisk broom holder laced together at the sides with ribbon. The back of the holder is made of cardboard in the shape of a shield and is covered with an all over flowered paper. A smaller piece of cardboard is covered with paper and laced to the back through perforations made in both pieces. The edges are finished with gold paint, which is not at all difficult to put on. It is splashed on quite irregularly in a narrow border.

Most elaborate in effect, although not difficult of construction, is a wastebasket made of paper. A big splashing flowered pattern is chosen for this purpose and is matched in color by the plain paper for the inside. There are five pieces in the wastebasket, the four sides and the bottom. The paper may be one of the very deep border designs or an all over pattern.

The four pieces which are to form the sides of the basket are the same size and are cut narrower at the bottom than at the top. They are straight along the bottom and may be straight along the top or scalloped. The bottom piece is made to fit the square formed by the bottom of the four sides. The sides are perforated along the edges and along the bottom, and the entire basket is laced together with ribbon.

How to Improve a Narrow Hall.

To make the appearance of a very narrow hall place large mirrors on both sides, thus giving a vista of it. A very narrow one, say the length of the wall, if placed opposite the landing of a half circular stairway will add wonderfully to the appearance of the narrow hall and make a welcome to the visitor. Avoid striped paper for a narrow hall. Use a plain paper and a plain paper without figures or geometrical designs in very small designs. Terra cotta is a good hall color; also a dull shade of olive green, while cool gray paper, used to side, is hard due in a new house. The right shade of cream is nearly needed. A figure paper is preferable in a narrow, ill lighted hall. Green paper fades very easily and soon loses its original color.

How to Keep White Silk White.

There is nothing more distressing to the owner of a white silk or satin gown than to smell yellowing when it is "put away." Those who do not cut their wedding dresses up the next winter, but keep them with reverent sentiment to the end of their lives, are always on the lookout for something to prevent them turning a deep tawny yellow. The best preventive of this is to pack the gown away in soft tissue sheets that have been rinsed through deep hot water until a deep inking. Ordinary blue mosliu can be substituted if preferred. Stuff all the folds with blue instead of white tissue paper, and keep in a box with a close fitting lid, that is also wrapped with heavy paper to keep out the dust.

The Old Bachelor—Don't you pity us old bachelors? Old Widow—Yes, but I don't pity you as much as I congratulate myself.—Illustrated Bits.

TO THIS WE HAVE COME.

The Few Control the Needs of the Many—A One Sided System.

How intermembership in directorship and stock ownership has developed and centralized control may be explained as follows:

Nine men control the Pennsylvania railroad system.

These nine, with four others, control also the directorates of the Baltimore and Ohio and the Norfolk and Western.

These thirteen, with six others, add control of the New York Central and Hudson River and the Chesapeake and Ohio.

These nineteen, with five others, control also the Chicago and Northwestern.

These twenty-four, with one other, control also the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis.

These twenty-five, with two others, control also the Reading system.

These twenty-seven, with three others, control also the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis.

These twenty-seven, with three others, control also the Erie.

These thirty, with five others, control also the Southern.

These thirty-five, with two others, control also the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western.

These thirty-seven, with two others, control also the Lehigh Valley.

These thirty-nine, with four others, control also the Great Northern.

These forty-three, with five others, control also the Northern Pacific.

These forty-eight, with two others, control also the Union Pacific.

These fifty, with one other, control also the Southern Pacific.

These fifty-one, with six others, control also the Rock Island.

The above is based on data published by the interstate commerce commission. The people's railroads are not theirs at all. Instead those the roads serve are at the mercy of a few swollenly rich profit hunters. This development is inevitable under the capitalist system. Nothing else could happen so long as such public utilities are not publicly owned. Socialism demands that the things the people depend on in common shall be owned in common.

PURPOSE OF SOCIALISM.

Collective Ownership Required to Guarantee Bread and Home.

Science has established the law that each succeeding phase of the social evolution preserves the vital manifestations of the preceding phases and eliminates the pathological manifestations. The laborer of today has gained certain points of which the producers of the past were deprived—liberty, suffrage, association. But he has not the guarantee of bread and a home. The purpose of Socialism is to give this guarantee to all, but it does not follow that it will do away with the conquests already obtained.

We find an example in the invention of machinery. This marvelous substitute for human labor should have had only beneficent consequences, but it has condemned multitudes of workers to the horrors of idleness and hunger because of the irresistible advantage to the capitalist. The only solution is that the workers (the collectivity) must own the machines.

No intelligent Socialist has ever dreamed of not recognizing all that the bourgeoisie has done for human civilization. These are permanent conquests of human progress. But it is necessary to rid the social organism of the poison that it has generated that no privileged class shall longer pass their lives in idleness and dissipation, but the immense majority of men shall rise to the heights of serene security instead of living in the anxieties and bitter strife of the present.

Under the system of private property and the monopoly of economic power the liberty of the man who does not share in this monopoly is only an impotent and sentimental toy.—Professor Enrico Ferri.

A Sinking Ship.

The old ship of capitalism is springing leaks in every part of her hold, and her rotten hull is beginning to fill, and it will not be long before the old hulk goes to the bottom. There is nothing in this to deplore. Capitalism has had its day, and it has been a long one. In capitalism all the forces were generated which now make Socialism possible, and for this at least we have reason to be thankful to the old system. We had to have capitalism and pass through it before we could have Socialism. The whole productive system has been Socialized within the capitalist system. It now only remains to Socialize its ownership to complete the evolution, and, this done, capitalism will go and Socialism will come as inevitably as the sunset at evening and the sunrise on the morrow.—Appeal to Reason.

Two Kinds.

There are two classes of criminals in society—those forced by want or degradation to crookedness and those who take the power of place into self for their own enrichment. Of the latter class political crime has produced the greatest number, so great that crime in office is almost the rule with capitalist party officials. They have in fact turned the public offices into thieves' strongholds—the more miserable because by old blustering the law they compel themselves secure from it. The history of capitalist party of freebooting is almost a continuous account of official rascality and protected thievery.—South Demorathe Herald.

LEGAL NOTICES

Mortgage Foreclosure.

Whereas, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage dated the tenth day of April, 1905, executed by Adolph Kirchner and Mary A. Kirchner, his wife to Citizens' State Bank of Whitewater, Wisconsin, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Charlevoix, Michigan, in liber thirty seven of Mortgages on pages 501 and 502, on the 27th day of April, 1905, at nine o'clock in the forenoon. And whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of one thousand four hundred thirteen and sixty four one hundredths (1413.64) dollars, the principal, interest, taxes and insurance, and the further sum of fifty dollars as an attorney fee, stipulated for in said mortgage, and which is the whole amount claimed to be due on said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted either in law or equity, to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the east front door of the court house in said county of Charlevoix, on the twenty third day of July next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon on that day; which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to-wit: The south half (s½) of the north east quarter (ne¼) of section eighteen (18) town thirty two (32) north, of range six (6) west; and the north west quarter (nw¼) of the south east quarter (se¼) of section eighteen (18) town thirty-two (32) north, of range six (6) west.

the voice of one of the speakers suddenly arrested her notice.

"Well," Bennett was saying in no especially civil tones, "you said you wished to speak to me in private. What have you to say? Be brief, for I am busy."

Finding herself the unwilling witness to what promised to be a confidential talk, Dallas stole toward the door leading to the corridor, but, Mrs. Horrigan, as was his custom, had locked it on going out. She dared not enter alone the crowded anteroom in her present state, so, hesitatingly she paused, forced to remain where she was. The sound of another voice chained her to the spot, and, unconscious of eavesdropping, she stood spellbound, hearing every word distinctly through the half open doorway.

"I—I hardly know how to begin," Gibbs was replying to Bennett's curt demand. "It is a delicate subject and"—

"Then the sooner it is treated to open air the better. Is"—

"You've won the Borough bill fight," began Gibbs.

"Is that all you have to say to me?"

"No. You've won, but you've lost far more. You've lost Dallas Wainwright."

"I hardly need to be reminded of that," retorted Bennett, "and it is a subject I don't care to discuss."

"But listen," pleaded Gibbs as the mayor made a move as though to leave the room. "One minute! I say you've won the Borough fight. I've won Dallas. Can't we"—

"Well, what?" asked Bennett, with ominous quiet as he paused in his departure.

"Can't we—strike some sort of bargain?" said Gibbs tentatively.

"Explain, please," ordered Bennett, with that same deceptive calm.

The eavesdropper.

"Why," went on Gibbs, emboldened at the other's seeming complaisance, "suppose you give up this Borough fight and I give up Dallas? I won her by a trick. She doesn't really love me. It is her pride, not her heart, that made her throw you over and accept me. It is you she loves, and I've known it all along, and you are in love with her."

"What then?"

"Just this," returned Gibbs, wondering at Bennett's quiet reception of the strange offer. "She will marry me because she isn't the sort of girl to go back on her promise, especially since she looks on me as a sort of high minded martyr to your oppression. So if I hold her to her word she will not back down. Now, if you, even now, withdraw your opposition the Borough bill will go through. Let it go through and I will break my engagement to Dallas Wainwright and leave her free to marry you."

"You promise that?"

"Yes!" cried Gibbs, elated. "I promise on my word of honor! Is it a bargain?"

"Gibbs," repelled Alwyn slowly, "I didn't think there was so foul a cur as you in all the world. I thought I understood how utterly rotten you were, but I didn't believe there was a man living who could debase himself as you've just done."

"But"— began Gibbs, in bewilderment.

"Now you'll listen to me for a moment," cut in Bennett, silencing the interruption. "You say I'm in love with Miss Wainwright. It is true. I love her in a way a dog like you could never understand. I'd be torn for a fortune. I'd give my life for one word of love from her, but I'd sooner go forever without that word than win it by a dishonest deed that would prove me unworthy of her. I asked her love as a free gift and tried to deserve it. She refused, and I won't try to buy what she won't give me, especially since the price would make me as unworthy of her as you yourself are."

"But you take the wrong view of it. You see, if"—

"I see this much: I'll have to speak plainer to get my view of the case into your vile mind. If ever again you meet me, stand out of my way. Don't speak to me or come where I am, for if you cross my path again I'll treat you ten thousand times worse than when I thrashed you in that football game. That's all."

Bennett, restraining his wrath with a mighty effort, turned on his heel and strode off into the corridor, leaving Gibbs staring after him in dumb, impotent despair.

When the broker had recovered himself sufficiently to start from the room Dallas Wainwright stood before him, barring the exit. Her face was dead white, her big dark eyes ablaze.

"Wait!" she commanded. "I must speak to you—for the last time."

"Dallas!" gasped the desperate man, his drawn face turning positively yellow. "You were—you—you heard?"

"Mr. Bennett just now called you 'the foulest cur in all the world,'" said Dallas, her voice scarcely louder than a whisper, yet every syllable stinging as a whiplash. "He put it too mildly."

"But, sweetheart"—

"'Miss Wainwright,' please. I heard you offer to sell me to him in exchange for his conscience. If my own brother had told me such a thing I would not have believed him, but I myself heard it. And I heard his splendid answer."

"But, you know, I was joking! That it was just a trick to"—

"Just such a trick that made me promise to be your wife? Yes, but this time you had to do with a man—a man in a million—not with a poor, credulous little idiot like me. And he answered you as I should have answered you had my eyes been opened in time. I"—

KILLING WEEDS.

Government Experts Claim That Iron Sulphate Will Destroy Them.

At last weeds may be eradicated without the trouble of putting them up by hand at the expense of time and an aching back. The magical eradicator of these pests of the gardener and farmer is sulphate of iron or green vitriol. This will shrivel up the rank growths, while the grass will thrive.

The sulphate, which comes in the form of green crystals, is dissolved in water for application to the pernicious weeds. A couple of pounds to the gallon is said to be about the right quantity to settle the fate of the most determined lawn dandelion that grows. Wild mustard requires a stronger dose, and the farmer who goes on the warpath after this common destroyer is advised to use from 75 to 100 pounds of the stuff for each fifty-two gallons of water and then go forth for a wholesale slaying.

The solution is not to be applied with an ordinary sprinkling can. It probably would eat the can with more avidity than it eats weeds even. A spraying machine is necessary. The introduction of Mr. Sulphate to Mr. Weed is performed in the tender youth of the latter, when he is unsophisticated and about four inches high. The presence of a good, bright sun is said to help the matter along, and if it happens to be in the early morning when the dew is still on the ground, why, so much the better. The sulphate works in a slow and leisurely fashion, and for the first day or so the intruders continue to stand up and pretend they like it. On the second day, however, they lose heart and ambition. They become mourning weeds, the chief mourners at their own funeral.

The process has been tried on the wheatfields at the North Dakota agricultural experiment station as well as in tax culture in Minnesota. Some remarkable results are said to have been obtained at the Cornell university experiment station at Ithaca, N. Y. Sulphate is said also to have established its usefulness in the oat fields of Wisconsin.

upon which the hanging bars rest.

A pulley is fitted inside to the top of the building, and a hoisting rope is passed over it. The hanging bar is fastened to the rope by two spreading ties, so that it will not easily tip when loaded. The trammel net are hung upon the hooks fixed in the bar, and the whole is hoisted to the cleats, when the bar is swung around so that the ends rest upon the cleats. The rope is then released from the bar by means of a small rod, and another bar may be loaded and raised in the same way.

Heloise was noted as much for her intellectual ability as for her personal beauty. She was familiar with the literature of four or five languages—Italian, French, Greek, Latin and Hebrew. Her knowledge was remarkable; her conversational powers were brilliant. It was her bright mind and varied learning that first attracted the attention of Abelard. Abelard died in 1142, Heloise in 1164. First buried at St. Marcel, Abelard's remains were shifted several times, but finally reached the well known tomb at Pere-la-Chaise, wherein also rest the ashes of Heloise.

Printing Papers

This office wishes to call the attention of users of Printed Matter to the fine line of stationery, book and poster papers, cardboards and covers, which we carry in stock. You have all, no doubt, experienced the annoyance of having to accept a paper stock for your printed matter that was not what you wanted, but—"it will do," or else submit to an exasperating delay while a special order for stock was being filled in Chicago. Now, these delays are just as annoying to the printer as to his customer; and besides, they are expensive for him; therefore, we aim to have in stock a line of papers from which any ordinary demand may be filled, and with the "just right" kind.

There are very few country offices anywhere that carry the assortment we do; and none in this part of Michigan.

The next time you want Printed Matter, the good red corpuscles of any business 'exalt on the Courier; and be sure that in otherwise good piece of work will not be robbed of a large part of its effectiveness through being printed upon an inappropriate paper stock, through lack of assortment from which to select.

"When we look back over the work of the grange in the last forty years, we have great reason to be thankful for its inception, its institution, its noble work and the results. Encouraged by the past, sowing the seeds of brighter hopes and nobler influences all over the country, let us go forward caring not if we be officers or humble members, knowing there is a wide place for each one, and much work waiting for willing hands to perform."

Song—"Beautiful Grange." Melodies page 37.

Roll call—Quotations from Ritual

Topic, good of the order.

(a) Co-operation as provided for by the grange.

(b) The benefit to the order of the August rally, held by the individual granges or a union of granges.

(c) How the Pomona grange serves the order.

(d) Scope of the lecturer's programs and the benefits.

General discussion.

Song—The model grange. Melodies page 69.—State Lecturer's Bulletin.

South Arm Grange No. 815.

South Arm Grange met June 27, with rather a small attendance.

The question—"What can we do to make the grange more interesting and thus induce the members to turn out better," was discussed by several members. It was generally agreed that making the lecturer's hour more interesting was the best way.

"A model farm kitchen" was the next question discussed. The brothers seemed to think that the kitchen should be the pleasantest and best furnished room in the house. Pleasant because there was where the housewife had to spend most of her time, and well furnished because better results were obtained thereof.

The question, "Should children be allowed to read the daily papers?" was discussed by several members. Opinions varied widely, but the most general one was that they should not be allowed to read it until after the twelfth year.

A recitation was given by Lula Crawford.

Bro. Clarence Lalonde, who has been at the St. Louis sanitarium taking treatment for rheumatism, was reported much improved in health.

Wilson Grange No. 719.

Wilson Grange No. 719 met Saturday evening, June 27, and was opened in form by master.

Attendance 30. Receipts about $20.00, disbursements $33.90.

No important business was transacted. The lecturer presented an excellent program.

Suggestion by George Todd that the lecturer call a spelling match occasionally as a supplement to a short program met with approval.

We have not been notified of the date and place of meeting of next Pomona, in fact we are generally left to find out for ourselves. This is not as it should be. Who are the delinquent ones?

I am informed by the Pomona officers that the reason for the date of the next meeting not having been announced is that Deer Lake grange, with whom the meeting will be held, as previously published, have not yet completed their hall.

The COURIER will give the date as soon as it is fixed. EDITOR.

Ironton Grange No. 707.

Ironton Grange No. 707 met in regular session June 9.

Under good of the order motion was made that a degree team be organized. After the team was organized it was decided that they meet for practice the next Tuesday night.

Tuesday night the degree team met and practised.

The next regular meeting was held June 23, with a good attendance. Miss Mabel Hunter was initiated in the first and second degrees by the degree team.

It was decided that the grange have a picnic before harvest time and a committee, consisting of Miss Williams, Mr. Flanders and Mr. Walker, was appointed to decide on the time and place and report at next meeting, June 30.

Full Grown Children.

"At an out of the way little station," said a railway guard, "a party of workingmen wished to look to a town in the midlands to see a football match. Unfortunately the booking clerk had only a limited number of tickets for that journey at his disposal. Eventually he got out of his difficulty by dividing the pieces of pasteboard and issuing children's tickets to the party, at the same time explaining to me how matters stood.

"'They've paid the full fare, of course,' he remarked, 'so you must see 'em through.'

"I had almost forgotten the matter when a ticket examiner at R. came to me and remarked, with a sorrowful shake of the head:

"'This under age dodge is getting too warm.'

"'What's the matter?' I asked.

"'Matter?' he echoed disgustedly. 'Why, here's a whole carriage full n' children wot plays cards, drinks whisky and wears whiskers!'"—London Tit-Bits.

CHOLERA.

"Chicken cholera" is as great a household phrase as liniment is a rural cure-all for family troubles from a sore corn to "yeller janders."

"Chicken cholera" say two-thirds of the neighbors when the other fellow's chickens are sick.

But listen. Cholera cannot exist with frost, so there's your winter cry of "cholera" done.

Cholera bacilli flourish best in heat of 85 degrees to 105 degrees, and it requires an exposure of 15 minutes to 140 degrees of heat to kill the germ.

That's hotter than the red pepper people prescribe for cholera, so there's your cayenne cure knocked out. Hot, moist weather, corn diet and filth is the fatal cholera triumvirate.

What seems an epidemic of contagion is not always so, for a whole flock may die in a day from ptomaine poison caused by eating indigestible or decayed food.

Diarrhea, while somewhat like cholera, is seldom contagious and may be quickly cured if taken in time. Range birds seldom get it. The irregular feeding and filth make it common to yarded stock. Remedy for diarrhea, sulphocarbolate of zinc, twenty grains to quart of water.

Tainted ground and lack of exercise make yard birds easy targets. All kinds of fowls and birds get the disease, but fat stock are easy marks. Barred Rocks and other big breeds go down quick. Of fifteen Rocks and fifteen White Leghorns exposed in experiment one Leghorn died to ten Rocks, and the other fourteen were little affected. Why? Less fat and Leghorn activity. Hot climate and sandy regions have much of the disease.

SYMPTOMS.

Bird bows head, stands alone; wings droop; comb changes to white, blnish purple and black; ruffled plumage; bird drags feet, becomes ball shaped.

Disease begins with yellow tipped excrement; then follows increasing diarrhea enveloped in mucus, later greenish and bloody.

CHOLERA MICROBE VICTIM.

No appetite, full sour crop, intense pain, great thirst, temperature rises to 110 degrees.

Half a flock may die in one night or disease may run three days. Birds die in stupor or convulsions.

Dissection shows enlarged soft liver, red spots on internal organs, lungs and blood vessels full of clotted blood.

TREATMENT.

Remove well birds to clean quarters, feed lightly whole oats, mix one pound venetian red to the quart of drinking water, and observe birds closely.

Venetian red is also used for hog cholera in dose from tablespoonful up in milk.

It is nonpoisonous, composed of iron, lime and magnesia, and a half pound kept in the drinking water through hot months is fine fowl tonic and sure preventive of cholera and diarrhea. Keep stricken birds in old quarters, which should be disinfected with slaked lime and whitewash, strong with crude carbolic acid.

Give red water for drink, and to birds that do not drink give ten grain capsules of the powder three times a day.

We have also cured the disease with operation given for hard crop.

Dead birds and droppings should be burned. Cholera is often introduced by new birds, purchased eggs, by birds and fowls carrying it in their feathers and germ dust in the air.

It may be carried on the feet of rats, cats and attendants had in dead carcasses dragged by dogs. It may be taken from food, drink and droppings. The disease may be local or it may be national, as in 1830, 1850 and 1860.

KURIOS FROM KORRESPONDENTS.

Q. Can you tell me why my chicks have no head feathers? If a disease, it must affect them all over, for they grow slowly. N.

A. Your chicks have head lice and have made themselves bald scratching. These lice are gray and flat and are not easily seen. They suck the blood. Rendered hen fat will kill them.

Q. Will you give me a good summer ration for my white Rocks? I wish to show in the fall and would like to keep them from getting fat and creamy.

A. Whole oats, mash of mids and bran, beef scrap and greens. Throw in a little corn and buckwheat occasionally. Quantity according to condition.

Q. What is a fair price for an incubator from 100 to 200 egg size and a brooder for 100 chicks? There are so many prices I cannot decide. O.

A. A dependable 150 egg incubator costs $23 and a first class colony brooder $18.

Q. What is a good cure for canker? It seems to bother my fowls summer and winter.

A. The best thing you can do is to get new stock. Thorough disinfection, a dry house, no drafts, new stock and no range in snow, cold and storm will put you on your feet. Chronic canker no profit. Use chlorate potash or apply iodine.

Q. There are various prescriptions purporting to be the Douglas mixture, but I notice they differ. Can you give me the true one? W.

A. Sulphate of iron, eight ounces; sulphuric acid, half an ounce; water, one gallon. Put your iron into a jug containing a gallon of water. When dissolved add acid. When clear give tablespoonful to quart of drinking water in glass or glazed vessel. Good for general tonic, for diarrhea or for strengthener during molt.

Q. What height ceiling do you suggest? N.

A. We have had best success with a ceiling nine feet front and seven back. Lower ceilings make very hot houses, many broody hens, and if you are troubled with frost your birds are up against it. Then think of bumping your head three times a day.

Q. My chicks seem so dull in the morning. I lose some every night and cannot account for it. I use the —— brooder and paid a good price for it. Please help me out. M.

A. The style brooder you use often smokes the chicks. Cement underneath, and if you then find soot under the hover discard.

Q. I am in a southern state where we have long rainy seasons. Our chickens are on range and the wet gives them bowel trouble. Will you recommend a preventive?

A. During the wet season cut out mash, feed much oats in hull and keep venetian red in the drinking water, a pound to the gallon.

FEATHERS AND EGGSHELLS.

It is impossible to feed 100 or 200 young chickens evenly in a bunch. It's the easiest stunt to stunt stock there is.

Many poultrymen are taking up bees as a side issue. They certainly work overtime, require little care and gather big returns on a small investment.

Congress has been seriously discussing the question, "What does it cost a year to keep a hen?" They are beginning to show some sense at Washington, after all.

A poultryman in New Jersey lost 3,000 duck eggs because the gas was shut off that was supplying the heat for his incubators. Is this another proof that corporations have no consciences?

The Society For the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has come out against the shipment and sale of live chicks for Easter gifts. It certainly is cruelty to give little chicks to children for Easter toys. The sale of stuffed chicks and little ducks in the stores is bad enough.

Our English friends followed the colony house plan the past winter. Give us the long scratching house for hen health and eggs. Then we don't need to shovel so many paths. By the way, didn't the English try the colony plan on this side and fail? Too many spunky, revolutionary roosters in the colonial coop.

A number of our chicken brethren are keeping Belgian and Flemish hares. They find their main enemies are rats and heavy showers. The surface water runs down the burrows and drowns the harelets. They tell us that market demand is greater than supply, and Belgian and Flemish hares taste much better than common red, white and black hairs. Have you tried them?

It's funny, but it's true, that among pigeons two cock birds sometimes mate and if given eggs will often hatch them out. Hens more frequently mate if they can't be suited and lay eggs, but hatch nothing but "stool pigeons." A cock bird will occasionally mate with two or three hens and take turns at setting on the eggs. What a squabbling household among cooing doves!

A WORLD OF MICROBES.

There are microbes in the air
And microbes in the drink;
There are microbes in the blood vessels
And microbes in your think,

Tuberculosis in the cow
And cholera in the hog,
Diphtheria in the pussy's fur,
Distemper in the dog.

The roosters, too, are crawling full,
And ducks, though they are quacks,
And turks and geese and guineas, too,
Have microbes by the stacks.

You drink them when you take your beer
And breathe them in at prayers.
This old world seems all microbes
In concentrated layers.

"Is there a place where one may flee
From microbe's murderous blow?"
"Why, yes; the scientists tell me
That place is down below."

C. M. B.

DON'TS.

Don't let your turkeys run in the barnyard. It causes blackhead. Keep them on the green for the "long green."

Don't aim too high. Too many chicks hatched for your capacity will do you both. Don't bite off more chicklets than you can chew.

Don't expect to be in the limelight of popularity if you don't use lime—lime for lice and bad smells; lime-water for that bad taste and big head.

Don't fail to get rid of surplus breeders and laying stock as the breeding season nears the end and slack laying and molting approach. Quick sales, less feed, more profits.

INSANE MAN'S TERRIBLE DEED

Lorenzo D. Porter Shoots Wife and Son, and Commits Suicide

WAS A HIGHLY RESPECTED CITIZEN

Mind Unbalanced for Some Time—Thought Family Would Starve

An Old Soldier and Well-to-do Farmer, With Good Income—Victims Will Probably Recover.

Just before noon, July Fourth, the news began to spread through the crowded streets of our city, that Lorenzo D. Porter, one of Charlevoix county's oldest and most respected citizens, had shot his wife and son, Drs. Montague and Thielen having received calls by phone, giving the information, also a call had came for the sheriff.

An investigation of the tragedy gives us the following facts:

Lorenzo Porter, who with his wife and son, Harry, lived on his farm, about three miles from the city, has for some time given evidence that his mind was unbalanced, his particular form of mania taking the turn that his farm was unable to produce any crops and that he together with his wife, son and the stock on the farm, were doomed to starvation.

To several has he told his fancied troubles and at other times has been seen crying and moaning to himself for long periods of time.

Mr. Porter, however, was considered very well-to-do, his farm, which was worked by himself and son, being well stocked and producing a good income; beside this Mr. Porter received a pension, and considerable amounts were added to the family exchequer by summer tourists, of whom many were entertained at the farm home during each season.

At several times the neighbors desired to have him committed to the asylum for treatment, but had not taken any steps owing to the entreaties of his wife and son, who considered his dementia of a harmless nature.

On the forenoon of the Fourth, the son, Harry, who was thirty-seven years of age, was lying on the couch asleep, having been up late the night before. Mrs. Porter being in the cellar, when Mr. Porter opened fire on Harry with a shot gun, tearing a terrible wound in his shoulder. Harry grappled with him and with the assistance of his mother, who had rushed into the room on hearing the shot, got the gun away and threw it into a lilac bush, where they thought it would be lost. Porter at this time having left the house.

Fearing another attack Mrs. Porter got Harry, who by this time was weakened by loss of blood, to the stairway and was following herself when Porter returned. Mrs. Porter shut the door and held on, thinking she could hold it against him, when he, having found the gun, shot through the door, tearing a terrible wound in her breast carrying along with the charge into her body, pieces of the door and Mrs. Porter's clothing. After the shot Porter disappeared and Mrs. Porter and Harry succeeded in getting to the upper rooms, where Harry dragged himself to the window and attracted the attention of Mrs. A. N. Chase of Norwood, who was driving by, telling her to go to George Trimble's and phone for the doctors, as himself and mother had been shot by his father and they were afraid to go to their own phone as his father might be laying in wait for them. Mrs. Chase notified Mr. Trimble's folks, from where Drs. Montague and Thielen were notified by phone. Mr Trimble and other neighbors, who were notified, went to the Porter home and after finding out the situation, phoned to Under-sheriff Weikel, who in company with R. A. Emory and J. B. Parsons drove to the scene of the tragedy and began search for Porter, first going to the barn, west of the house, and from there to the granary, known as the old brewery, east of the house, where Weikel discovered the body of Porter hanging, he having hung himself with a cow tie over an old stairway. The coroner was notified and an inquest held; the jury bringing in a verdict of suicide.

Monday morning a search was made of Porter's pockets, when a paper was found in his pocket-book reading as follows:

"In case of my death, I wish to be buried at my old home, Sturgis, Michigan. L. D. Porter."

Baxter Post No. 119, G. A. R. took charge of the body Monday, when it was sent to Sturgis, Michigan, where the funeral will be held today under the auspices of A. B. Sturgis post No. 73, G. A. R.

Lorenzo Porter was born at Sturgis, Michigan, November 26, 1843, and during the war served as landsman on the U. S. S. Great Western and Pittsburg of the Mississippi Squadron taking part in the engagements at Island No. 10, Vicksburg, and Banks expedition to the Red river.

Coming to Charlevoix county in 1882, he purchased from Robert A. Miller, the farm where he died, and became a member of Baxter Post in 1881. Mr. Porter and his family were most highly respected, Mrs. Porter being the head of the Women's Relief Corps of this city.

The doctors immediately performed operations on both Mrs. Porter and Harry, and although the wounds are of a serious nature if no complications set in they will probably recover.

ODD FELLOWS ENTERTAIN

Boyne City Lodges the Guests of the Charlevoix Fraternity

An Evening of Work, Music and Pleasure, Closed by a Banquet by Rebekahs.

Wednesday night was a great night for the Odd Fellows of Charlevoix, nearly one-hundred members of Boyne City lodge, accompanied by their friends coming over on the Chummings, as guests of Round Lake lodge.

The initiatory degree was conferred on Floyd Henrys, Round Lake lodge degree team doing the work in a manner which it would be hard to improve upon.

During the time the work was going on at the hall, the visiting members of the Rebekah branch of the order and invited guests were being entertained at the Bank hall, by the Charlevoix Rebekahs, with a program.

After the work the brothers adjourned to the hall, where a banquet was served by the Rebekahs, after which all who desired passed away the time in dancing, and another red-letter day in Charlevoix county Odd Fellowship was closed.

DEATH OF AN OLD SETTLER

Mrs. Sarah Brown Died Sunday at the Home of Her Daughter.

Mrs. Sarah Brown died Sunday at the home of her daughter, Mrs. William Hulmes after a long illmyocarditis.

Mrs. Brown was sixty-two years of age and had been a resident of this county for several years. She leaves besides her husband, Albert Brown, a well known farmer, of Marion township, three sons, Anson, Bert and Roy and four daughters, Mrs. William Mills, of Ohio, Mrs. Sam Beaubian, of Petoskey, Mrs. William Hulme, of this city, and Mrs. Fred Cooper, of Marion.

The funeral was held at the residence of Mrs. Hulme this afternoon, Rev. R. A. Wright officiating.

Burial took place at Brookside cemetery.

NORTHPORT BEACH HOTEL

Completely Destroyed by Fire Monday Morning.

Loss $80,000—No Insurance—One of the Finest Hotels in Michigan.

Northport Beach hotel, one of the finest summer hotels in northern Michigan, was completely destroyed by fire of unknown origin at 4 o'clock Monday morning. The loss is $80,000 with no insurance on either building or contents.

Northport Beach hotel was built about six years ago and was a three-story frame structure facing Grand Traverse bay, but a short distance from the beach. It was a mile or so from the village.

It was opened for the season July 4 and there were but seven guests in the house last Monday, all of whom got out safely, although a few lost some of their possessions. The help all got out.

A large party of guests is expected this week and bookings for the season were very heavy, as Hodges & Black, formerly of South Haven leasers of the house, controlled the Avery, which was burned last fall. The fire started in the pastry room and nothing is known of its origin.

The flames spread rapidly and on account of the distance from the village no water pressure was available. Efforts of the volunteer brigade availed nothing. The car ferry, Manistique No. 1, happened to be in the harbor and steamed over to the fire, but as she had only 600 feet of hose nothing could be done.

The hotel was owned by A. M. Leslie, of Chicago, who arrives today.

It will not be rebuilt. Hodge & Black saved only a very small portion of the furniture. Their loss is especially heavy, as they had expended considerable money on the house this spring.

Rules For Political Advertising

Rules adopted by the Republican Editorial Association governing political advertising:

Candidates for local offices will be given a free announcement of their candidacy and the subsequent publication of matter relating to their candidacy which has real news value.

All other matter prior to the primary election will be charged for at regular commercial rates as advertising, pure reading matter at the pure reader rate and display matter as the display rate.

This association unequivocally condemns the practice of publishing paid matter in the editorial or news columns in the interest of any candidate before the primary without some distinguishing mark to denote that it is paid matter and as such does not in the slightest degree represent the attitude of the paper publishing the same.

We condemn without equivocation the acceptance of money in any way whatever for editorial support and newspaper influence as being dishonest, reprehensible and tending to the utter destruction of a newspaper's most valuable possession, its influence in the community in which it is published.

The above are the rules adopted by the Republican Editorial Association in regard to political advertising. The COURIER being a member of that association will adhere strictly to these rules.

Had His Foot Crushed.

Last Thursday O. D. Hammond crushed one of his feet very badly while attempting to mount to the driver's seat on his bus. Some small boys had caught the bus and were riding on the step behind. Mr. Hammond told them to get off, and in a spirit of mischief or retaliation the boys threw open the door of the bus. Hammond jumped off and closed the door and was hurt in trying to regain his seat.

The business complain of frequent annoyance of this nature and would be grateful if parents would warn their children against the practice. Another accident might be even more serious than this one.

Card of Thanks.

We desire to thank the many friends for the kind assistance given us during the long illness and death of our daughter, Louise Genett, also the Grange, Lady Maccabees and friends for the beautiful floral tributes.

KALKASKA FIRE-SWEPT

Sunday Evening Loss Over $100,000—Insurance Light.

Forty-Four Business Houses Burned Out—Rebuilding Will Soon Begin.

Its business section a heap of smouldering ruins Kalkaska's loyal and courageous citizens are already planning new and better buildings to replace those wiped out by fire which raged all Sunday evening. The loss by fire is now placed at $100,000.

Fire started, supposedly from spontaneous combustion, in the building owned by ex-Senator A. E. Palmer and fanned by a strong breeze quickly spread to surrounding property. The local fire brigade worked nobly, but was unable to check the spread of the flames. An appeal was sent to Traverse City for help, but the Traverse City department was unable to respond, owing to the fact that 4,000 feet of hose was needed and this would leave Traverse City entirely without protection. Then, again Traverse City has no engine capable of pumping water the distance required.

Following is a list of the buildings destroyed:

Palmer building, three-story brick, occupied by T. B. Hobbs, general store, Swaverly Telephone company and K. of P. lodge.

Cole Bros. building, three-story brick, occupied by Cole Bros. grocery, Greason's insurance office and the Masonic lodge.

Kalkaska City bank building, occupied by Kalkaska City bank and the Weekly Kalkaskian.

Glazier building, two-story brick, occupied by Glazier's dry goods and J. L. Boyd, attorney.

Colston's building, two-story frame, occupied by Colston's drug store and offices.

Stover building, occupied by A. G. Stover's store.

L. J. Milde's, restaurant building.

City barber shop, frame building.

Stewart building, occupied by Walker's jewelery story and Dr. Pearsall's offices.

Darby building, occupied by George Smith's hardware store.

A. G. Cornell's harness shop.

D. J. Larson's frame building, occupied by shoe store.

City Opera House block, occupied by the opera house, M. M. Lahner's hardware store, the Kalkaska Grocery company and offices.

While the Kalkaska City Bank building was burning a large wagon was backed through the front door and the heavy safe loaded on. It was dragged to a place of safety and the bank records and a large amount of money saved, as well as the safe itself, which is a valuable one.

Kalkaska is the county seat of Kalkaska county and is accredited in the last issue of the state gazetter with a population of 1,400.

It is 135 miles north of Grand Rapids and fifty-three miles South of Petoskey on the main line of the Grand Rapids and Indiana railroad and the Kalkaska branch of the Pere Marquette. The town was settled in 1870 and incorporated as a village in 1887.

It is an up to date, pretty little place, with electric lights, water works system, a fine court house, two banks, an opera house, good schools and two weekly papers.

The fire was not under control until late in the evening. Telephone connections were cut off.

Dynamite was resorted to in an effort to make a break in the path of the flames, but even this desperate measure was unavailing, for when the the fire reached the gap its strong ally, the wind, supplied the bellows which swept it unward.

With the coming on of night the falling of electric wires was another great disaster, leaving the town without the customary light.

Owing to the inadequate fire protection in the town insurance rates are high and most of the places were but partially covered. In spite of this added hardship Kalkaska people are far from disheartened and while the main street of the town still glowed and smoked in places the losers were planning the reconstruction. Business men pluckily declare that as soon as the insurance matters are adjusted rebuilding operations will begin.

DEMOCRATS IN SESSION

National Convention at Denver this Week—Bryan Will be the Choice.

The Democratic National Convention is being held at Denvor this week, with one of the largest crowds in attendance ever known in the history of the party. The convention was called to order Tuesday by National Chairman Taggart, who called Hon. Theodore E. Bell to the chair as temporary chairman. After Mr. Bell's speech the convention adjourned out of respect to Ex-President Cleveland, until today, when it will listen to the address of Permanent Chairman Hon. H. D. Clayton.

D. J. Campau, long the leader of Michigan Democracy, was defeated for member of the national committee by E. O. Wood, of Flint.

Mr. Bryan will probably be nominated for the presidency, as for vice-president no predictions are made.

WAS A GREAT CELEBRATION

Every Promise Made by Committee Was Carried Out.

CONTINUOUS FREE VAUDEVILLE SHOW

Ball Games Resulted in Victories for Charlevoix and East Jordan.

Boat Races Were Cut Some on Account of Harbor Regulations—No Accidents or Disorder.

Charlevoix again demonstrated her ability to celebrate the nation's birthday in a proper and fitting manner, carrying out, as near as they could, every promise made to its hundreds of visitors.

The morning opened with a light rain but the crowds still continued to come and soon the clouds cleared away and from then until the close it was an ideal day.

The storm made it necessary to postpone the forenoon ball game, the parade was a trifle late in starting, but from that time, until the close of the day, something was doing all the time for the entertainment of the visitors, who were present from all sections, and no disorders or accidents occurred to mar the day.

The men who are responsible for the success of the day and who worked hard for its success are:

J. Milo Eaton, chairman of the general committee; Glenn M. DuBois, Secretary; John J. Fagan, treasurer; and the executive committee divided into the following heads: Entertainment, A. J. Usher; parade and marshall of the day, E. B. Ward; decorations, Robt. M. A. Johnston; licenses, L. E. Smith; water sports, Bert Adams. The finance committee, which of course was the main thing, consisted of Dr. L. B. Bartlett, L. E. Smith and J. M. Lloyd. While these gentlemen were responsible for the departments under their charge, assistance was given them by various other citizens.

The parade, the first thing in the forenoon, was led by the Harbor Springs band followed by the mayor and aldermen in auto and Modern Woodmen on horseback, who presented a fine appearance. The rain interfered somewhat with the parade. Mr. Johnston had the town nicely decorated in the national colors.

The trapeze performer, Mr. Doty, gave excellent satisfaction at his several performances, and the high class vaudeville artists, Ouenda, Enola and Miss Anna Franke, kept the crowd entertained with the very best to be seen in that line.

The base ball games were both pulled off in the afternoon, Charlevoix winning the first game with Petoskey by a score of 6 to 3, and losing the last with East Jordan by 4 to 0.

The life-saving crew gave a successful drill followed by the boat races, which were taken by Speed launch, 1st prize, S. W. Swailes; 2nd, Dan Simonaw.

Fish boat, 1st prize, Herman Tysver.

Launch, 7 mile or under, 1st prize, Ed. Price, 2nd, S. W. Swailes; 3rd, Karl Young.

Paddle canoe, 1st prize Allie Moore.

The other winners have not as yet presented their certificates and drawn their money.

It became necessary to cut out some of the boat races on account of the harbor regulations.

In the evening and throughout the day, music of a high class was furnished by both the Central Lake and Harbor Springs bands.

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

The high license campaign of San Francisco disappoints its friends. Somehow it fails to secure the unanimity of action that was expected of it. There can be no doubt that the gentlemen who projected it were sincere and conscientious in their plans for what they considered real temperance work, but something went wrong with the working of the plans.

In order to create sentiment to sustain high license, a great "temperance assembly" was called, of which this city had never seen the like. A prominent religious association took the lead, a Doctor of Divinity presided, the participation of bishops, priests, and deacons showed the support of the churches. Prominent business men, mercantile associations, labor unions, the Anti-Saloon League, and apparently every organization aiming at civic betterment, except the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the Prohibitionists, were invited.

That was playing Hamlet with Hamlet left out, but the ghost walked in the play, and could not be laid.

The spirit of temperance reform appeared persistently and its voice was not for high license. It was an interesting meeting. The W. C. T. U. women were in evidence, but had no part or lot assigned to them. The president of San Francisco county, in behalf of the W. C. T. U. of this city, asked for an opportunity to present a token of appreciation to Judge Artman, the most distinguished guest. This could not be refused, and brought from him a magnificent tribute to the W. C. T. U. as a great factor in temperance reform.

A brilliant speaker was there to represent the Union Labor party, and when called upon, he astounded the audience by a telling speech for the principle of prohibition. He said that he had thought but little of the subject before, but that there could be but one question—if the saloon is right, it should be free, without a license at all, if it is wrong in itself, we have no business to grant a license, high or low.

So the big meeting went on, educating men away from the idea they came to advocate. Dr. Chapman excelled himself in arguments against any license, and Judge Artman declared that the affair ended in Prohibition with a big P.

San Francisco has passed a good curfew law, also an ordinance to prohibit smoking on street cars. The latter is meeting much disapproval and will be severely tested, but it is hoped that it will be retained.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union will meet with Mrs. Markham next Friday afternoon at 2:30. The following program will be rendered:

Devotionals, Rev. Bayles.
Business.
Duet, Misses Margery Weaver, Helen Parsons.
"Prohibition and the Negro," Mrs. John Burns.
Life Sketches of Jennie Cassidy, Mrs. B. B. Blair.
Solo, Miss Orlowski.
"The Temperance Tidal Wave," Mrs. B. P. Wilkinson.
Roll call of the southern states.
Violin Solo, Mrs. Davidson.

A Californian's Luck.

"The luckiest day of my life was when I bought a box of Bucklin's Arnica salve," writes Charles F. Budahn, of Tracy, California. "Two 25c boxes cured me of an annoying case of itching piles, which had troubled me for years and that yielded to no other treatment." Sold under guarantee at F. G. Hines & Co. drug store.

WIN THEIR OWN DOWERS.

Summer Profits to Be Banked For the Wedding Day.

There is romantic and picturesque intent at least in the plan of three pretty young women in organizing the Dot society, the same meaning that every member will work hard and diligently to accumulate a "dot" against the expensive days immediately following marriage. This society is not a press agent invention, and the young women are not fictitious. They are Alida Nowlin Brown of 144 West Eighty-third street, New York, and Charlotte M. Robeson and Louise Gardner Phillips of Boston. They will inherit comfortable fortunes and already are possessed of enough to provide liberal marriage portions; but, being idealistic, they seek a "dot" dignified by honest labor. Of course there may be an incentive to their scheme in the fact that their families spend the summer in Northport, N. Y., and that the "dot" is to be earned there by scientific gardening. Still, the organizers of the Dot society are convinced that they are moved by the present struggle of woman to assert herself and to gain an equal position with men. To the cynical judge their undertaking smacks of the suffragette, but they protest to the contrary.

The details of the Dot society provide for twenty members. Articles of incorporation have been drawn. If twenty engaged girls can be recruited, so much the better. A plot of land has been rented in Newport, and there it is intended all twenty shall engage in the growing of garden produce, the cultivation of flowers and mushrooms, bee culture and the raising of chickens. Instead of swinging in hammocks or skimming the roads in automobiles this employment will mean the summer's pastime, and all profits will be deposited in a Northport bank and divided share and share alike when the summer wanes and the autumn chills drive the young women back to steam heat in the city.

Miss Brown is enthusiastic about the plan. "We want to have 'dots' that are really our own," she said. "It is delightful, of course, to receive fat checks as wedding gifts, but the satisfaction must be multiplied a hundredfold to the bride who writes the check herself and hands it to her husband as her own exclusive 'dot.' That is the spirit behind our Dot society, which has not been promoted simply because we need the money, but because money you earn is so much nicer than money you receive as a gift. Many of our friends have smiled at us in a superior way, but that has only acted as an encouragement. We are not dismayed."

THE "MERRY WIDOW" HAT.

Still Another Grievance of a Cynical Subway Strap Hanger.

The "Merry Widow" hat has been unmercifully treated by all the professional and amateur humorists. We have heard of a sparrow nesting in the foliage of one of these hats, of an indignant citizen in Connecticut making a "Merry Widow" a target for his shotgun, and likewise we have been moved to merriment by the tale from staid old Philadelphia that an express train was delayed by a "Merry Widow" jamming in a Pullman door and holding the fair owner a prisoner for five minutes. Other extravagant stories have been told, but none of them possessed of the fine zest of the man in a New York subway train who discovered that the "Merry Widow" hat belongs not to the wearer, but the wearer to the hat. Of course the politeness of this carping mortal is not to be commended, but to condone his offense in this respect it is only necessary to think of the exasperation. The sharp straw rim of an excessively overgrown "Merry Widow" scraped the back of the neck of this particular strap hanger, and he turned in some indignation to see not the head or the shoulders of the owner of the thing, but a wonderful expanse of straw and scarlet wings threatened with destruction in a crush in the door. "Let the hat out!" commanded the sour individual, and in view of all the pathetic facts it seems that is the last word in the indictment of a hat that is a criminal by instinct and training.

HOUSEHOLD NOTES.

Boil six peach kernels in a quart of milk to be used for custard. It will improve the flavor.

In washing ecru or Arabian curtains rinse them in water which has been colored with coffee and add a little coffee to the starch.

Candles will burn slowly and steadily through the evening if they are kept on the ice all day. Save the candle ends, melt, add an equal quantity of turpentine, and you will have a good polish for floors and oilcloth.

Peanut butter is made by macerating fresh browned peanuts to a fine pulp. They must be run through a chopping machine, or if finely crushed can be run through a coffee mill. The nuts are then mixed with enough butter so that the mixture can be spread on bread.

Conundrums.

What gives more milk than a cow? A milk cart. Speaking of milk, have you heard of the strange case of the Boston baby being brought up on elephant's milk? It was the elephant's baby.

Why is President Roosevelt like "America?" Because he is the national hint hymn.

"An actor should be devoted to his art, should he not?"

"Yes," answered Mr. Stormington Barnes, "he should be, but too many of us are prone to regard the practice of our profession merely as a series of disagreeable interruptions to a pecuniable career." Atlanta Journal.

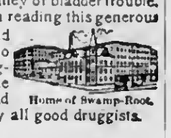
DO YOU GET UP WITH A LAME BACK?

Kidney Trouble Makes You Miserable

Almost everybody who reads the newspapers is sure to know of the wonderful cures made by Dr Kilmer's Swamp-Root the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It is the great medical triumph of the nineteenth century; discovered after years of scientific research by Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, and it is wonderfully successful in promptly curing lame back, kidney, bladder, uric acid troubles and Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is not recommended for everything but if you have kidney, liver or bladder trouble it will be found just the remedy you need. It has been tested in so many ways, in hospital work, in private practice, among the helpless too poor to purchase relief and has proved so successful in every case that a special arrangement has been made by which all readers of this paper who have not already tried it, may have a sample bottle sent free by mail, also a book telling more about Swamp-Root and how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. The regular fifty cent and dollar sizes are sold by all good druggists.



Home of Swamp-Root.

Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

THE MAN OF THE HOUR

CHAPTER XV—Continued.

"Dallas," groaned Gibbs, "for heaven's sake don't look at me like that! I can't bear it! I love you! And I"—

"And I in my criminal folly promised to marry you!" she stormed. "I bet you kiss me. My lips are degraded forever by that touch of yours. I let you speak words of love to me. I broke a brave man's heart for your worthless sake. Oh, the shame—the horrible shame of it all! But I shall thank God on my kneeled knees that I have found out the truth before it was too late."

"Too late?" he echoed in horror, his voice rising almost to a scream. "Dallas, you're not going to throw me over? You aren't"—

"Now leave me, please. Your presence sickens me."

"Scott Gibbs," she answered quietly, a world of wondering scorn in her level tones, "you do not even know how vile a thing you are. Now leave me, please. Your presence sickens me."

He tried to speak, but something of the ineffable contempt in her steady eyes silenced him. Without a word he slunk out of the room and out of her life.

Phelan, agog with eagerness for the coming struggle in the aldermanic chamber, hustled past through the corridor. The alderman had many duties today, and as the performance of each brought him nearer to his longed for revenge on Horrigan he was positively beaming with righteous bliss. Dallas caught sight of him.

"Alderman!" she called faintly.

Phelan halted, still in haste to fulfill his mission.

"Could—could I see Mr. Bennett?" she asked, a new timidity transforming her rich voice. "Do you know where I can find him?"

"Is it important? He's pretty busy."

"Very important!" she pleaded. "I must see him at once."

"I'll look him up," agreed Phelan, "but I warn you he's too busy to see you just yet. S'pose you let me take you back to the mootin'? Our bill's comin' up in a few minutes now, an' you don't want to miss it. Then I'll scare up his honor for you as soon as he's got a spare minute an' bring you back here to him. Sorry to keep you waitin'," he went on as they started toward the council chamber, "but before this session's over all sorts of things is due to explode, an' we ain't hardly at the beginnin' of the excitement yet. We're goin' to make a Fourth of July celebration in a giant powder fact'ry look like a deaf mute fun'ral by the time we're done."

CHAPTER XVII.

"HE'S in there," observed Phelan in high excitement, jerking his thumb toward a door leading off the committee room, "an' I've sent for Wainwright an' Horrigan to meet your honor here. An' I've fixed it so the Borough bill won't come up for ten minutes. Now, all that's left is to touch the punk to the fuse an' set off the whole gaddy bunch of fireworks under 'em. Gee, but it's good to be stuck to this old world just for the sake of bein' here today an' seein' what I'm due to see!"

The alderman chuckled, but his joyous anticipation found no reflection in Bennett's white set face. The two were in the committee room, whither Phelan had repaired after depositing Dallas in a chair beside her brother at the meeting and attending to one or two details of greater import.

"Yes," went on Phelan, again nodding mysteriously toward the farther door, "he's in there, trained to the minute for the blowout. There's some one else wants to see you, too—some one who'll make more of a hit with you if I'm not overplayin' my hand. But good news can wait. There's no little of it in this measly life that it gen'rally has to. I"—

From the corridor Horrigan stamped into the committee room, Wainwright at his heels.

"Well!" cried the boss defiantly, glaring at Bennett and ignoring Phelan. "You sent for us. What do you want?"

"One moment!" intervened Wainwright. "We are beaten. We admit that without argument. So we need waste no time going over details."

"Have you sent for us to say what you'll sell out for?" queried Horrigan coarsely, "because if you have you've only to name your price. You've got us where you want us. We've got to pay."

"I should have thought," replied Bennett, with no shade of offense, "you would know by this time that I have no 'price.'"

"Then what do you want?"

"Nothing—from you."

"Why did you send word you wanted to see us?" growled Horrigan impatiently as he and Wainwright, uninvited, seated themselves at the table.

"To tell you," answered Alwyn, glancing from one to the other, "that every step you two have taken in this whole infamous transaction from the very first has been carefully followed, and, to use your own phrase, we've got you with the goods."

"Same old bluff!" commented Horrigan contemptuously, with a reassuring wink at the somewhat less confident Wainwright.

"By tomorrow noon," resumed Bennett, "you will both be indicted on a charge of bribery. Even now there are detectives on the watch for you. Escape is impossible."

"Rot!" sneered Horrigan. "You've no evidence that will indict, and you know it. Even if you had, don't I control most of the judges and the district attorney's office besides? Swell chance you'll have of getting a conviction past that bunch! Bah! You talk like a man made of mud. I s'pose it's the affair of those Roberts notes you're counting on. That don't feaze me any. My lawyer can twist that around so it'll look like a charity gift. No, no, youngster. You'll have to think of something better if"—

"And, anyhow," put in Wainwright nervously, "you can't prove any connection on my part. There's nothing against me or"—

"I think there is," retorted Bennett, wheeling about on the financier. "And even if I can't nail the Roberts bribery to you I've plenty more counts to hold you on."

"All these generalities and vague accusations prove nothing, Bennett," answered Wainwright, drawing courage from Horrigan's colossal calm and speaking with more assurance. "Mr. Horrigan and I are not schoolboys to be scared by baseless threats. This is all guesswork on your part. Come, now, name one specific charge you can prove."

"One will be enough to convince you?" asked Alwyn. "Well, then, how about this as a first guess? Mr. Horrigan's bribe of $2,000,000 in money and 25,000 shares of Borough stock for agreeing to put through the Borough franchise? For 'guesswork' that doesn't seem to me very bad."

Wainwright's hard mask of a face twitched convulsively, but the steely brain that had carried him unshaken through a thousand risky financial deals came at once to his rescue.

"An excellent guess," he agreed in splendidly feigned amusement, "but unfortunately the courts demand proof before convicting a man, and there is no proof whatever of"—

"Are you sure?" queried Bennett. Turning to Phelan, he added:

"Please ask Mr. Thompson to come in."

The alderman, with an expansive grin, flung open the door of the farther room.

At sound of his secretary's name Wainwright had sprung to his feet and, dumfounded, was leaning heavily on the table, staring across the threshold of the suddenly opened door.

There, framed in the dark doorway, his face deathly pale, his eyes glowing with a strange light as of murder, stood Cynthia's brother.

Harry Garrison.

His presence in the city hall was no mere chance, but the climax of a series of conferences between Bennett, Phelan and himself, dating from the night of the administration ball, when, despite his own resolve, the secretary's hand had been forced by the inquisitive alderman and his ideality revealed.

Bennett had been let into the secret next day, and the trio had had a three hour talk from which Phelan had emerged with the gleeful air of one who had unexpectedly found a $1,000 bill. Thompson, too, had left that conference with a look of calm, intense satisfaction that transfigured him.

Other conversations had followed, one of them in the presence of notary, stenographer and lawyers. The trap at last was ready to be sprung.

The thunder for the first time in his nine year close association with the secretary met the younger man's gaze without seeing the latter droop in deferential submission. Now he received back look for look from his former abject slave, and it was his own glance that wavered before that concentrated glare of hate.

"Thompson!" he cried, and his voice bore a world of incredulous reproach.

Before him stood the one man on earth in whom Wainwright had ever placed implicit trust; to whom he had confided his gravest business secrets; the man whom he had so shrewdly tested in countless ways and who had proved staunchly incorruptible and loyal, and now Thompson apparently confronted him in the role of traitor—of exultant spy.

"Thompson!" he exclaimed once more, almost with a groan, as the secretary advanced into the room until only the width of the table separated employer and employee.

Then the newcomer spoke for the first time, in an oddly muffled voice, as though fighting desperately for self restraint.

"No!" he contradicted. "Thompson no longer. Henceforth I am Garrison."

Wainwright's face grew gray, breathless, unbelieving, he peered across at the pallid features of his new foe, tracing in them the likeness to the old friend whose ruin and death he had caused. The haunting resemblance that had often vaguely occurred to him when watching Thompson at work now returned in double force. But now, as in a flash, it was explained, and he knew that his secretary spoke the truth.

"Yes," went on Thompson in that same choked, struggling intonation, "I am Harry Garrison. You wrecked my father's life. You drove him to suicide. You blasted his memory. You beggared his children. I am his son—Harry Garrison. Now do you begin to understand?"

"You see, Mr. Wainwright," intervened Bennett, as the secretary's pent up rage strangled the words in his throat, "my guesswork has a fairly reliable backing."

But Wainwright did not hear. He still stared, as one hypnotized, into the blazing eyes of the man he had trusted.

"You've—you've played me false!" he managed to gasp at length. "You have"—

"Sure he has!" cut in Horrigan. "What'd I tell you last summer, Wainwright? I said then you were foolish to trust him so. I said he'd stand watching. The minute I set eyes on that lantern jawed, glum face of his"—

"Played me false!" muttered Wainwright again, dazed and doubting the evidence of his own senses.

"Played you false?" jeered Thompson. "Played you false? Why else did I become your servant? What else have I been waiting all these horrible years for? I've sat at your desk and listened to your orders, never venturing to say my soul was my own. Now you'll listen to me."

"Why do you bother with the little traitor, Wainwright?" scoffed Horrigan.

But the financier was standing motionless, leaning on the table, his fingers spasmodically gripping its edge till the knuckles grew white. Ridiculously like a cowed prisoner before the bar of justice, he faced his fiery eyed young judge.

"They sent for me," went on Thompson brokenly, jerkily, scarce intelligible as the suppressed hatred of a decade battled for expression. "They sent for me. My father had killed himself. My mother lay dead, struck down by grief. Our honored old name was defiled. My sister was a pauper. Who had done all this? You! Oh, they hushed it up, but I found it out! I found it out! And by my murdered father's body I knelt and swore I'd pay you for it. I'd pay you if it cost me my life. I would ruin you in name and fortune, as you ruined my father, and then I'd kill you, as you killed him! I'd"—

"And then I'd kill you, as you killed my father."

With an effort that left him haggard and trembling, Thompson forced himself to calmer speech and continued:

"I answered your advertisement for a secretary. I had no experience, yet out of ninety applicants you chose me. That was fate. I knew then that one day I should have you at my feet, as now I have. Fate fought for me. I made myself necessary for you. I obeyed your hardest orders. I found out ways to please you. I fetched and carried for you. I ran to anticipate your lightest wish, as though I was your adoring son. It was 'I hope you're satisfied, sir,' and 'Let me do that for you, sir,' and 'I am glad to work overtime for you, sir, any time you wish,' while every minute I had to fight hard to keep from striking you dead!"

"I must go!" groaned Wainwright, shuddering. "I can't stand this. I"—

"Oh, I made you think me a paragon!" resumed the youth. "You took to testing my honesty and loyalty in clever ways that you thought I'd never discover. I stood the tests. Then you trusted me. You fool! As if the fact that I wasn't a crook proved I wasn't your enemy! You could see no farther than dollars and cents. When I didn't steal those or sell the market tips you gave me you thought I was incorruptible and devoted to your interests. And all the time I"—

Marlin

THE snow and rain, rushes and sand inseparable from duck and goose shooting never bother the hunter who is using a Marlin Model 19 12 gauge repeating shotgun, the best all-around gun in the market.

The ejection is from the side (an exclusive Marlin feature) and the closed breech bolt covers the action keeping out all foreign matter which so often clogs repeating shotguns.

The Marlin automatic safety prevents the accidental opening of the action when firing, and holds the breech shut until after explosion in cases of hang-fire; the solid top of frame is always a protection between your head and the cartridge.

The man who loves a gun needs the 1907 Marlin Book. It is full of gun information, has the answer to every gun question, contains 144 pages of live matter. FREE! for 2 stamps postage.

WITH the time for the primary election only seven weeks away, the campaigning for the Republican nomination for governor goes briskly on. Governor F. M. Warner and Lieutenant Governor Kelly making a continuous time of it in the governor's behalf, each traveling in autos, one speaking until the other comes up then away to the next stopping place. Auditor General Bradley is also out with an auto giving the reasons why he should be the chosen one, and good-roads Earle is in the game, challenging the others to debate the questions with him. Governor Warner seems to be in the lead, although it is going to be a tight squeeze for any one to get the required 40 per cent.

We have heard of only one candidate for the republican nomination for state senator in this district, the present incumbent, Senator Ming, of Cheboygan.

For congress, the contest is between Francis H. Dodds of Mt. Pleasant, and George G. Covell of Traverse City. It is the COURIER'S opinion that Mr. Covell's previous experience in legislative bodies, and as United States Attorney coupled with his acknowledged ability and popularity makes him nearly an ideal candidate for the position. Every day assurances of support are coming to him from the southern counties and the northern counties are enthusiastic for him. It looks as if Mr. Dodds would have to wait until the district is changed for his chance.

Up to this time no entries have been made by the other parties, all of whom are required to nominate candidates for governor and lieutenant governor by the primary method.

HON. Frank West Rollins, the originator of the old Home Week idea, gives a good common-sense talk about the young man and the farm in the April 10th Farm and Fireside. He says:

"While farming does not promise the largest rewards in the way of wealth or fame, it offers compensations that may be as attractive and satisfying. A competent farmer with a good farm is assured of a comfortable living and can win a moderate fortune. He has the privilege of constant association with his family. He enjoys the greatest degree of personal and business independence. His products are articles of universal use. If one market will not take them, another will. He has no occassion to fawn upon clients or cringe to magnates. Commercial panics rarely affect him. His goods are still necessary; and while their value may be less, the cost of production is often more than enough lower at such times to make up the difference. In fact, his margin of profit is often greatest in years of despression. While farm life is laborious, there is often variety about it that contrasts pleasantly with the monotony of a life spent at a bench or the desk. To the lover of home, farm life is delightful, in that it is a constant process of home development. Each tree and vine acquires a personal value to him far greater than its worth in money. All the domestic animals are his pets and friends. A well kept farm is a bit of landscape gardening that helps to make home beautiful and is a tribute to the character of its owner."

A Piano at a Nominal Price.

Chicago's largest music house, Lyon & Healy, announces a Triple Clearing Sale of pianos. Nearly one thousand splendid instruments are offered without reserve until all are sold. In this stock are all the fine new Mehlin, Hardman, Ivers & Pond, Smith & Nixon—and other noted pianos formerly owned by the Thompson Music Co.; the Healy Music Co. and the big F. G. Thearle Piano Co. All these concerns were bought out for spot cash by Lyon & Healy and the public may now share the advantage. In this sale are also a number of Steinway and Weber pianos. Upright pianos neat instruments at $100, $120, $110, $150, $165, $190, $200 and upwards. This is an unprecedented opportunity that will not occur again. Any piano not proving entirely satisfactory may be returned at their expense. Address Lyon & Healy, 77 Adams street, Chicago. Distance is no obstacle, for in proportion to the saving to be made the freight charges are insignificant. Any banker will assure you of the entire responsibility of Lyon & Healy, and their record of 44 years for honorable dealing. Write today so as to avoid disappointment.

FEMININE VANITY.

The Jewish and Egyptian Women Were Arrant Coquettes.

Feminine vanity is not the product of our effete civilization, but is as old as the history of the world.

The Jewish and Egyptian women were arrant coquettes and well versed in the artificialities of the toilet. When Jezebel learned of the approach of Jehu she sought to enhance her charms by painting her face and blackening her eyes with antimony.

Judith before she proceeded on her murderous mission to the tent of Holofernes bathed and perfumed her person with infinite care and wrapped herself in a splendid veil, in whose voluminous folds she concealed her cruel weapon. The Roman belles of the empire dyed their hair blond, red and even blue, according to the caprice of the moment. They used cosmetics of every kind to excess and, like the Moorish women, augmented the luster of their eyes by means of antimony. They also pencilled their eyebrows with a bodkin blackened in the smoke of frankincense.

Wealthy women bathed in asses' milk and slept with their faces poulticed with bread steeped in asses' milk in order to efface wrinkles. Even poets sang the praises of certain cosmetics, and Ovid wrote a laudatory poem on the merits of a preparation which, he asserted, preserved the freshness of the skin to old age. It was a curious mixture and was compounded of lily roots, yolks of eggs, hartshorn, gum benzoin, flour and honey, which were all boiled together.

Pliny mentions a species of face powder made of earth from the island of Chio dissolved in vinegar. Juvenal writes that the countenances of the Roman women were disfigured with this supposed beautifier. Among the Roman ladies it was the fashion to be very pale, as red cheeks were not deemed aristocratic. To attain this desirable pallor a quantity of chalk was rubbed on the face.

Many of the cosmetics in use in Greece and Rome have been discovered among ancient relics. Antimony, the oldest of them all, has been found in the utensils belonging to the stone age.

How to Apply a Mustard Plaster.

The convenience of the bought mustard plaster is so great that it has practically superseded the homemade one. It does not burn so easily as the latter, but, even so, care must be taken in applying it. To avoid chill, dip the plaster in warm instead of cold water before applying. Do not remove it at the first lament of the patient that it burns. The object of a mustard plaster is to burn, and there is no reason to put one on if it is to be removed too soon. On the other hand, it is unreasonably careless to allow a plaster to blister. Keep a watch on it, and when the flesh seems distinctly red, with a redness that does not quickly fade, remove the plaster. Dry off the spot, apply a little vaseline or cold cream and cover with a soft piece of linen or old handkerchief.

At producing hunger and distress and misery for those who work the capitalist system seems to be an unqualified success.—Exchange.

NITROGEN FERTILIZING.

Cowpeas a Good Medium For Enriching the Worn out Soil.

Besides growing on most any soil cowpeas are valuable from the fact that they are legumes and have the power of fixing through the agency of bacteria the free nitrogen of the air.

NITROGEN NODULES ON COWPEA ROOTS.

making it available as plant food. In this respect they rank close to clover and alfalfa and have the additional advantage of being able to grow on land where no one would even think of sowing alfalfa.

Like the other legumes, they may need to have the soil inoculated with bacteria, and this may be done either by scattering dirt from a good cowpea field over the patch to be sown or probably by scattering the manure of animals fed on cowpea hay. When inoculated they will fix as much nitrogen in the soil in 90 to 100 days as clover will in eighteen months.

The nodules on the roots of a cowpea, the top of which was thirteen inches high and bore ten pods, are shown in the accompanying picture. On stronger land the yield of peas was less per plant and there were fewer nodules on the roots, owing to the fact that the richer soil went more to the development of big vines, some of them being four feet long. From this it is easily seen that the fertilizing value of the root decreases as the soil increases in richness, while the contrary is true of the fertilizing value of the top.

The picture shows more plainly than can be told in words the benefit to be derived by leaving the cowpea roots in the ground when the crop is harvested. In order to prevent as much as possible the waste of nitrogen by evaporation and the washing of soil by storms the field can be seeded to rye immediately after harvest. The rye will absorb the fertilizing properties as they become free and keep them in storage till spring, when it can be plowed under, giving the soil not only the fertility gathered by cowpeas, but also that gathered by the rye, with the addition of humus, of which our poorer fields are greatly in need.

Cowpeas will not grow in a cold soil but will lie there and soon rot. For this reason they should not be planted until two or three weeks after corn planting time. Stir up a good seed bed and double the rows with a corn planter, put in shallow and sow five to eight quarts per acre. These will have to be cultivated two or three times, but you should not plow them while they are wet either from rain or dew or the dirt will stick to them and they will rot. If you use the drill, sow three to five pecks per acre, putting them about one and one-half inches deep. They will need no further cultivation unless there comes a rain before they get through the ground. In case of rain harrow lightly to break the crust or most of them will fail to get through.

CARE OF BIRDS.

How to Protect Feathered Pets From Red Mites.

Unless great cleanliness is adopted with all cage birds insect pests will prove most troublesome. It is by no means pleasant to find several insects on the hands when the cage is touched or moved, a sure sign that the unfortunate bird is infested with parasites, generally the result of dirt. If a cage bird is seen to be picking itself continually under the wings and vent and to be restless and fidget about on the perch at night, insects most certainly be suspected. The bird should be caught and dusted with insect powder and a little quassia or alum added to the bath water. If the perches are made hollow for about an inch at each end, the insects will conceal themselves in the hollows in the daytime. The perches can then be taken out of the cage frequently and dipped in boiling water, getting rid in this way of numbers of the pests, says the Brooklyn Eagle. An old fashioned plan is to hang a white cloth over the cage at night, leaving room for ventilation. Many of the insects will retire into the folds at daylight, when the cloth can be carefully removed and dropped into hot water.

One of the greatest obstacles to the successful rearing of young canaries is the small insect known as the red mite, or canary bug. The attentions of this bloodthirsty little parasite are responsible for the deaths of many hundreds of nesting canaries annually. Want of cleanliness is one of the chief reasons for the appearance of this pest. How to get rid of it when it has once taken up its abode in the cage and on the birds is a problem that has puzzled many canary breeders. Innumerable experiments have been made. Turpentine, paraffin, carbolic, tobacco, quassia, soda and numberless other things have been tried, with varying results.

Fir tree oil will kill these insects and when applied to the joints of the cage will prevent others coming for some time. Benzine collas used for removing grease from cloth will kill them quickly but it soon evaporates, and the effect lasts for only a brief period. At the commencement of each canary breeding season all cages that are not new should be thoroughly cleansed with hot water and soda or with soap and water with which some disinfectant is freely mixed. When this is dry all the crevices as well as the wires should be painted with paraffin or with fir tree oil.

After the hen canary has made her nest and laid her eggs they should be sprinkled with insect powder. If there are red mites present after the young birds are hatched they will be seen in the ears and nostrils of the nestlings. A pale appearance about the mouth and the body looking white instead of red should always cause investigation to be made of the young ones. With constant cleanliness and as much air and ventilation as possible in the bird room parasites ought not to prove troublesome.

How to Make Javelle Water.

To make javelle water dissolve one pound of salsoda in one quart of boiling water. Dissolve half a pound of chloride of lime in two quarts of cold water. Let the mixture settle and then pour off the clear liquid. Mix this with the dissolved soda, bottle and keep in a dark place. The French use this preparation a great deal in the work of the laundry. For whitening clothing they put two or three tablespoonfuls of the liquid into the water in which they boil the clothing. To remove stains from white goods dilute the javelle water with its own volume of cold water. Soak the article in this until the stain disappears; then rinse thoroughly in several clear waters and finally in diluted ammonia water. Javelle water removes almost all stains and all colors; therefore it should not be used on colored articles. If articles are allowed to remain in it for a long time it will injure the fabric.

How to Turn a Fold.

When turning a fold, either bias or straight, it is hard sometimes to fold it evenly and quickly. Fold and lap a strip of paper, securing it with a pin or mucilage, and make it the width you wish your fold to be when it is finished. Now run the fold wide enough to allow for seams through this paper gauge and press the fold, letting the paper hang in front of the iron. This process turns, presses and finishes the braid in a uniform width

A Great Combination.

To the poultry yard let us add the orchard. They work in perfect harmony. They supplement each other perfectly, and the orchard can be planned to be the main thing in the future or permitted to remain always in second place, according to one's predilections. Poultry, besides being money makers, are to the orchardist money savers. They are of great value, inasmuch as they destroy myriads of insect enemies, many before they are born into their fruit destroying stage of development. They are death on borers; hence are time savers, for borers let go for man only by strong persuasion. They furnish much fertilizing material and keep down weed growth. They eat fruit falling from insect attack and destroy the pests. Therefore from every point of view fruit and poultry is a great combination.—H. B. Fullerton.

Dramatic Note.

There's nothing makes a man feel queerer than to have his wife describe a play to him all wrong when he can't correct her because he told her he didn't go to it the night he worked late at the office.—New York Press.

A Subtle Distinction.

Ned, the friend of Bill, the fish merchant, surveyed him reproachfully.

"Bill," he said solemnly, "I ain't the chap to round on a pal, but that there fisk you sold my missus this mornin' was—well, the cat ain't been near the house since and"—

"Ned," replied the friend of his youth sadly, "mine's a difficult job I've got to make a living, and if the fish is good I sells it and does pretty well. If it ain't good I sells it and does pretty well also. It ain't my fault; I never sent the stuff wrong. But you're a pal o' mine, and I'll let you know 'ow you can find out for yourself 'ow things are."

"Yes," said Ned, eagerly.

"If you 'ears me shout 'Fine fresh fish' you can reckon it is fresh fish, but if I shout 'Fish, oh!'—well, it is fish, oh!'"—London Tit-Bits.

Moon Blindness In Horses.

It is said that "moon blindness" in a horse is caused by "wolf teeth"—two small surplus teeth just in front of the first upper premolars, one on each side of the upper jaw. An authority says: "The 'wolf teeth' do not cause eye disease or any other harm and usually are not discovered until the eye disease appears. The eye trouble is 'periodic ophthalmia' (moon blindness), which is hereditary and incurable. Thousands upon thousands of horses suffer from this eye disease, yet have not a 'wolf tooth' in their heads. The important matter to remember in connection with periodic ophthalmia is not the significance of the 'wolf tooth,' but the necessity and importance of rejecting from breeding operations all afflicted with periodic ophthalmia, or cataract, which results from repeated attacks."

Do You Count Your Steps?

Do you count your steps? It is a silly and useless practice, but at the back of his head this writer is always counting his steps. He can tell you the number of steps that lead from his flat in Kensington to South Kensington station (there is an unlucky thirteen at the station) until he has mounted to the office window. And when he put the question to his wife she could not tell the number of the stairs she had climbed (they are twenty) for three years to the first floor flat.—London Chronicle.

Practical Laundry Bags.

Attractive and practical laundry bags are made up from the common brown crash combined with cretonne, the latter preferably in tapestry designs. The upper parts, two-thirds, will be of the crash and the bottom of cretonne.

The tops have the hoop finish, and the soiled articles can be released from the bottom, so that such a bag is extremely handy.

Waste paper baskets to match may be bought which are made to fold. For vacation use these accessories would prove very useful.

The fourth annual convention of the Michigan State Nurses's association was held at Ludington last week. The following officers were elected; President, Miss E. L. Parker, Lansing; first vice-president, Mrs. Foy, Battle Creek; second vice-president, Mrs. G. O. Switzer, Ludington; treasurer, Miss Agnes Deans, Detroit.

Three people were injured Friday afternoon, none fatally, when Ann Arbor passenger train No. 1, north bound, was wrecked shortly after 4 o'clock, five miles northwest of Cadillac. Spreading rails was the cause of the accident. Those injured were:

Mrs. Anna Everden, editor of the St. Louis Republican leader; face cut and badly bruised.

Samuel Schulmen, 55 E. Ninety-second street, New York city. Internal injuries to chest and stomach. He was taken to a hospital at Cadillac.

Mrs. Benjamin Howard, of Bonghtenville, O., right arm broken.

The train was a solid vestibule with five coaches, all well packed with about 350 excursionists. That several were not killed is miraculous, as the entire train plunged into a sandbank and marsh, the combination smoker turning over on its side. The front coaches were buried deep in the sand and marsh and it will be with only great difficulty that they can be released.

Three years ago a similiar wreck occurred at the same place, but no one was killed.

Louis Richards of Twin Lake, and his cow, deceased, have been the cause of a damage suit which began in the justice court at Twin Lake. Richards was awarded 6 cents damages, thence proceeded to the circuit court on an appeal. The court ruled against Richards. The supreme court has settled the case for all time.

One of the cows wandered out on the ice of Twin Lake, walked into a hole left by Fred Walz and others, who were cutting ice, and was drowned. Richards brought suit against the ice cutters and recovered his six cents damages, only to lose in the circuit court, where it was held Richards had been guilty of contributory negligence.

The learned justices gave the case considerable attention and at last decided that the opinion of the circuit court should be affirmed.

Democratic State Chairman John T. Winship said a few days ago that the Democrats might have no state primary this year, but might nominate their candidates for governor and lieutenant governor at a convention. Now comes Deputy Secretary State Mears, saying that as he reads the primary law, in its amended form, it is mandatory on all political parties to nominate candidates for governor and lieutenant governor at primaries. The party that does not so nominate, as he reads the law, cannot have the names of its candidates for governor and lieutenant governor printed upon the official ballot on election day next November. The places must be left blank, but voters can write in the names of their choice.

The secretary of state will put the matter up to the attorney general for an opinion.

The reason why a Democratic state primary seems a matter of indifference is not because the party leaders prefer a convention to a primary. It is that nobody is disposed to spend the time and money getting petitions to be nominated for an office when, though winning at the primaries, it is a foregone conclusion, will meet defeat on election day.

Col. Jack Crawford and Dr. R. A. McCrary have bought 1,400 acres of land near Turtle lake and will establish an Angora goat farm. Fourteen thousand dollars in cash was paid for the land and several thousand more will be expended for choice stock. Col. Crawford is the well-known "poet scout."

Peter Holmes, aged twenty-three a Kentuckian and known in Antrim as a bad man and fighter, was shot and dangerously wounded by Deputy Sheriff Sherman, of Antrim county Sunday night. The wounded man is unconscious with a bullet hole under his chin and the officer refuses to talk of the shooting other than to say that Holmes interfered while he was trying to arrest a companion of Holmes for drunkenness. A physician who is attending Holmes gives but little hope of his recovery.

It is stated that Holmes and his companion were drunk and raising a disturbance in the streets of the village of Antrim. The officer tried to quiet them and they showed fight, whereupon Sherman placed Holmes companion under arrest and started with his prisoner to the lockup, when Holmes interfered and tried to take the prisoner from the officer. The deputy drew his gun and fired at Holmes, the bullet lodging in his neck under the chin. The prisoner escaped.

BOARD CUTTING PUZZLE.

How a Carpenter Fitted a Square Plank Into an Oblong Hole.

Boys who have tinkered at carpentering know how hard it is sometimes to get a board to fit a certain place. The old story is told of a ship's carpenter who was roused up in the night to repair a leak in the hold of the vessel. He found the hole was 9 by 16 inches in size, while the only plank he had was 12 by 12 inches. Being an ingenious fellow, it soon dawned on him that by cutting the plank in steps and putting the two pieces together again, as shown in the diagram, they would just fill in the 9 by 16 hole. You can make a good puzzle of this by taking a piece of square cardboard and then asking your friends how they would cut it in order to make it fit a hole that was longer and narrower.

MIMIC FIREWORKS.

A Brilliant Parlor Display Made With Simple Materials.

Miniature fireworks of a brilliant and beautiful kind may be produced in the parlor with very simple materials, a candle, a clay pipe and several strips of tin foil. Nor is there the least danger in the experiment to either the person or the furniture. The only precaution necessary is to spread a sheet of paper over the table on which the candle stands.

Get a number of strips of tin foil as it comes around chocolate and press them closely together. The strips should be about an inch in width. By means of the pipe blow the flame of the candle against the tin foil, and the increase of oxygen thus given to the flame and the corresponding increase of heat will fuse the metal and make it fall to the table in brilliant white globules, which run in radiating lines. If the flame be powerful enough to make the metal melt and burn rapidly, the effect will be very pretty and the light very brilliant.

Wicked Thing—a Game.

One of the players represents the wicked thing. He hides somewhere, and the other players walk around cautiously, singing:

How joyfully we'd play and sing
If there were not a wicked thing!
The clock strikes one! The clock strikes two!
The wicked thing is watching you.
The clock strikes three! The clock strikes four!
The wickest thing is at the door!

The wicked thing jumps from its hiding place the moment the last word is sung, and if it succeeds in catching another player the captured one must take the part.

Cat and Mouse.

Two players, the cat and the mouse, are blindfolded and tied to a tree or post by two long strings. The mouse is given two pieces of wood, or a nutmeg grater and nutmeg answer the purpose much better. These the mouse grates together occasionally to give the cat a clew as to her whereabouts. As both players are blindfolded, the cat is sometimes close beside the mouse when she hears the grating and can easily pounce upon her. When caught the mouse becomes the cat, and the cat joins the spectators, while a new mouse is chosen to take the place.

The Telegraph Plant.

There is a queer shrub growing in India whose trifoliate leaves move in a way much like railway telegraph signals. The two side leaves rise and fall alternately for a time and then are still, soon starting into motion again. The leaves are most active in the early morning. Sometimes many of them are in motion at once; at other times only a few of them are, which shows that their action does not depend on the wind.

Rutabagas seeded so early that they make their main growth during the hottest weather are as a result apt to be hard and fibrous. Sow, from the last of June to July 15, says a Minnesota farmer, if you want them tender and juicy.

LEGAL NOTICES

Mortgage Foreclosure.

Whereas, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage dated the tenth day of April, 1903, executed by Adolph Kirchner and Mary A. Kirchner, his wife to Citizens' State Bank of Whitewater, Wisconsin, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Charlevoix, Michigan, in liber thirty-seven of Mortgages on pages forty and forty-one, on the 27th day of April, 1903 at nine o'clock in the forenoon. And whereas, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of one thousand four hundred thirteen and sixty-five one-hundredths (1,413.65) dollars, the principal, interest, taxes and insurance, and the further sum of fifty dollars as an attorney fee, stipulated for in said mortgage, and which is the whole amount claimed to be due on said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted either in law or equity, to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the east front door of the court house in said county of Charlevoix, on the twenty-third day of July next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon on that day, which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to-wit: The south half (s½) of the north-east quarter (ne¼) of section eighteen (18) town thirty-two (32) north, of range six (6) west; and the north west quarter (nw¼) of the south east quarter (se¼) of section eighteen (18) town thirty-two (32) north, of range six (6) west.

The Back Number.

By TEMPLE BAILEY.

Copyright, 1907, by Associated Literary Press.

When the boys came back to college, Catherine Newlands displayed rejuvenated charms. The enforced quiet of the summer season in the dull old town had rested her, had brightened her eye and given a tinge o' color to her cheeks.

As she crossed the campus that first morning in a scarlet sweater and white linen skirt, with her tawny hair in a big knot low on her neck, a half dozen of the freshmen turned to look after her.

Catherine felt their admiration with a thrill of gratification. For ten years she had basked in the delight of making that first impression on the new boys, and it was like a draft of old wine to a tippler.

Now and then in her triumphant progress a junior or a senior stopped her and greeted her with frank friendliness. That was one of the advantages of an affair with Catherine Newlands. She knew how to shade a love affair off into a good comradeship, and the boys, who in their freshman years had been her adorers, came for advice in their later love affairs.

For Catherine would have none of them. She liked to bask in the sunlight of their admiration, she liked to be the queen of the junior promenade, she liked the violets and the blue pennants and the crowd of eager boys surrounding her at the football game. She liked to sing "Down the Field" for them and to have them cheer her at the end. She liked to lead in their college yell, and the roar of their young voices was music in her ears. But that was all!

"You are too young," she would say frankly as some stricken youth would plead, "and, besides, if I married you, what would the other boys do?"

A lot of her old friends crowded around her as she reached the library steps, and there was a fringe of unconquered freshmen in the background. But when she presently detached herself from the group it was one of the faculty, Oswald Ware, who accompanied her.

"Dear old boy," she said as they walked toward the great gate that led out into the city street, "it's so good to have you back."

"Don't call me old boy," he flung out, with a touch of irritation. "Heaven knows I am old, but you needn't rub it in."

SHE SAT DOWN ON THE OTHER SIDE OF HIS DESK.

He was bareheaded, and Catherine glanced affectionately at his gray streaked temples.

"You're just right," she told him, and then as her eyes swept the scene—the sunlighted square, the old buildings that seemed to breathe a benediction over the boys, the boys themselves, of the best college type, graceful, lithe, strong young animals, ready for the training that should make men of them—she exclaimed: "Aren't they fine? It's the spirit of the place that I love, Oswald, and it's the ideas of such men as you that help to bring out the best in them."

"They are a lot of cubs," gloomily.

"Oswald!"

"Well, they are. In the classes I don't feel that way. I know they are going to be men some time, and I want them to be the right sort, but when I see you frittering away your time with them—you with all your possibilities"—

"I love it," she asserted, "and when I can't have their admiration any more I think the youth in me will die, Oswald."

He glanced down at her. "But there are other things worth while—love and me—and the needs of humanity."

"I am not great enough for those things," obstinately. "Why didn't you fall in love with some other girl, Oswald?"

"Because you are the one woman. And I know you better than you do yourself. Some day this will pall on you"—

She interrupted him. "I shan't change," she said flippantly, "but if I should I'll come to that stuffy little, mussy little class room of yours and tell you"—

They had reached Lampson hall, and he was forced to leave her. As she made her way slowly back across the campus her eyes were thoughtful, but her ears were sharpened to hear the comments of the new boys.

"Who is she?" came an eager question.

"Catherine Newlands."

"She's a beauty"—

"My dear boy, she is a back number. She is twenty-eight if she's a day."

It was the first note of disloyalty to her queenship, and the man who had said it for her to hear was some years rebuff, but the light seemed to go out of the morning. The old buildings frowned grim and gray above the hollow square, and, to add to it all, in through the big gate came another girl—a little thing with a fluff of fair hair. Tripping on her high heels, with her pink ruffles floating about her, she was like a wild rose.

The boys on the campus fence bent eagerly to watch the new arrival, and the freshmen, deserted from the fence, lost hanging in groups about the big gate, asked the question that had so often thrilled Catherine Newlands.

"Who is she?"

Laughing and all a-flutter with the joy of the attention she was exciting, the other girl came toward Catherine.

"Oh, Miss Newlands," she gurgled, "don't you remember me?"

"It's Gracie Allendale!" Catherine said brightly. "Why, Gracie, when did you grow up?"

The other girl laughed delightedly.

"Yesterday, I think," she said, "when mother told me that I needn't go back to school. I am going to be here all winter and I have the time of my life."

Her lips answered the older girl, but her eyes were on the boys. And suddenly she was swept away, with a dozen laughing lads in her train, and Catherine was left alone.

One youngster ran back.

"You won't mind," he said boyishly. "We want to show her things."

Catherine shook her head.

"No," she said slowly; "I don't mind."

But when he had gone she went out of the big gate with lagging steps and drooping head.

Late that afternoon Oswald Ware, bending over a pile of papers in the fusty, musty study, saw a vision of light as Catherine in a filmy flowered gown came in.

She sat down on the other side of his desk.

"Oswald," she said, "the queen is dead. Long live the queen!"

"What do you mean?" he asked.

"I am a back number," she said wistfully. "I heard a boy say it. And Gracie Allendale has developed into a little beauty, and they are flocking to her."

"She will never be as beautiful as you," he said indignantly.

"Ah, but she has youth." The girl was silent for a moment; then, "Just think of it," she said, "I am twenty-eight."

"You are a mere child," he stormed. "Why, I—I am almost forty. You are a mere child."

A smile broke the corners of her mouth.

"How nice it sounds to hear you say it. You are such a comfort, Oswald."

"I wish you would let me show you what there is in life for you, dear heart; such big things as compared to the little life of the campus."

"Ah, but youth is there." And her eyes wandered out to the sunlighted space under the elms.

"And love is here," he said.

Then her eyes came back to him.

"That is why I came," she said tremulously—"that is why I came to you, Oswald."

A Trying Prescription.

There was little doubt in the doctor's mind that Mr. Lambkin's recovery from an attack of nervous exhaustion would be more rapid if Mrs. Lambkin were a less animated and constant talker.

Mrs. Lambkin had never felt that her husband's trouble was serious. Her own health was in a far more precarious condition than his, she felt sure.

"We didn't need to come to the country on his account any more than on mine," she told the doctor on his third visit. "As I say to Mr. Lambkin day after day, if he'd rise above his feelings, as I do, and take an interest in everything and ask questions and observe and draw people out he'd forget himself. Now, I know perfectly well that I have a high temperature this morning, and I should like you to look at my tongue."

She thrust out her long and lively tongue for the doctor's inspection and waited for his answer.

"I see, madam," he said at last gravely, "that it is sadly in need of exactly what I am prescribing for your husband—perfect rest and quiet for at least six hours a day for the next three months."

A Rich "Find."

The sensational discovery of buried Spanish treasure of gold and jewels on the foreshore at Paradelha reminds one of the romantic discovery of the famous treasure of Guarrazar under conditions almost identical, says the Westminster Gazette. Some peasants traveling near Toledo one day in 1858 noticed objects of gold and jewel work which had been exposed to view by the heavy rains. The peasants, ignorant of its value, sold their treasure trove for a trifling sum to a local resident, who fled with it to Paris and disposed of it to the authorities of the Musee Cluny. The objects proved to be of rare antiquarian as well as intrinsic value. They were, in fact, eleven crowns which had been worn by Visigothic kings who had ruled Spain 1,200 years previously. The largest of these crowns, a beautiful piece of workmanship, has thirty large sapphires and as many pearls of great size. Below it hangs a cross set with similar precious stones, from which hang jeweled pendants.

"Suppose, doctor, this operation does not succeed."

"My dear fellow, if it doesn't you'll never know it."

DURUM WHEAT.

A Grain That Is Steadily Increasing In Popularity.

There is a steadily increasing production of durum wheat in northern Minnesota and North Dakota and in the arid or semiarid sections of other states.

The big flouring mills have not as yet adapted their machinery to the proper grinding of durum wheat, says an expert. They find the grain too rich in gluten and too hard for their present installment of rollers. The elevator men don't handle it freely because it necessitates special bins. But the exporters take it eagerly.

Durum is sometimes called macaroni wheat because its main use up to this time has been for the manufacture of macaroni. The French, however, who are accounted the best cooks in the world, have employed it quite extensively in breadmaking, and it is asserted that the bread made from it is most nutritious as well as light and appetizing. There is no reason why it should not be.

Gluten is a muscle former. In 100 ounces of lean beefsteak there are eighteen parts of muscle formers. In 100 ounces of ordinary bread there are seven to eight ounces of muscle formers, in 100 ounces of potatoes two ounces, in 100 ounces of milk four, but in 100 ounces of macaroni or bread made from durum wheat there are said to be from eighteen to twenty ounces of muscle forming material.

Admitting the food value of this variety of wheat, the temptation to the farmer to whose land it is adapted is almost irresistible when a wheat to plant is chosen. It is a plant that stands drought much better than other wheat. It is so hardy and thrifty that it is usually exempt from rust and smut and bugs.

The average yield is high, often from 50 to 100 per cent greater than that of the old varieties of wheat grown in the same district. It seems certain that durum is destined to prove a blessing to the farmers.

For You.

There are little tasks a-wailing that only you can do;
There are little songs want singing that must be sung by you;
There's a little race wants running that only you must run;
There are little things that you must do, or they will be undone.

There are little words of kindness that only you can say,
And little deeds set in between the bounds of each short day;
There are little fights and victories that only you can win,
And childhood's passing, oh, so fast—had you better not begin?

There are little hills before you that only you can climb;
Just try to mount up one today—'tis easier each time.
There's a little prize awaiting you for each small lift you here;
Don't you think you'd better gain it now and keep it evermore?

This office wishes to call the attention of users of Printed Matter to the fine line of stationery, book and poster papers, cardboards and covers, which we carry in stock. You have all, no doubt, experienced the annoyance of having to accept a paper stock for your printed matter that was not what you wanted, but—"it will do," or else submit to an exasperating delay while a special order for stock was being filled in Chicago. Now, these delays are just as annoying to the printer as to his customer; and besides, they are expensive for him; therefore, we aim to have in stock a line of papers from which any ordinary demand may be filled and with the "just right" kind.

There are very few country offices anywhere that carry the assortment we do; and none in this part of Michigan.

The next time you want Printed Matter—the good red corpuscles of any business—call on the COURIER, and be sure that an otherwise good piece of work will not be robbed of a large part of its effectiveness through being printed upon an inappropriate paper stock, through lack of assortment from which to select.

Courier Grange Column

Marion Center Grange No. 956.

Marion Center Grange No. 956 opened June 24 in the usual form in the fourth degree. Officers all present except treasurer.

After the usual order of business, the several committees were appointed to take grange exhibit to the county fair. Members of the grange decided to send to Ohio to the grange contract house for binder twine. A program was furnished by the lecturer.

Number present 18.

Norwood Grange No. 1291.

The Worthy Master called a special meeting for Tuesday, July 7, for the purpose of draping the charter and drawing resolutions on the death of our departed sister and worthy lecturer, Louise Genett, also what other business may come before the grange.

The grange is thriving and has a fairly good attendance for the busy season. Members of other granges are always welcome.

Farm and Garden

FARM WATER.

Inexpensive Filters For Purifying and Filtering It For Household Use.

One of the problems on the farm is how to obtain an ample supply of good, clear water. It is not so easy to provide well or spring water with a filter, but cistern water may be easily purified by means of one or more simple devices which may be of home construction. Much dirt in the way of soot, leaves, dead insects, droppings from birds and pollen from trees is washed into the cistern unless some means are taken to prevent it. The simplest arrangement is to have a movable section in the leader which can be turned to let the rain wash the dirt on to the ground. Then after the roof is cleaned the leader is turned so the rain can go into the cistern. This is objectionable in that it needs to be looked after during every rain, and frequently all the water will be lost.

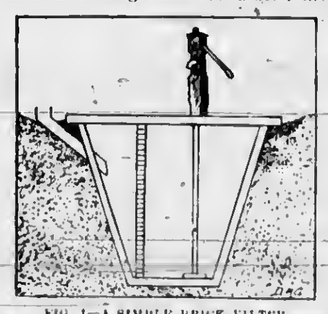

FIG. 1—A SIMPLE BRICK FILTER.

The simplest form of filter is to build a partition through the cistern, laying up a soft brick. Will be cement, as shown in Fig. 1. This will ordinarily give satisfaction if the impurities which collect on the receiving side of the wall are removed occasionally. Another and better form of filter is shown in Fig. 2. In this case the cut is supposed to represent a hundred barrel cistern and a filter of twenty-five barrels capacity. They are built of either concrete or brick, well cemented on the inside.

The filter is flat bottomed and is half filled with charcoal, sand and gravel in layers, the charcoal being placed in the bottom. The leader which comes from the roof should enter the filter on only a slight angle. The material in the filter will need to be removed occasionally and replaced with fresh charcoal, sand and gravel.

When a cistern is built it should be water tight so as to prevent contamination from ground water during the wet season as well as to prevent leakage of water that runs into it from the roof, and if a well is to be dug or drilled it should be located upon higher ground than the house, barn and outbuildings and some distance from the latter. The principal troubles that may be traced to an impure or contaminated water supply are, as a rule, intestinal troubles, the most dangerous being typhoid fever. The most common as well as the most dangerous contamination of the drinking water comes from the cesspool. Every precaution should be taken in locating the well to place it so as to prevent as nearly as may be any possibility of contamination.

There are as many, if not more, of the germ diseases that may be transmitted by water as by any other means, and some of the diseases are so uniformly transmitted by the water supply that they are known as water borne disease. Typhoid fever is such a disease, as well as some of the other forms of intestinal troubles. If disease may be carried by water, it is of the greatest importance that every precaution should be taken to insure a pure water supply.

A hasty examination of a water is of very little benefit and may often be entirely misleading. A water may be clear, free from any sediment or odor and may taste good and still be dangerous for drinking purposes. A chemical analysis, supplemented when necessary by a bacteriological examination, is needed to determine the quality of a given sample of water for domestic purposes. One examination is not always sufficient to decide the fitness of the water, as contamination is more likely to take place at one time of the year than another.

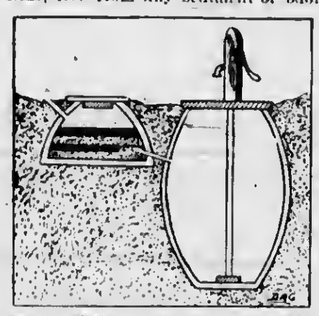

FIG. 2—CHARCOAL AND GRAVEL FILTER.

The amount of rainfall will influence very considerably the bacterial contents of water from shallow wells or poorly constructed cisterns. During the heavy spring rains the number of bacteria reaches an enormous figure and decreases again as the dry season progresses. All of the bacteria that are found in the water are not dangerous, but if drainage and other conditions allow contamination from outside sources there is always an opportunity for the introduction of disease producing germs.

How to Rid Furniture of Moths.

A sort of trade secret among upholsterers, it is said, is this recipe for ridding furniture of moths, says the Kansas City Star. A set of furniture that seemed to be alive with larvae and from which hundreds of these pests had been picked and brushed was set in a room by itself. Three gallons of benzine were purchased. Using a small watering pot with a fine rose sprinkler, the whole upholstery was saturated through and through with the benzine. Result, every moth, larva and egg was killed. The benzine dried out in a few hours, and its entire odor disappeared in three or four days. Not the slightest harm happened to the varnish or wood or fabrics or hair stuffing. The carpets were also well sprinkled all around the sides of the room with equally good effect. For furs, flannels indeed, all woolen articles containing moths—benzine is most valuable. Put them in a box, sprinkle with benzine, close the box tightly, and in a day or two the pests will be exterminated, and the benzine will all evaporate on opening. In using benzine great care should be taken that no fire is near by, as the stuff in fluid or vapor form is very inflammable.

How to Freshen the Air In a Room.

Lavender salts are useful for freshening the air of the living room where smoking is occasionally indulged in. Select a large mouthed bottle—a stick candy jar which will hold a quart is just the thing—and in this place one pint of pure (not household) ammonia, add two ounces of oil of lavender and then fill the bottle with carbonated ammonia blocks. When using, shake the bottle, remove the stopper and leave for half an hour. The odor is peculiarly invigorating and not at all overpowering if not too close a sniff of the jar be taken.

How to Tighten Sewing Machine Belts.

When you are sewing in a great hurry and the machine belt becomes loose do not stop to remove it in order to tighten it. Simply put a drop of machine oil on it, turn the wheel a few seconds and proceed with a tightened belt.

A little girl heard a sermon from the words "My cup runneth over; surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life." On returning home she was asked if she could remember the minister's text and replied: "Yes, indeed. It was 'Mercy! Goodness! My cup's tipped over.'"

THE MARE AND FOAL.

May the mare work after the foal comes? She may if the man who is to work her knows his business. She may work moderately, slowly and better if no more than four or five hours a day. When she works she should be well fed. That does not mean that she should be then or at any other time overfed. And she should be fed something that will make milk in her udders as well as repair waste in her own body. Oats are suitable as a grain ration, and wheat bran makes a good addition. Let the farm mare work easily, gently, moderately, if you greatly need her services, but do not let her ever become very warm or hot.

Shall the colt follow its mother as she walks in the plow or cultivator? No; emphatically no. Leave the colt with its fellows in the cool and shaded orchard, in the quiet box stall, says a writer in Breeder's Gazette, Chicago.

A WELL BRED FOAL.

Take the mare to it at least once in the middle of the half day and let it suck while she rests. Do not hurry her back to her task either. Very soon both mother and foal will become resigned to this system of living, and neither will fret much. The colt will be nibbling the grass, even munching oats, instead of wearily plodding the endless corn rows with its mother under a too ardent sun. Is it best that the mare should work? No; it is better that she should give all of her energy to making milk for her foal, but this is not always practicable on the general farm.

The foal soon learns to eat. The earlier he learns to eat oats the better, and the more he eats of them while sucking his dam the better. Add wheat bran to the oats. The iron has a lot of bone in it, and truly marvelous will be the effect on the young and fast developing animal. Gain made then during babyhood will assuredly never be lost, nor can ground lost then by neglect in feeding ever be regained. Wonderful is the effect of feed on the frame of the baby horse. The first two years fix the bony framework. No subsequent feeding can materially alter it, and the first six months gives an impetus toward development absolutely essential if the highest results are to be reached. Feed the mare, then, and as early as you can feed the foal too. Then will "weaning time" be passed by so easily that neither groom nor foal nor mare will regard it as more than a trifling incident.

And now what of the brain of that colt while we are feeding so well its body? We must not neglect our opportunity to lodge in that soft, pliant and impressionable colt brain certain fundamental facts that will go with it all its life and upon which may be built great habits of docility, usefulness and safety. Teach the colt these three cardinal principles first, that man is stronger than he is; next, that man is to be obeyed; then that man is his best friend. How will you best do this?

While the foal is very young and very ignorant catch it, putting one hand at its breast and one hand behind it and hold it gently, letting it see how much stronger you are than it. Repeat this lesson now and then. The colt will never forget. It will instinctively associate you with the idea of great and irresistible strength. While it is young break it to halter. There is no other time so good.

Then be good to him. Take him some dainty he likes to eat when you go near him. As in man, the way to a colt's heart is through his stomach. Take time to fondle him, let him love you, but do not let him become in any way unpleasantly familiar. See that while he loves you he at all times implicitly respects you.

Then some day, when the time comes for that colt to be harnessed, there will be no "breaking" needed, only getting him used to the feel of harness, the pressure of the collar and the rattle of the wheels.

FEED OF CATTLE.

Changing From Winter to Summer Ration With the Least Damage.

There is quite a knack in getting cattle from winter feed over to summer feed with the least damage to the cattle and to the pastures. The change is quite a radical one, and it is important that it be made very carefully.

A great many farmers have the habit of turning out their cattle to pasture as soon as it begins to show green. There is but one combination of circumstances in which this can be done to advantage either to the live stock or to the pasture—namely, when the full growth of blue grass has been allowed to remain on the ground during the winter and until the green grass begins to show under the old crop, writes W. H. Underwood in Farm and Fireside. The cattle can then be turned on to it with great profit both to the live stock and the pasture. This green grass which has been lying under the snow during the winter season is almost as good through the winter as it was in the fall, and, while it loses much of its value by the cold winds and rain of March, nevertheless it has a great amount of feeding value. When the live stock are turned on to this the rations are so gradually changed from dry feed to green feed that they thrive right along while the change is being made.

It is quite otherwise when cattle must be turned on pastures that have been closely eaten down in the fall of the year. Here the grass comes more slowly, and when cattle must be turned on this kind of pasture, even for an hour or two in the day, before they can get a full bite they are indisposed to eat hay or fodder and hence are very likely to fall away in flesh instead of gaining, as cattle should.

I could never see any advantage in turning cattle on an ordinary pasture before they were able to get a full bite. If they are kept on dry feed all this time, this involves a radical change; hence they are not expected to gain much the first month while this change is going on.

All this shows the importance of having on every farm of any considerable size a permanent pasture, which can be grazed as close as is desirable up to the middle of the summer and then allowed to make very considerable growth by not being too closely pastured in the fall, in order that it may be held as a reserve in the spring, by means of which live stock can be changed over from winter feed to summer feed without any damage either to the pasture or to the animals themselves.

A sudden change from the winter feed to summer feed is especially harmful where the pasture is largely clover. Unless very great care is taken cattle will so gorge themselves with this luscious feed that bloating is likely to result. Even where this does not occur the cattle will not show much gain for two weeks and possibly a month.

THE HORSEMAN.

The work horse should be supplied with about two pounds of provender for each hundred pounds of weight. Of this from ten to eighteen pounds, according to the severity of the labor performed, should be grain in some form. The heavy feeding should come at night, after the long day's work is over and when the animal has time for masticating and digesting his food.

Food the Mare Liberally.

The first foal of some mares has been the best that they have ever produced. W. R. Gilbert expresses a belief that the reason for this is such mares may have been regularly worked and liberally fed when carrying their first foals, but in subsequent years were compelled to get their living at pasture while carrying one foal and nursing another.

Remedy For Chronic Cough.

Dr. Fowler has had great success with the following remedy for chronic cough in horses: Give tablespoonful of sirup squills, a tablespoonful of fluetuic opium and a teaspoonful muriate ammonia in feed two or three times a day.

Care of Legs and Feet.

Too much care cannot be given to the legs and feet of horses. This is especially the case with horses on the farm. Hours are spent in brushing the hair, mane and tail, but the legs and feet are neglected. Many horses are permanently injured because the feet are neglected. The most beautiful horse would be worthless without sound limbs and feet. Have your horse properly shod. Rub his legs thoroughly when cleaning him. Wash the legs after a hard day's work and rub them dry. If you have any time to spare, it will pay to bandage each leg for a short time after long drives or extra hard work.

Sore Shoulders.

Sore shoulders are caused by improperly fitting collars or by allowing dirt and hair to collect under the collar and remain there from one day to another. Use none other than a perfect fitting collar. If you do not understand fitting the collar, take an experienced man with you when you visit the harness store. Always use a good pad, one that contains no lumps in the padding or that has padding that cannot be easily detached and moved into lumps under the collar. Then keep the shoulders clean. It is a good plan to wash the horse's shoulders every evening after removing the harness. The application of cold water not only cools the fevered skin, but it also hardens the flesh so it can resist a greater pressure the next day.

The Trueness of Wool.

Wool should be of the same diameter from root to joint. This is called trueness. On a poor sheep the wool grows finer, on a fat one coarser. Consequently a change of condition in either direction changes the diameter of the same fiber during the different stages of its growth. When the change of condition is great, especially when it takes place from a low and unhealthy state to a healthy, fleshy one, it generally occasions a joint in the wool fiber—in other words, the place in the fiber where the change takes place is so weak that it takes only a slight pull to break the fiber.

Peanut Hay.

Numerous estimates as regards the yield of hay from a crop of peanuts vary from one to very near three tons per acre. This hay may be considered a byproduct when the nuts are harvested for market.

FRANCIS H. DODDS FOR CONGRESS

His Nomination Favored in This Locality—Has Come Up From the Ranks with Clean Record and Stands for Progressive Republicanism.

Since the withdrawal of our townsman, D. E. Alward, from the Congressional race the Sentinel has closely studied the trend of sentiment among the individual republican voters in this part of the congressional district and finds that in a very large majority the republicans of Clare and north Isabella counties favor the candidacy of Francis H. Dodds, of Mt. Pleasant. This tendency is based on merit as determined by the sum total of the facts in the case. Mr. Dodds is today first choice because of what he is and what he stands for.

Frank Dodds, as he is known by his closest friends, wears well. He has fought his way up the ranks by hard work. They who know him most respect him as a man of sterling manhood. A teacher at Farwell in the early days when the country was new, he is still kindly remembered for his real worth. The neighboring township of Vernon having a case in a United States court brought against the township chose Mr. Dodds out of the many attorneys available in this locality to safeguard the people's interests. Never a chronic office holder, his name has for a number of years been before the district as the logical successor of Congressman Darragh, and it is the gradual recognition of his ability that now is insistent for his leadership of Eleventh district republicanism. Still in the prime of manhood and possessed of an analytical, logical mind he is well equipped for congressional duties, and having touched elbows with life as it has developed from the pioneer conditions of earlier days, he is truly representative of the shoestring district.

In governmental policies Mr. Dodds warmly endorses progressive republicanism such as Taft typifies, the logical working out of what Roosevelt has so well "rough hewn." He is a man of the people, and generally endorsement of his candidacy is prophetic of a big majority in his favor everywhere in this locality. The Clare Sentinel. 2t61

ANNUAL SCHOOL MEETING HELD

Attendance Was Close Up to the Hundred Mark.

FINANCIAL STANDING IS EXCELLENT

Dr. R. B. Armstrong and H. L. Iddings Chosen as Trustees.

Changes Recommended in School Management—Was an Interesting Meeting Throughout.

The annual school meeting held at the central school building Monday night was a record breaker in point of attendance.

The meeting was called to order by Dr. G. W. Cronter, president of board, and the secretary and treasurer made their reports which showed the schools in excellent financial condition.

The receipts for the past year were $25,900.21, and the estimates for the expenditures of the ensuing year were practically the same as last year.

The treasurer's report, which was read, and on motion adopted, showed that the district was possessed of resources other than taxation, aggregating an annual income of more than two-thirds of the amount necessary to conduct the schools according to the estimate of the board as shown by the report of the secretary; the rate of taxation recommended by the board for the raising of the remainder of amount estimated to be necessary was six and one-quarter mills or $6.25 per thousand of valuation, which rate produces approximately $8,200.00. The rate is lower than for several years past.

A motion to accept and adopt the secretary's report, being put, Judge Mayne took the floor and opened an animated discussion on the different phases of the school discipline, disavowing any purpose of unjustly criticising either Superintendent Woodley or the members of the board.

The matters complained of were the system of reduction of class standings on account of violations of school discipline, the matter of making a class as a whole responsible for the acts of its individual members, and the matter of eighth grade examinations. This discussion was participated in by several citizens, the general opinion being that a change in the methods used was desirable. At the close of the discussion motions were made and carried by practically unanimous votes that the system of markings be changed, also the system of eighth grade promotions. The report of the secretary as read was then adopted, subject to the sense of the meeting as expressed to the board in various motions and resolutions passed.

A motion was made that the teaching of music and drawing in grades be abolished for the present, which motion was lost by a nearly unanimous vote.

The business of election of officers for the district being then taken up, George Durance, P. D. Campbell and R. W. Kane were appointed tellers.

For trustee to succeed Hon. A. Buttars the names of Mr. Buttars, John Burns and Dr. R. B. Armstrong were presented. Dr. Armstrong winning on second ballot.

To succeed W. H. Miller, the name of Mr. Miller, Mr. Buttars, S. A. Marting and H. L. Iddings were presented. The names of Mr. Miller and Mr. Marting were withdrawn and Mr. Iddings won out on the third ballot.

A resolution was adopted expressing the obligations of the taxpayers of the district to the board, and expressly to Mr. Buttars for his faithful services.

Dr. G. W. Cronter announced that he felt he could not spare the time necessary for a full performance of the duties and tendered his resignation which the voters refused to accept.

The meeting was very interesting all stages, and showed that the people of Charlevoix are interested in their schools and their managment.

While the methods of Superintend Woodley were at times critized rather severely, it was conceded that the same methods were in vogue in the majority of schools and the standard of Charlevoix schools had been raised under his management. The board expressed themselves as filled with a desire to carry out the wishes of the patrons, but at the same time wished to know what was offered in place of the methods which were to be changed, as they believed that they and the teachers were trying to do their very best for the schools of Charlevoix.

The district is to be congratulated in any event upon the fact that sufficient interest in its school has been aroused to cause an attendance as great as was in evidence Monday night, and the further fact that the discussion was as general, as earnest, and as candid, as it was.

Honest criticism and free and unrestrained discussion of such matters, whatever the result of the changes proposed to be made, cannot help but have an influence for the betterment of the schools, and inasmuch as there was no animosity or rancor displayed, and opinions seemed practically unanimous, should promote unanimity of effort and helpful co-operation between the patrons of the district, their officers and servants the teachers.

PLEASANT SURPRISE PARTY

Given Miss Helen Kirby in Honor of Her Fifteenth Birthday.

A very pleasant surprise party was given Miss Helen Kirby by a few of her young friends Monday, July 13, in honor of her fifteenth birthday. The evening was spent very pleasantly in games and dancing. Light refreshments were served.

DR. CARLSTEIN IS DEAD

Was a Well Known Former Charlevoix Physician.

Was a Native of Sweden and Veteran of the Civil War

Dr. J. A. Carlstein died at the home of Mrs. Margaret L. Washburn on Park avenue in this city Friday, July 10, after a long illness.

Dr. John A. Carlstein was born in Sweden in 1843 and came to this country and entered the United States service as a member of Co. B, 13 N. Y. Cavalry in 1864, being mustered out August 25, 1865, by reason of the close of the war. In the early eighties he came to Ironton as surgeon of the Iron Company and after a few years came to Charlevoix, where he remained in the practise of his profession for about seven years when he removed to Ravenswood near Chicago.

This spring the doctor came to Charlevoix in hopes that his health might improve, but a complication of diseases gave him no hope. He leaves a widow and an adopted daughter, Mrs. Ollie Smith of Pueblo, Colorado.

The funeral was held at the residence of Mrs. Washburn Sunday Rev. H. A. Putnam officiating. Miss Elisabeth Putnam sang two beautiful solos, accompanied by Miss Jessie Brown. The services were conducted under the auspices of Baxter Post G. A. R. of which he was a former member, assisted by the Masonic order. The body was taken to Chicago on the Manitou, where it will be interred under charge of George H. Thomas Post of which he was a member.

ANOTHER VOTING CONTEST

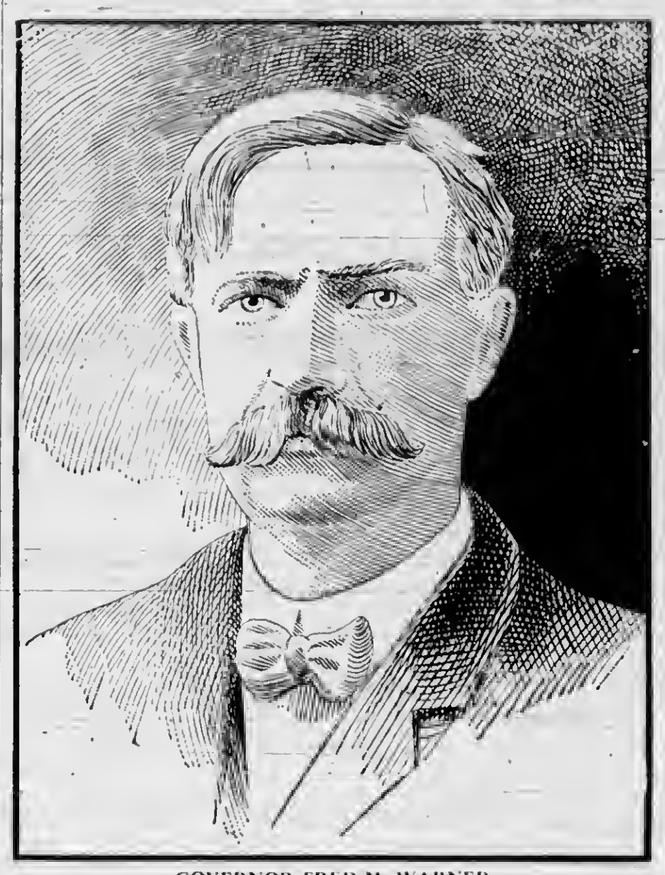
Lockwood Hospital to Give Excursions to Popular Ladies.

The ladies auxilliary Board of Lockwood hospital, Petoskey, have inaugurated another voting contest this year, giving as a prize, three excursions to the most popular ladies as decided by the voters of Charlevoix an Emmet counties.

The first trip will be to New York via Washington and Philadelphia, returning via Buffalo, Niagara Falls and Detroit, good for ten days, all necessary expenses paid.

Two ladies will go to Niagara Falls, and return, all necessary expenses paid. One of these ladies must be from Petoskey and the other from outside Petoskey.

Ballots will be provided, costing five cents each, proceeds to go to the hospital fund. The contest opens next Wednesday and continues until Hospital day, the date of which is to be announced later.



GOVERNOR FRED M. WARNER

Who will speak at the Charlevoix Theatre, Saturday evening, July 18.

NEXT YEAR AT PETOSKEY

Petoskey Man Chosen as President of the Michigan Banker's Association.

Leon Chichester, of Petoskey, was elected president of the Michigan State Banker's Association at their meeting held last week and the next meeting will be at Petoskey.

Other officers were elected as follows:

First vice president, H. G. Barnum, Port Huron; second vice president, Emory W. Clark, of Detroit; secretary and attorney, Hal H. Smith; treasurer, Fred S. Case, of the Marquette County Savings bank; members of the executive committee for two years: C. J. Monroe, South Haven; William McPherson, Howell; S. R. Kaufman, Marquette; Thomas Hefferan, Grand Rapids; L. A. Babbitt, Northville; H. B. Webber, Ionia; honorary vice president of the American Banker's association for Michigan, Dudley E. Waters, Grand Rapids; Michigan member of the executive council of the American Banker's association, William Livingstone, president of the Dime Savings bank, Detroit.

The principal topic of the discussion Saturday was the guarantee of bank deposits. The argument for the regulation of banks, advanced by State Banking Commissioner H. M. Zimmerman and John F. Seeley, of Caro, were replied to by John A. Johnson, of Detroit and Clay H. Hollister, of Grand Rapids, speaking in opposition to such legislation.

At the same time Mr. Johnson declared for the system of postal savings banks advocated in the Democratic national platform, that is, a system that would leave the money in the localities where it was deposited. No action was taken in the way of the adoption of a resolution but the sentiment of those present inclined toward the opposition.

A resolution offered by J. H. Johnson calling for the approval by the Michigan Banker's association of the currency bill formulated and advocated by the American Banker's association was unanimously adopted.

SEPTEMBER 9-10-11 AND 12

Are the Dates For Soldiers and Sailors Re-union

Fixed by Executive Committee of Grand Traverse Association Last Week.

The executive committee of the Grand Traverse Soldiers and Sailors association was called together by Commander Williams Meers at the office of L. K. Cleveland, Traverse City, last week, for the purpose of setting the date of the next reunion and the transaction of such other business as might come before the committee. The following members were present: Commander Meers, of Boyne City; Senior Vice-Commander L. K. Cleveland, Junior Vice-Commander J. W. Rogers, O. P. Carver and M. D. Morgan.

The motion of Comrade Rogers that the next reunion be September 9, 10, 11 and 12, carried and the motion of Comrade Carver that the commander appoint an executive committee of citizens for the purpose of making arrangements for the encampment carried and the following were appointed: R. K. Walter, Thos. T. Bates, O. P. Carver, L. K. Cleveland and M. D. Morgan, they to appoint sub-committees. The committee adjourned to meet at the call of the commander.

To Benzonia Academy.

Miss Elisabeth Putnam, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Holden A. Putnam, has accepted the position of head of the musical department of Benzonia Academy.

Miss Putnam received her musical education at the Oberlin Conservatory of Music and last year and was in charge of the musical department of the Saginaw Public schools. Her present position is proof of her ability in her line of work.

Bunting was at once released and received the congratulations of his friends.

ANOTHER MAN KILLED

James Blackburn, Section Boss the Victim Caught in a Car Jam.

James Blackburn, section boss on the E. J. & S. Ry., Wednesday morning was the victim of an accident which cost him his life. Shortly before ten o'clock the train loaded ties at Cole's siding in Bellaire and with rails also aboard proceeded to Hitchcock and sidetracked for another train to pass. The sidetrack is down grade, and at the opposite end to which the train entered were three freight cars. Mr. Blackburn was sitting on the rear car of the train at the rear end and when in its uncontrolled momentum it struck the freight cars the load shifted backward and a rail struck Mr. Blackburn's right leg about five inches above the knee and drove it against the bumper of the freight car. There were several men on the car at the time, all of whom jumped and were uninjured. Allen Walker, a boy, clung to the hand car which was aboard, and was uninjured.

The injured man was taken to the Waldmere Hotel at Bellaire, his boarding place, and Dr. Badle was called. The flesh of the leg was found badly lacerated and bones broken and crushed, but an effort was made by the doctor to avoid amputation. The unfortunate man died about ten o'clock the same evening. Mr. Blackburn was a widower, about fifty-six years of age, and had a number of children residing in Traverse City. His son Will is employed on a stone train running between Petoskey and Traverse City.

BRYAN AND KERN DEMOCRATS CHOICE

Bryan Receives 892½ Votes on First Ballot

KERN IS NAMED BY ACCLAMATION

He is From Indiana and Has Been Prominent in the Party

Platform That Was Adopted—Convention at all Times Went Wild at Mention of Bryan's Name.

The Democratic National Convention was at all times under the control of the Bryan men, breaking into wild enthusiasm at every mention of the Nebraskan's name.

Mr. Bryan's name was presented to the convention by Ignatius J. Dunn, of Nebraska, Governor Johnson's by Congressman Hammond and Judge Gray's by Levin Irving Handy.

The ballot which was taken at 3:40 o'clock, Wednesday morning resulted as follows:

Bryan 892½; Johnson 46; Gray 50½.

For vice president the names of Charles A. Towne, of New York, Clark Howell, of Georgia, and John W. Kern, of Indiana, were presented but all were withdrawn, Mr. Kern being named by acclamation.

William Jennings Bryan has three times been the choice of his party and during the campaigns and also on the lecture platform has visited every portion of the United States and his record is familiar to everybody.

John W. Kern was born December 20, 1849 at the village of Alto, Howard county, Ind. His father was Dr. Jacob W. Kern, a Virginian by birth.

John Kern's mother was Nancy Liggett and she and Dr. Kern were married in Warren county, Ohio. John was educated in the district schools and the Indiana Normal school of Kokomo, Ind. Later he taught school and earned money to enter Ann Arbor, graduating from the law department of Michigan university in 1869. He immediately began practicing in Kokomo, Ind.

He was drafted when he was 21 years old to make the race for the legislature, but was defeated. He was city attorney of Kokomo for six terms. In 1884 he was elected reporter of the supreme court. Since, Indianapolis has been his home, where he has practiced law. He has worked in every campaign, served the county in the legislature and was the leader of his party in the state senate. He was city attorney from October, 1897 to October, 1901. In 1900 he was nominated for governor, but was defeated. Before the St. Louis convention of four years ago, Mr. Kern's name had been prominently mentioned among the vice presidential possibilities.

Mrs. Kern is prominent in all of the social and literary affairs of the city. Miss Julia Kern, their daughter, is well known socially. There are two other children, John W. Kern, Jr., aged 9, and William H. Kern, who is now 5 days old.

The platform in brief is:

Preamble—Raps predatory wealth and corrupt elections and declares issue to be "Shall the people rule?"

Rights of the states—Declares for state rights and devotion of federal government alone to powers delegated to it and to control of interstate commerce and prevention of private monopoly in addition to state remedies.

Tariff—Declares for immediate revision to basis of "revenue only." Especially demands repeal of duties on pulp, print paper, lumber and logs.

Banking—Favors emergency currency issued and controlled by government guarantee fund for national banks, available to state banks, or a postal savings bank keeping money in deposit communities.

Railroad regulations—Recommends physical valuation of railroads by interstate commerce commission, prohibition on competing in business of shippers and indicions reduction of transportation charges.

Labor and injunctions—Declares for injunction plank of 1896 and 1904 providing for trial by jury in cases

How to Preserve Linoleum.

Good linoleum is in its first cost an expensive kitchen floor covering, but it can be made to last practically a lifetime by the very simple device of giving it a coat of spar varnish every six months, at a cost of perhaps 30 cents for a room 10 by 12. Apply at night and it will be dry in the morning. An oilcloth or a linoleum so much worn that this treatment may not seem worth while can have its period of usefulness greatly extended by going over it with a flannel dipped in thin glue water. Before either application wash and thoroughly dry the floor covering.

How to Keep Baby's Milk Warm.

Cover a hot water bag with one of outing flannel in which there has been made a pocket about the size of the baby's bottle. When going to bed fill the bottle as usual and place it in the pocket. Then fill the water bag with hot water and put it at the bottom of the baby's crib, covering it with a blanket, says the Delineator. When the baby wakes for its bottle in the night the milk will be ready in an instant.

A Cruel Competition.

Under the capitalist system there are always more men than jobs. The men are in a cruel competition to see who shall work and who shall starve. They underbid each other, and by this means capitalism is able to keep wages low. The out of works form a sort of reserve labor army on which the capitalists can draw when in need of men or when they seek to give work to the lowest bidders.

WASHING OF EYES.

How to Bathe Them Properly With Lotions.

If more persons knew that the eyeballs need bathing quite as much as the body, no dressing stand would be without an eye cup and lotion for this purpose. In washing the eyes use a special glass that may be bought at any druggist's. This cup is shaped something like a wineglass, except that it is elongated instead of round and has a rim that slopes down in the middle to fit the eyes.

To use this little vessel fill it three-quarters full of whatever lotion or liquid is prescribed, then place it closely about the eye and throw back the head. In this position open and shut the eye, so that the ball is thoroughly bathed.

As to the lotion for the bath, an excellent and simple wash that will cleanse the ball and relieve a feverish or tired sensation is made by boiling and filtering half a pint of water and pouring into it while still warm one-half teaspoonful of refined borax and ten drops of spirits of camphor, says the Washington Star. Let this cool, then filter again through a piece of thin muslin.

The cup may be partly filled with this liquid morning and night and any time during the day when the eyes feel tired. It should be applied as previously directed and after using for a time will usually clear away the yellow scum so frequently seen on eyeballs and always so disfiguring. Before applying any lotion the eyes must always be carefully bathed in warm water.

For eyes that are weak a lotion wash recommended by English oculists is made in this way: One-half of an ounce of rock salt and one ounce of dry sulphate of zinc simmered in a perfectly clean, covered porcelain vessel with three pints of water until the ingredients are all dissolved. Strain through thick, clean muslin, add one ounce of rosewater and cork tightly. Use when the eyes feel weak. If the lotion smarts, add a little water. The eye cup should be kept perfectly clean.

If after simple home treatment the eyelids continue to show a yellowish appearance no time should be lost in consulting a physician, for something wrong with the system is indicated. Any inflammation of the eyes is likely to exhibit itself by secretion on the lids in the morning, and this condition should be checked before it leads into another more serious state.

After bathing with either of the lotions given the edges of the lids should be covered at night with a paste made of two and one-half centigrams each of oxide of zinc and subacetate of lead, twenty-five centigrams of oil of sweet almonds, three grains of white vaseline and three drops of tincture of benzoin.

It is well to have this compounded by a chemist, for should there be the least lump or grain it is apt to find its way into the eye and cause irritation. In making any lotion at home too much care cannot be given to filtering, and should the liquid become cloudy after a time it must be strained again to prevent causing irritation.

How to Renovate Old Furniture.

There are many ways of renovating old furniture, but one of the best methods is the alternate use of sandpaper and varnish. First remove every particle of dust, dirt and old cracked varnish from the piece of furniture to be treated, getting right down to the bare wood. To aid in this work a cabinet scraper or glass will be necessary and a bottle of wood alcohol to soften the varnish. After the varnish is removed sandpaper the wood to a smooth surface. At least four coats of finishing varnish will be required, and after each has become thoroughly dry rub lightly with fine sandpaper. After the last coat of varnish has dried for two days rub boiled linseed oil on the treated surfaces with a soft cloth.

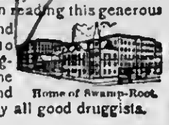
DO YOU GET UP WITH A LAME BACK?

Kidney Trouble Makes You Miserable

Almost everybody who reads the newspapers is sure to know of the wonderful cures made by Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It is the great medical triumph of the nineteenth century; discovered after years of scientific research by Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, and is wonderfully successful in promptly curing lame back, kidney, bladder, uric acid troubles and Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is not recommended for everything but if you have kidney, liver or bladder trouble it will be found just the remedy you need. It has been tested in so many ways, in hospital work, in private practice, among the helpless too poor to purchase relief and has proved so successful in every case that a special arrangement has been made by which all readers of this paper who have not already tried it, may have a sample bottle sent free by mail, also a book telling more about Swamp-Root and how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. The regular fifty cent and dollar sizes are sold by all good druggists.



Home of Swamp-Root.

Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

CHAPTER XV—Continued.

"You were listening at the keyhole that day last summer," broke in Horrigan, "the time I pulled the office door open, and"——

"Then and always," answered Thompson, "and," he added, his eyes returning to Wainwright's, "I copied every confidential telegram or letter you sent I took down in shorthand every private interview of yours. I tracked the checks that completed your deals, and when they came back from the vaults as vouchers I stole them. I've got proofs, I tell you—proofs—of every crooked transaction you have dabbled in for nine years. I've secured proofs of every step in this borough franchise bribery, and I've turned them all over to the mayor here. That evidence will send you to state prison! To state prison, I tell you! To a cell, with cropped hair and striped suit! I'll send you to prison, where you'll break your heart and be framed forever as a convict! And when your term is up I'll be waiting for you, and I'll kill you! Do you hear me, you foul criminal?" he shouted, screaming hysterically and foaming at the mouth in his abandonment of insane fury. "I'm going to kill you! To kill you!"

CHAPTER XVIII.

UNDER the maniac fury that blazed from Thompson's eyes Wainwright shrank back in panic dread.

"He's—he's mad!" cried the financier "Don't let him at me!"

For Thompson seemed about to hurl himself on his foe.

"Go easy, son," adjured Phelan, laying a restraining hand on the secretary's shoulder.

The latter, recalled to himself by the pressure, relaxed his tense, menacing attitude and, with hysterical revulsion of feeling, sank into a chair, burying his face in his arms on the table before him.

"Nine horrible years!" he sobbed brokenly. "Nine awful years of slavery, of debasement! Watching, hating, longing to crush him, and, oh, the time has come, thank God! Thank God!"

"You're all in, lad!" muttered Phelan, passing an arm about the shaking youth and lifting him to his feet. "Come with me. I'll send out and get you a bracer."

Thompson, exhausted by his emotions, obeyed mechanically, but at the further door paused for a moment and again fixed his wild, bloodshot eyes on Wainwright's haggard face.

"Remember," he threatened, his voice dead and expressionless, "when you get out of jail I'll be waiting for you. And as sure as God's justice lives I'll kill you as I'd kill a dog! Nine years waiting and—I'll murder you as you murdered my"—

Phelan had forced him over the threshold, and the slamming of the door behind the two seemed to break the strange spell that had fallen on all.

Wainwright straightened himself, glanced fearfully about, tried to regain his shaken composure and opened his mouth to speak. But the hurried entrance of Williams prevented him.

"Mr. Horrigan," gasped the excited newcomer, "I've been looking everywhere for you!"

"What's wrong now?" snapped the boss. "Has"—

"The Borough bill's come up at last, and"—

"The gallery crowd's rough housing the place? Thea"—

"No, they're quiet as death; too quiet. And they have long ropes, and they're stringing them over the"—

"Call in the police, then!" ordered Horrigan. "Now's the time for them."

"I don't dare," protested Williams. "Those men in the gallery are desperate. They're dangerous. If"—

"The police?" interrupted Bennett sharply. "What are you talking about?"

"My orders!" returned Horrigan. "I sent for them. Tell them to"—

"Don't do it!" commanded Bennett in anger.

"Do as I say, Williams!" countermanded Horrigan. "Have them in and"—

"Phelan," interposed Bennett as the alderman, having left Thompson in other hands, came into the room, "go to the sergeant in charge of the police Mr. Horrigan sent for. Tell him I say he must keep his men where they are and take no orders except from me. Understand?"

"I sure do!" grinned Phelan, with a delighted grin at the wrathful Horrigan. "An' I'll see they"—

"You need not trouble!" croaked Wainwright, his throat dry and constricted with fear. "The bill is withdrawn!"

"That goes!" corroborated Horrigan. "Do you hear that, Williams? Mr. Wainwright withdraws the Borough bill. Attend to it in a rush, man. Never mind about the police."

"Well, Friend Horrigan," blandly observed Phelan as Williams hastened out, "I told you I'd cross two flocks of dynamite under you some day. Likewise I done it."

"What had you to"—

"To do with smashin' you? Only that I put his honor on to the bill in the first place an' then sicked him on to Roberts an' discovered Thompson an' turned him over to Mr. Bennett. That's about all. But I guess it's enough to make your political career feel like it had a long line of carriages drivin' slow behind it. Chesty Dick, ay old chum!"

Horrigan had turned his back on his victorious tormentor and was facing the mayor.

"Bennett," said he, "you forget I've still got that report about your father, and"—

"Tomorrow's papers will publish it," supplemented Alwyn.

"No, they won't," contradicted Horrigan. "That would be bad politics. The report will hold over till"—

"You're mistaken," interrupted Bennett calmly. "I've sent a copy of that report today to every paper in the city and have accompanied it with a statement that I shall make good to the city treasury every penny overcharged in the library and aqueduct contracts. So"—

Horrigan was staring at him open mouthed.

"Bennett," he muttered in genuine wonderment, "I don't know whether you're the craziest fool or the cleverest politician in the state."

"Your honor," humbly pleaded Wainwright, who for several minutes had been trying in vain to draw Bennett aside for a private word, "I am an old man. Is there no way of—of showing me mercy in my"—

"Yes," retorted Alwyn. "You shall receive exactly the same mercy you have always shown to your own financial enemies—no more, no less."

"Oh, cut out the whine, Wainwright!" sneered Horrigan in high contempt as he flaked his arm in the broken financier's and hauled him roughly from the room. "What's happened to your nerve? You're almost as bad as Gibbs. You're still rich, and as long as you've got plenty of cash no law in America need ever bother you. There's lots of talk about indictments, and arrests, and investigations, and prosecutions, and all that sort of rot. But I don't see any millionaires going to jail. Come on across to my lawyer's."

The boss and financier departed without a backward look, leaving Phelan and Bennett alone on the late scene of battle.

"Say, your honor," observed the alderman slyly, "there's one very important engagement you've clean forgot. Sit right where you are a minute, an' I'll send the party in here and see that nobody butts in on you till you want 'em to. Oh, but we didn't do a thing to Horrigan! He'll have to watch which way his toes point to see whether he's goin' or comin'!"

The alderman spoil on his mission, leaving Alwyn seated alone, dejected, miserable, in the deserted committee room.

Now that the crisis was past, his heart was strangely heavy. He had won. But at what cost? At the loss of all he held dear.

Alwyn Bennett knew, too, that the real fight was but just begun—a fight that had waged since the world began and must last to judgment day—the hopeless, uphill battle of decency against evil, of honesty against graft.

Horrigan's sneering words, "I don't see any millionaires going to jail," stuck disagreeably in the young mayor's memory. Their brutal, half-truth jarred on his belief in the inevitable triumph of good. After all, was the dreary, self sacrificing battle against an unconquerable foe worth while? Could the great god graft ever be checked in his mastery of the earth? If—

"I love you!" she said.

A rustle of skirts startled Alwyn from his dark thoughts.

"Dallas!" he cried, unbelieving, as he sprang to his feet half dazzled at the wondrous light that transformed her face.

Slowly she came toward him, her glorious dark eyes on his, her white hands outstretched in irresistible appeal. At last she spoke.

"I love you!" she said.

THE END.

The Blizzard of 1888.

"I was living in O'Neill, Neb., at the time of the great blizzard in 1888," said a Nebraskan, "and had just left the office to go home for dinner when the blizzard struck. I started to cross the street to a drug store, but when I reached the other side I found myself halfway down the block from my destination. The blue wind driven snowflakes filled the air so that I couldn't see my hand before me. I finally worked my way back to the drug store, where a number of other men had taken refuge from the storm. School had just been dismissed for the noon recess, and we knew that nearly 300 children were out in the storm. Securing long ropes, the crowd started out to rescue them. We found them huddled in doorways and by the sides of buildings. The children caught told of the ropes and were led to shelter by their rescuers, whose sense of direction gradually returned to them. Every one of the 300 school children in the town was got home in safety. But seven schoolteachers were frozen to death in the country during the blizzard and thousands of cattle died. The thermometer fell from about the freezing point at noon to 20 degrees below zero that night. It was the worst blizzard I ever saw, and I never want to experience another like it."—Des Moines Register and Leader.

Compensation For Poachers.

A gamekeeper on a northern estate tells an amusing story of the latest thing in the compensation line. When he was escorting the gentlemen round the coverts one day the party were alarmed to hear a loud cry just after shots had been fired. Running to the spot, a thick bush growth, the keeper found a man lying groaning on the ground.

"Some of them gents 'ave shot me in the leg," groaned the man.

Examination proved that the sufferer had indeed received a bird shot pellet in his left calf. It was a trivial injury, but was handsomely compensated for by the gentlemen in the party, who presented the victim with quite a good sum in gold.

That same evening the gamekeeper came upon two men in a quiet lane engaged in a hot dispute about the sharing of some money. One of the men had a shotgun, and, tapping it significantly, he said threateningly: "'Alf shares, or I'll go straight to the police and split on us both. I'll give the game away. I'll tell 'ear 'ow I pat that pill in yer leg to knock money out o' the shooters."

Then the gamekeeper disclosed himself, and the two conspirators decamped.—London Opinion.

A MOTHER'S HELPER.

Girls Who Assist In the Small Household Duties.

Most of the little things that a girl can attend to are the tasks which her mother has in mind, but is too busy to carry out. She can see that the house plants are watered every day, and she can cut a blossom now and then for the table. She can plant a few pansy roots in one of her candy boxes, lined with oil paper, and set it on a small platter in the middle of the dining table for a centerpiece.

She can remove the spots that her mother is too busy to take out of the tablecloth between lunaderings by putting a few drops of hot or cold water, as the case may require, on them. She can keep a little parsley bed of her own, so that meats and vegetables can come to the table with a fresh garnish.

Keeping the rugs in the living room straight can be one of her tasks; also seeing that the window shades are all raised to the same height. When the furniture gets a slight scar she can rub it off with beeswax, a trick which keeps furniture fresh, but which her mother may not have time for.

She can see that the front door plate, the electric light switches and the doorknobs all over the house are kept polished. The smooches on mirrors can be rubbed off with a piece of crumpled tissue paper.

She can make a pretty wastebasket for the living room or any room that needs one out of strong cardboard covered with wall paper or chintz, and she can see that the younger children use it. Pieces of her cotton dresses she can make into covers for the sofa pillows which will be tossed about in the hammock and on the porch this summer.

Mothers and fathers like to see their daughters appear domestic in these days, when girls have so many outside interests, and any girl can charm her father by wearing a tiny white apron around the house. It needs be only a man's handkerchief with ribbon strings, but it will please her father and protect her dress. Wearing an apron is only one way of appearing freshly laundered and bright, which is the biggest part of being a real ornament to one's home.

HEALTH AND BEAUTY.

Warm salad oil will relieve earache.

Always try to pass at least one hour a day in the open air.

Never let a child or infant sleep in the room with a sick person.

Never use on the face a wash rag which is not scalded each day.

Do not think that scrubbing will injure your complexion, for it will not.

Cocoa butter will smooth the rough elbows, but it must be persistently used.

Quickly apply raw egg to a cut. It will allay the pain and quickly heal the wound.

If possible have children sleep in darkened rooms, as a light is bad both for eyes and nerves.

The Example of Birds.

Some birds are typical examples of human attributes. The dove symbolizes innocence, and the eagle represents majesty, but the robin redbreast teaches the best lesson of all, for he sings as joyously in the dark, dreary winter days, when the earth is frost bound and snow covered, as in pleasant summer days, when food is plentiful and life is merry. Thus in his humble way he teaches the lesson of patience and gratitude.—Home Notes.

THE COURIER has been for a long time in doubt as to whom it would support as its candidate before the Republican primaries for governor. It was in hopes that some strong man would enter the field upon whom all factions could unite, and who still would be in harmony with the progressive spirit which is abroad in the land.

An advocate and believer in the direct system of nominations, we desire that the nomination be made at the primary and not at the convention and while there are many things in the career of Mr. Earle that we admire and we believe, that with his persistency, that the time will come when he will yet be governor of Michigan, we don't believe that he can carry the primaries nor that he is the best man for the place at the present time.

The contest this summer is not so much one of men as one whether the primary law shall be amended to meet the well known wishes of the people of Michigan for an honest primary law, state wide in its scope for all parties and all offices by a majority vote.

However a candidate is before the people who has been tried and not found wanting, who has honestly tried to secure the enactment of a law such as is desired and has proven himself the equal of any governor Michigan ever had.

Believing that he represents the will of the people of Michigan on the most important question before them today, and has a record of good service behind him, the COURIER advocates the nomination of Governor Fred M. Warner.

How to Clean Ribbon Ties For Shoes.

The broad ribbon ties that are worn in low shoes are a matter of no small expense if a woman wants to have them always trim and neat looking, and one way to accomplish this without having to invest frequently in new ribbons is to launder them whenever they begin to look bedraggled. They should be stretched out on a flat surface and scrubbed with soap and a stiff brush until they are perfectly clean. Holding an end of the tie in each hand, stretch it tightly and allow the water to run over it until the soap is rinsed out. Then shake the ribbons well, put between two or three thicknesses of a towel and keep smooth until almost dry, when they may be hung up until entirely dry. Apart from freshening the ribbons the fact of taking them out of the shoes frequently makes them last longer, as it is not likely that they are put back in exactly the same way, and the strain on the ribbon from the eyelets does not thus come in the same places each time.

THE FARMER'S TASKS.

Machinery Has Made Them Lighter Than They Were For His Father.

The modern farmer wears a white collar and suspenders and store clothes. But the most remarkable development in agricultural evolution is his marvelous ingenuity displayed in the application of mechanical power to those tasks that were formerly performed by hand. Farm handicraft now consists of the ability, coupled with the inclination, which is seldom absent, to apply direct pressure to a button and allow the machine to do the rest. A visit to a well appointed western farm will convince the most skeptical that the vogue of brawn has passed, except in the field of mere football or perhaps wrestling contests.

On a recent visit to such a farm the caller was informed that the proprietor was in the barn cutting seed potatoes. He found that the seed potatoes were being cut all right, but the farmer was not stooping in the old time position, indicative of great bodily pain in the middle region, while lacerating the juicy spud with a jackknife.

A machine of formidable appearance was planted under a hopper full of potatoes. There was a great gnashing of teeth, and the sliced potatoes fell from the jaws in a continuous stream. The farmer dipped a handful of the cut potatoes from the bag and counted the damaged eyes to determine the percentage of loss and thus arrive at an estimate of the quantity of seed required to plant a given area. He said the computing machine was at the office and he hadn't time to go after it. But he seemed to have more time than anything in sight.

That part of the barn devoted to the live stock was occupied by several sleek cows, but the caller looked in vain for his boyhood enemy, long since forgiven—the familiar milking stool. The farmer called his attention to a machine that had just appeared as if by magic at an aperture in the wall. A carrier mounted on a cable stretched from the barn to the house had conveyed the machine to the cattle stalls. It had been to the sterilizing room to be scalded.

The farmer set the machine at the back of the first stall, attached the rubber hose to the profit producing part of the milk cow, depressed a plunger on top of the machine, and the siphon did the work automatically by forced feed. This process was repeated on every cow that seemed to give promise of yielding an unearned increment, and then the farmer looked satisfied. But the animals displayed no interest in the machine. The product of this machine had the peculiar creamy tint characteristic of farm grown milk, but when tested in a machine called a separator it assayed 65 per cent city milk, the remainder of the output being butter fat. The separator was planted in the sterilizing room, where every conceivable convenience for handling dairy products was installed.

All of these appliances were operated by a machine planted in an adjoining room and connected by belting with a line shaft. The people referred to this latter machine as the "power," but it was really a gasoline engine. It smelled powerfully.

The place was stocked with machinery specially designed for the performance of every function that the farmer formerly accomplished with his hands, except voting. The political machine is not much in favor in the rural precincts.

"I understand you have been telling Mrs. Nix a story," said the mother to her eight-year-old daughter.

"Yes, mamma; I did."

"But don't you know that is very naughty, my dear?"

"No, mamma; I don't think it was."

"But it is very naughty."

"But, mamma, she asked how old you were, and I know you didn't want me to tell her the truth!"—Exchange.

How to Remove Mildew.

Mildew may be removed by moistening the article in lemon juice and placing in the sun. As fast as it dries renew the lemon. If this is not effective, make a paste of soft soap, to which you have added one tablespoonful of powdered starch, the juice of a lemon and a little salt. Spread over the spot and place in the sunshine.

The Charlevoix ball club has been re-organized, L. P. Adams and D. F. Meech acting as managers, and promises good ball. At a practice game with the Inn team, Monday, the boys treated the game as a joke until the Inn team had eight runs on them, when they dug in and won by a score of ten to eight.

Have you seen our display of Model Garments made from The Ladies' Home Journal Patterns?

We are showing in our window this week an assortment of model dresses made from The Ladies' Home Journal Patterns.

These dresses, while simple and plain, are easily worth $5.00 to $10.00 each, yet each can be duplicated for less than half its value if you will make it yourself from pattern and material now on sale in our store.

If you have never made your own clothes now is a good time to try your hand. The Ladies' Home Journal Patterns are as simple as A-B-C, but if you are not sure just how to begin, come see these garments and make one up yourself.

Look at the garments carefully; ask the pattern saleswoman to show you the patterns from which they are made; then see and price the materials and figure for yourself just how much you can save or put it this way, see if you cannot buy material and make two, or perhaps three, dresses with the same money you would put into one ready-made.

And note this saving is not made by using inferior material, for the materials used in these garments are the very best of their kind, and include the following well-known lines:

Printed Organdies
Embroidered Dots
Red Seal Ginghams
Balsora Batistes
Galatea Cloths
Cotton Tussah
Suesine Silk
Linen Suitings
India Linons
Persian Lawns

NOTE—The garments on exhibition will be sold at cost of material and labor after display is over. If you would like one reserved leave your name at pattern counter.
